PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 99th CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, September 4, 1985

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

I will sing of Thy steadfast love, O Lord, for ever; with my mouth I will proclaim Thy faithfulness to all generations. For Thy steadfast love was established for ever, Thy faithfulness is firm as the heavens.—Psalm 89:1, 2.

We are grateful, O God, that Your love for us is from generation to generation and Your faithfulness is to the ends of the Earth. Protect us, we pray, from all adversaries and keep us always in Your gracious love. May Your mighty gifts protect, support, and heal Your people. That Your will may be done on Earth as it is in Heaven. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

WASHINGTON, DC,
August 12, 1985.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
The Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of the Certificate of Election received from the Honorable Myra McDaniel, Secretary of State, State of Texas, and the Honorable Mark White, Governor of Texas, indicating that the Honorable Jim Chapman was elected to the Office of Representative in Congress from the First District of Texas in the Special Election held on August 3, 1985.

With kind regards, I am,
Sincerely,

BENJAMIN J. GUTHRIE,
Clerk, House of Representatives.

THE STATE OF TEXAS

This is to certify, that at a special election held on August 3, 1985, Jim Chapman was duly elected U.S. Representative, District 1, unexpired term

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto signed my name and caused the Seal of State to be affixed at the City of Austin, this the 8th day of August A.D., 1985.

MARK WHITE,
Governor of Texas.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

WASHINGTON, DC,
August 2, 1985.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
The Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the permission granted in Clause 5, Rule III of the Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives, the Clerk received at 12:20 p.m. on Friday, August 2, 1985, the following messages from the Secretary of the Senate:

(1) That the Senate passed H.J. Res. 251; and

(2) That the Senate agreed to the Conference Report and agreed to a further amendment of the House to S. Con. Res. 32.

With kind regards, I am,
Sincerely,

BENJAMIN J. GUTHRIE,
Clerk, House of Representatives.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to rule 49, as a result of the adoption of the House and Senate of Senate Concurrent Resolution 32, as amended, the Chair announces that House Joint Resolution 372, increasing the statutory limit on the public debt, has been engrossed and is deemed to have been

NOTICE TO HOUSE MEMBERS

Beginning with the September 4, 1985 edition of the Congressional Record, and continuing through the end of the 1st session of the 99th Congress, a new rule will be implemented for the publication of the House proceedings. The new rule is being tested by the Joint Committee on Printing in response to the will of the House as expressed in the passage of H. Res. 230. That resolution, the "Accuracy in House Proceedings Resolution", recommended the elimination of the use of the "bullet" symbol that has heretofore indicated statements or insertions which were not spoken on the House floor. In place of the "bullet", such non-spoken matter will appear in a different typeface from spoken matter.

Members are urged to familiarize themselves with the Policy Guidelines that have been developed to implement the new rule. Copies of the Policy Guidelines and information regarding the intent of the change are available to Members from the Joint Committee on Printing, upon request.

By order of the Joint Committee on Printing.

FRANK ANNUNZIO, Vice Chairman.

passed by the House on August 1, 1985.

SWEARING IN OF THE HONORABLE JIM CHAPMAN OF TEXAS AS A MEMBER OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CHAPMAN] kindly step into the well of the House. He may be accompanied by the senior member of the Texas delegation, Mr. BROOKS, and the delegation.

It is our understanding that the distinguished Senator from Texas, Senator LLOYD BENTSEN, is here also.

Mr. CHAPMAN appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is now a Member of the Congress of the United States. Congratulations.

PRESENTATION OF NEW MEMBER FROM FIRST DISTRICT OF EAST TEXAS

(Mr. BROOKS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute).

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, we are all very pleased to have a new Democratic Member from the First District of Texas, and the people in deep, east Texas are honored to have a man of his stature and ability. I know that we in the Congress will enjoy his contributions to our legislative efforts.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CHAPMAN] is accompanied here by his wife and his daughter, and I think I speak in behalf of all of the Texas delegation when I say, and the Congress on both sides, that we welcome you here, and I want to point out the unusual welcome in that you are accompanied here today by the very distinguished and able senior Senator from Texas, LLOYD BENTSEN, who is here with you, and we are glad to have you. Congratulations.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Thank you, Mr. BROOKS.

RESPONSE BY NEW MEMBER OF FIRST CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF EAST TEXAS

(Mr. CHAPMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, Congressman BROOKS, to my colleagues now that are here gathered, to my dear friend, Senator BENTSEN, the ladies and gentlemen that are here, and particularly those who are on my right, so many good friends from east Texas, I am pleased to be here. I pledge to my colleagues, to the Members of this body and to my constituents hard work, and an honest effort to represent the First Congressional District of Texas and America in this body.

Thank you for your vote of confidence, and I look forward to being a part of this great institution. Mr. Speaker, thank you very much.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that pursuant to clause 4 of rule I, the Speaker pro tempore signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions on Tuesday, August 6, 1985:

H.R. 2068. An act to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for the Department of State, the U.S. Information Agency, the Board for International Broadcasting, and for other purposes.

H.R. 2370. An act to amend the Public Health Service Act to extend the programs of assistance for nurse education.

H.R. 2577. An act making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes.

H.R. 2908. An act to amend title XI of the Education Amendments of 1978, relating to Indian education programs.

H.J. Res. 251. Joint resolution to provide that a special gold medal honoring George Gershwin be presented to his sister, Frances Gershwin Godowsky, and a special gold medal honoring Ira Gershwin be presented to his widow, Leonore Gershwin, and to provide for the production of bronze duplicates of such medals for sale to the public.

S. 960. An act to authorize international development and security assistance programs and Peace Corps programs for fiscal years 1986 and 1987, and for other purposes.

S. 1147. An act to amend the orphan drug provisions of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act and related laws.

S.J. Res. 98. Joint resolution condemning the passage of Resolution 3379, in the U.N. General Assembly on November 10, 1975, and urging the U.S. Ambassador and U.S. delegation to take all appropriate actions necessary to erase this shameful resolution from the record of the United Nations.

S.J. Res. 137. Joint resolution to designate the week of December 15, 1985, through December 21, 1985, as "National Drunk and Drugged Driving Awareness Week", and

S.J. Res. 168. Joint resolution designating August 13, 1985, as "National Neighborhood Crime Watch Day."

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

WASHINGTON, DC,
September 4, 1985.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
The Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the permission granted in Clause 5, Rule III of the Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives, I have the honor to transmit sealed envelopes received from the White House as follows:

(1) At 4:00 p.m. on Thursday, August 8, 1985 and said to contain a message from the President and a copy of a publication on the Regulatory Program of the U.S. Government; and

(2) At 3:10 p.m. on Wednesday, August 28, 1985 and said to contain a message from the President on nonrubber footwear trade decision transmitted pursuant to 19 U.S.C. 2253(b)(2); and

(3) At 3:20 p.m. on Thursday, August 29, 1985 and said to contain a message from the President under the Federal Pay Comparability Act of 1970.

With kind regards, I am,

Sincerely,

BENJAMIN J. GUTHRIE,
Clerk, House of Representatives.
By W. RAYMOND COLLEY,
Deputy Clerk.

PUBLICATION OF REGULATORY PROGRAM OF THE U.S. GOVERNMENT—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Government Operations:

NONRUBBER FOOTWEAR TRADE DECISION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 99-100)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with Section 203(b)(2) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2253(b)(2)), I am writing to inform you of my decision today to direct the Secretary of Labor to develop a plan to utilize the Job Training and Partnership Act of 1982 to aid dislocated workers in the nonrubber footwear industry. At the request of the Senate Finance Committee, the United States International Trade Commission (ITC) instituted an investigation to determine whether increasing imports of domestic nonrubber footwear industry. The ITC found that nonrubber footwear imports are a substantial cause of serious injury, or threat thereof, to the domestic footwear industry.

While the escape clause provisions of the Trade Act of 1974 require the ITC to determine the question of whether a domestic industry has been seriously injured as a result of increased imports, I am charged with the responsibility of determining whether the provision of import relief to the domestic industry is in the national economic interest. After considering all relevant aspects of the case, including those set forth in Section 202(c) of the Trade Act of 1974, I have determined that granting import relief would not be in the national economic interest. I believe my decision today will promote our national economic interest by encouraging an open, nondiscriminatory and fair world economic system, a system in which jobs are created and prosperity grows through increased productivity and competitiveness in an open market. As my determination does not provide import relief to the industry, I am setting forth the reasons for my decision.

First, import relief would place a costly and unjustifiable burden on U.S. consumers and the U.S. economy. The Council of Economic Advisers estimates that the global quota remedy recommended by the ITC would create between 13,000 to 22,000 jobs with an average annual wage of $14,000. However, the cost to consumers to create these jobs would be $26,300 per job, amounting to a total consumer cost which could be as high as $2.9 billion over the next 5 years. Moreover, these jobs would not provide permanent employment and would be likely only to last during the 5-year relief period.

Second, import relief would result in serious damage to U.S. trade in two ways. If the ITC global remedy were imposed, U.S. trade would stand to suffer as much as $2.1 billion in trade damage either through compensatory tariff reductions or retaliatory actions by foreign suppliers. This would mean a loss of U.S. jobs and a reduction in U.S. exports. U.S. trade would also suffer because of the adverse impact import relief would have on major foreign suppliers, such as Brazil, who are heavily indebted and highly dependent on footwear exports. Import relief would lessen the ability of these foreign footwear suppliers to import goods from the United States and thus cause an additional decline in U.S. exports.

Third, I do not believe that providing relief in this case would promote industry adjustment to increased import competition. While imports of nonrubber footwear have increased rapidly over the last 12 months, I believe that the industry has been and is in the process of successfully adjusting to increased import competition. An industry that was once characterized by many small firms with limited manufacturing capability, has now emerged as an industry led by larger, more efficient producers who have invested in state of the art manufacturing equipment, diversified into profitable retail operations, and filled out their product lines with imports to respond to rapidly changing consumer taste.

In order to address the difficult problems faced by workers in the industry, I have directed the Secretary of Labor to work with State and local officials to develop a retraining and relocation assistance program specifically designed to aid workers in the nonrubber footwear industry. Appropriate programs of the Job Training Partnership Act are to be used to the fullest extent possible under U.S. law.

RONALD REAGAN.

DECISION ON PAY ADJUSTMENT FOR FEDERAL EMPLOYEES UNDER FEDERAL PAY COMPARABILITY ACT OF 1970—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 99-101)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

Under the Federal Pay Comparability Act of 1970, the President is required to make a decision each year on what, if any, pay adjustment should be provided for Federal employees under the General Schedule and the related statutory pay systems.

My pay advisors have reported to me that an increase in pay rates averaging 19.15 percent, to be effective in October 1985, would be required under existing procedures to raise Federal pay rates to comparability with private sector pay rates for the same levels of work. However, the law also empowers me to prepare and transmit to the Congress an alternative plan for the pay adjustment if I consider such an alternative plan appropriate because of "national emergency or economic conditions affecting the general welfare."

Accordingly, after reviewing the reports of my Pay Agent and the Advisory Committee on Federal Pay, and after considering the adverse effect that a 19.15 percent increase in Federal pay rates might have on our continuing national economic recovery, I have determined that economic conditions affecting the general welfare require the following alternative plan for this pay adjustment:

In accordance with section 5305(c)(1) of title 5, United States Code, the pay rates of the General Schedule and the related statutory pay schedules as adjusted by Section 1 of Executive Order No. 12496 of December 28, 1984, shall remain in effect without change.

Accompanying this report and made a part hereof are the pay schedules that will remain in effect under this alternative plan, including, as required by section 5382(c) of title 5, United States Code, the rates of basic pay for the Senior Executive Service.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 29, 1985.

PERMISSION TO MODIFY COMMITTEE AMENDMENT TO CONFORM TO FUNDING CEILINGS REPRESENTED BY SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 32

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment at the desk which was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on July 11, 1985, and which the rule, House Resolution 223, passed by the House on July 24 makes in order during the consideration of H.R. 10, be modified to conform to funding ceilings represented by Senate Concurrent Resolution 32, passed by the Congress August 1, 1985, setting forth the congressional budget for the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. CLINGER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do so only for purposes of permitting the chairman to explain the purpose of this unanimous-consent request.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLINGER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HOWARD. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, this request is to permit the change of authorized funding levels in the committee amendment to be offered later today to bring it into conformity with the congressional budget resolution passed August 1.

The committee amendment published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 22, 1985, reduced the funding levels authorized by the bill for fiscal year 1986 to those represented by the budget resolution as passed by the House. It was the only guidance we had at the time the amendment was printed in the RECORD.

We now have the budget resolution as passed, and would like to bring authorized levels of funding into conformity with it.

Mr. CLINGER. I thank the chairman.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON S. 1128, CLEAN WATER ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1985

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 1128) to amend the Clean Water Act, and for other purposes, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey? The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. ROE, ANDERSON, MINETA, OBERSTAR, EDGAR, TOWNS, SNYDER, HAMMERSCHMIDT, STANGELAND, and CLINGER;

And additional conferees as follows:

Mr. NOWAK, solely for sections 59 and 73 of the House amendment and modifications committed to conference; and

Mr. ROWLAND of Georgia, solely for sections 5; 16(b)(1)(b); 16(h)(3)(a); 24(e)(7); 26(b)(3); and 51(a)(2) of the House amendment and modifications committed to conference.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 281

Mr. REID. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my name be removed as a cosponsor of H.R. 281.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO EXEMPT STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES FROM COSTLY OVERTIME PAY REQUIREMENTS

(Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today that will exempt State and local government employees from overtime wage coverage under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 [FLSA] and will clarify the application of that act to volunteers. My bill is nearly identical to legislation introduced in the other body as S. 1570 by my good friend, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES]. Our bills address potentially costly fiscal problems of our local governments stemming from a February 19, 1985, ruling by the U.S. Supreme Court. The Court's decision in Garcia versus San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority extended the FLSA to nearly all State and local government employees.

The Garcia decision requires that State and local governments pay their employees overtime for any hours worked over 40 per week, except police and firefighters, who may work longer before accruing overtime.

Prior to the Court's ruling, employees frequently took compensatory time off in lieu of overtime pay. This arrangement was satisfactory to many employees, reflected the seasonal nature of several local jobs, and greatly aided financially strapped local governments.

The overtime pay mandate of the Garcia decision now threatens local governments and our citizens with tax increases, reduced services, and even layoffs.

My bill will fend off the adverse consequences of this unwarranted Federal intrusion by allowing more flexible "comp time" arrangements in lieu of overtime pay.

It also would allow volunteer workers to be paid incidental expenses without jeopardizing their volunteer status.

My legislation would not repeal those provisions of the FLSA regarding minimum wage standards and protection against exploitative child labor practices. The effective date of this bill would be retroactive to February 19, 1985, the date of the Court's decision.

Please join me in restoring the prerogatives of States and local governments to manage their own affairs by cosponsoring this urgently-needed legislation.

The text of my bill follows:

H.R. —

A bill to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to exempt from the overtime requirements of that Act employees of States and local public agencies and to clarify the application of that Act to volunteers

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. OVERTIME REQUIREMENT.

(a) AMENDMENT.—Section 13(b) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 213(b)) is amended by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (29) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or" and by adding after that paragraph the following:

"(30) any employee of a public agency that is a State, a political subdivision of a State, or an interstate governmental agency.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall take effect with respect to workweeks beginning after February 19, 1985.

SEC. 2. VOLUNTEERS.

Section 3(e) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 203(e)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "paragraphs (2) and (3)" in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "paragraphs (2), (3), and (4)", and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(4) The term 'employee' does not include any individual who volunteers to perform services for a public agency that is a State, a political subdivision of a State, or an interstate governmental agency and volunteers to perform such services without compensation or for expenses or a nominal fee.".

SEC. 3. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

(a) SECTION 7.—Subsection (k) of section 7 of such Act (29 U.S.C. 207(k)) is repealed.

(b) SECTION 13.—Paragraph (20) of section 13(b) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 213(b)(20)) is repealed.

A WELCOME TO THE HONORABLE JIM CHAPMAN AS A MEMBER OF THE HOUSE

(Mr. LELAND asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to welcome all of my colleagues back. It is good to be back in the midst of all of them so we can engage ourselves in our very arduous work ahead of us.

Let me take a few minutes to just say that a few months ago we lost one of our great Members of the U.S. Congress to the Federal judiciary. I was happy for Sam Hall when he took his assignment, but I was also concerned that the residents of the First Congressional District of Texas would continue to receive effective leadership. Well, today I am proud to stand here in the People's House and state that a certain young man from Sulphur Springs, TX has allayed my concern for the welfare of the people in the First Congressional District.

As chairman of the Texas Democratic delegation, it is with great pleasure that I welcome the newest Member of the U.S. Congress and, of course, of the Democratic delegation, Congressman JIM CHAPMAN. I am impressed with JIM because he chose to make the personal sacrifice to serve the people of the First Congressional District as their Representative in Washington. Yet no one should be surprised that he would undertake the task to serve the people. JIM was a public servant long before he came to Washington.

As of today, JIM CHAPMAN will represent a congressional district with one of the most colorful histories in the U.S. Congress. The First District was represented for many years by the Honorable Wright Patman and most recently, of course, by Sam Hall. I am confident that before JIM CHAPMAN leaves this House, he will have a few pages of history to write on his own.

AMERICA'S No. 1 PROBLEM—DEFICITS

(Mr. GUNDERSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, Mr. President, let me say to my colleagues that the word from the people of western Wisconsin, after a 75-city tour during the past month, is deficit, deficit, deficit—the budget deficit, the trade deficit, and farm-income deficit. And they plead with all of us to set aside our partisanship and our ideology and respond to the needs facing this country with these deficits at the present time.

It did not take the weekend following the passage of that budget resolution for the American people to recognize that it was an inadequate response to the national debt. Even in a rural district such as mine they are absolutely alarmed at the staggering trade deficit facing this country and continuing to grow. And let me tell the Members that the present farm-income deficit is causing the removal and the destruction of the family farm across the country.

Deficit, deficit, deficit—budget deficit, trade deficit, farm-income deficit. Our work is cut out for us in the next few months.

HURRICANE ELENA

(Mr. MONTGOMERY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, as you know, Hurricane Elena slammed into the Mississippi gulf coast on Labor Day, bringing winds in excess of 120 miles an hour.

The home of our colleague and minority whip, TRENT LOTT, sustained some damage in the hurricane. The veterans hospital in Gulfport reports $1 to $2 million in damage, and hundreds of homes and businesses were destroyed. It is certain that property damage costs will run into the hundreds of millions, but we can all be thankful that no one was killed in Mississippi but there were some deaths in Florida.

This storm proved that even with the best equipment, we cannot predict where a hurricane will hit. But the storm watchers and volunteers who manned the shelters and evacuation operations deserve praise. Their work surely helped save people.

Mississippi gulf coast residents survived Camille in 1969 and Frederic in 1979. If I know my fellow Mississippians, I can say with confidence that they will bounce back from this hurricane and those Federal Government agencies certainly help.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO CORRECT BUDGETARY PROBLEMS STEMMING FROM GARCIA DECISION

(Mr. DAUB asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to extend his remarks.)

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation in response to the Supreme Court's decision in Garcia versus San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority—a decision that subjects employees of State and local governments to the Fair Labor Standards Act [FLSA].

The National League of Cities and the International City Managers' Association estimate that compliance with Garcia will cost $1 billion for this coming year. For fire-protection service alone, the city of Omaha, NE, projects the additional cost of overtime will be $370,000 for the coming year.

Flexible and innovative employment practices, many of which are negotiated between local governments and municipal workers' unions, will no longer be possible under this court decision. The Garcia decision has also created problems with regard to individuals providing voluntary services to State and local governments.

The legislation that I have introduced will rectify these impending effects but still preserve important minimum-wage standards. My bill will exempt State and local governments from the overtime provisions of FSLA retroactive to February 19 and will also exempt individuals providing volunteer services to State and local governments from the minimum wage and overtime provisions of the FSLA.

Mr. Speaker, I circulated a "Dear Colleague" letter on August 27 and would appreciate Members' attention.

GOP IN DISARRAY, DEMOCRATS GAIN IN AUGUST

(Mr. COELHO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, the President said yesterday, "we're in power," meaning the Republicans. I'm glad he finally admitted that after 4½ years—maybe he realizes that this fall is the Republicans' last opportunity to face reality before the Democrats step in and pick up the pieces.

In any event, it was a great August for the Democrats: JIM CHAPMAN defeated the national GOP machine and won a key House race. The Senate Republicans suffered a key retirement, and their control looks even more temporary. And the grassroots Democrats slammed an open door in the Republican National Committee's face.

Contrast this with President Reagan's warning yesterday to fellow Republicans to toe the line or else.

Why such disarray in the GOP? Because events now clearly control the White House agenda, not the other way around anymore, as their mismanagement of the economy and 1984 happy talk campaign have finally caught up with them.

Take any issue: Agriculture, trade, the national debt, and more, the situation is getting worse, and the Republicans don't have a policy to deal with any of them.

THE DEATH PENALTY FOR TREASON AND ESPIONAGE

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, now we have the tragic stories of espionage and treason and betrayal coming out of West Germany to add to the stories that we have learned about American disloyalty in the Walker conspiracies. It is time for this Congress to act and to act responsibly to restore to the laws of the Nation a death penalty to apply for treason and espionage.

We have talked about this, and we have taken action bit by bit, but there is lodged in the Judiciary Committee a comprehensive death-penalty bill that will apply to this kind of betrayal. I urge the chairman of the Subcommittee on Criminal Justice on which I serve in that Committee on the Judiciary to take action and will consult with him in order to bring that up to the floor.

But in the meantime I urge my colleagues to sign Discharge Resolution No. 2 to add pressure on that momentum so that we can act responsibly and bring about this much-needed deterrent to betrayal of our country.

NEW YORK TIMES CRITICIZED FOR FIRING COLUMNIST

(Mr. FRANK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I was exteremely disappointed by the action of the people who run the New York Times when they fired a columnist named Sydney Schanberg because he had been controversial, outspoken, and on occasion willing to criticize the New York Times itself. I have generally been supportive of the major media institutions in this country when they fought for the right for free and open and untrammeled debate, and obvioulsy they have the right as the owners of that paper to run it as they wish. But I am disappointed in their unwillingness to commit themselves internally to the kind of standards of free and open debate that they understandably argue for publicly.

The New York Times ought to be ashamed of itself for that act of self-censorship, and I hope they will reconsider what they have done.

THE BUDGET: IT'S A PHONY

(Mr. PORTER asked and was givern permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, let me be very blunt.

That budget resolution we passed 5 weeks ago is a sham. It's a phony. We have the audacity to tell the American people that we cut $55 billion from the deficit. You know, I know, all the Members of both Houses know this so-called compromise pales next to the $56 billion in cuts the Senate budget originally proposed. Those were honest numbers. Ours aren't.

Sure, some numbers were concocted to make it sound good. Sure, some token cuts were made. Amtrak cut 15 percent. EDA cut 20 percent. But if we can't muster the nerve to entirely eliminate EDA, we'll never eliminate any program from the budget. We cut farm programs barely half as much as the Senate proposed, and no one thinks even these modest cuts will actually occur.

And, yes, a nice increase for defense—camouflaged by low outlay estimates, which are not binding. And yet another Social Security increase at a time even we can't afford it.

All of this is worse than phony. It's not fair. Not fair to our children. Throughout their lifetimes, they'll be footing the bill for this folly.

ASAT TEST

(Mr. BROWN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of my colleagues to the fact that the President has authorized the testing of an antisatellite weapon against an object in space, which test may take place at any time, perhaps even as we speak. In accordance with provisions of existing law, the President has certified that he is negotiating in good faith with the Soviet Union for an ASAT arms control treaty, that the test is essential to the security of the United States, that it will not do irreparable harm to the prospects for an arms control treaty for space weapons, and that it does not violate the ABM or other arms control treaties. He made this certification on August 20, 1985, while the Congress was in recess, and the required 15 days waiting time expires today, September 4, 1985, while the Congress is still unable to take any action.

The certification made by the President can only be described as fiction, devoid of any resemblance to reality. We could probably have expected something of this sort, since most of the President's policies seem to originate in fantasyland. However, this action constitutes the most bare-faced definance of a specific congressional mandate I have experienced during my tenure in the Congress. I presume that the President takes the position that while he is required to make a certification, there is no requirement that the certification be true, and no congressional sanction for a false certification.

Mr. Speaker, I propose to take additional time in a special order today to discuss the action of the President in more detail. I invite other Members concerned about arms control to join with me, as well as those Members supporting the President on ASAT testing and deployment, so that they may correct any errors or excess of language which may inadvertently enter my remarks.

COURTS FAIL IN THEIR RESPONSIBILITY TO PUNISH VIOLATORS OF LAWS ON HIGH-TECHNOLOGY DIVERSION

(Mr. ROTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, it never stops—that is, the diversion of high technology. Whenever you open the paper, for example, in August, you see that an illegal exporter gets a suspended sentence or a high-tech exporter gets a reduced jail term.

We in this body spent endless hours to enact legislation designed to prevent the diversion of high technology. We stiffened the penalties, we increased surveillance, but all to no avail if the courts will allow the violators to violate our laws and do this with impunity.

The judges, in my opinion, are totally irresponsible in carrying out their obligations to enforce the laws that this Congress passed, and in my opinion the judges bear an onus for the additional defense spending that is required to insure that the capabilities that are obtained by the Soviets because of the diversion are countered by us, and I think they have to share much of the blame for the high defense spending that takes place many times when they do not enforce the laws that we pass against diversion of high technology here in this body.

THE PEOPLE SEE JOBS, NOT TAX REFORM, AS NO. 1 ISSUE

(Mr. ROEMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, I spent the month of August back in my district in Louisiana listening to and talking to people about what was on their minds. Let me give the Members a quick 1-minute report.

They ask of the Congress three things. First they ask us to do something about the deficit. They figured out that a $200 billion deficit leads to an overvalued dollar and high real interest rates. It is costing them jobs, and jobs are on their minds. They say that we can start with defense. Surely we can defend America with $292 billion.

Second, they talk about the trade deficit and jobs. In the 1 hour that we will spend today doing 1-minute speeches, we will lose 400 manufacturing jobs overseas while the President spouts slogans on free trade and we just spout. My district said that America is Uncle Sam, not Uncle Sucker. Lead, Mr. President, or get out of the way.

Finally, in last place they put tax reform. They are all for it, but they said the President's plan is not simple, not fair, and they ask the question: What does the President's plan do for jobs? Is this another contemporaneous recordkeeping ploy?

Mr. Speaker, tax reform is not the issue. Jobs is. A bill uncertain on employment, a bill adding to the deficit is death to jobs, and it ought to be dead in the House. The tax bill needs to be improved or removed.

REMOVAL OF SOVIET CITIZENS FROM JOBS IN AMERICAN EMBASSIES

(Mr. COURTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, the State Department employs about 200 Soviet citizens in our two diplomatic missions, some in our Embassy in Moscow and some in our consulate in Leningrad. Last May the House of Representatives passed an amendment proffered by myself which would have prohibited the further hiring of Soviet personnel in our Embassies because of the security problems they have caused in the past. Some of our typewriters, as a matter of fact, were bugged.

In view of the fact that we have been reading about the "spy dust" imbroglio whereby a possible carcinogenic agent was placed on our mission personnel there so their whereabouts and who they met could be traced by the Soviet Union, it becomes that much more important to make sure that Soviet personnel do not have access inside our Embassy. Because the conference report watered down the House amendment making this voluntary, I will be introducing this week a bill which requires that the State Department remove Soviet personnel from our Embassy, and I urge my colleagues to cosponsor the legislation.

WESTERN KENTUCKIANS SAY NO TO INDIVIDUAL TAX RAISES

(Mr. HUBBARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, as we welcome today the new Member of Congress form the First District of Texas, I take this 1 minute to comment that in the First District of Kentucky, which I'm privileged to represent, the people are very much aware of the issues before this 99th Congress.

During the recess I kept listening to my constituents.

Yes, they mentioned economic sanctions for South Africa.

Yes, they are anxious about the 1985 farm bill.

They are concerned about Federal deficit spending and trade deficits.

However, the single most talked about issue by western Kentuckians during the August recess involved our present income tax system. They were dismayed at the thought of having to individually pay higher taxes, while many big corporations pay no taxes at all.

Only last week major U.S. newspapers published stories with headlines such as "No U.S. Income Taxes Were Paid in '84 By 40 Big, Profitable Firms, Study says" and "50 Major Firms Paid No Income Tax '81-'84."

I am finding it increasingly difficult to explain to my constituents why the Federal Government continues to tolerate this inequitable situation. It is unfair to ask individuals to pay higher taxes, while allowing big corporations to pay no taxes at all or, indeed, to receive huge tax refunds and credits.

THE 40TH ANNIVERSARY OF END OF WORLD WAR II

(Mr. DORNAN of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, sometimes the anniversaries of great events in world history and U.S. history pass when we are on one of our district breaks. The 40th anniversary of the end of the greatest killing in all history, World War II just passed. Those anniversaries were celebrated while we were on our break and we did not have the advantage of those of us who are the elected Representatives of the people to comment upon that great moment in history. The 40th anniversary is important because that is when most of the survivors are still alive to look back with some historical perspective.

I have not yet recovered from the disgusting, obnoxious, television coverage of the fall of Saigon last April on the 10th anniversary, but I certainly was not ready for the 40th anniversary, including one Congressman of this House, on Hiroshima and Nagasaki, expressing shame about the end of World War II and using atomic weapons.

I would recommend to that distinguished Member that he reread, as I did, "Death March," the story of Bataan and what happened to over 60 percent of our prisoners of war in the Pacific Theater, the torture and death that they went through. Only a handful of Americans, several hundred of our POW's in Hanoi, including a distinguished Member of this body, have ever suffered as much as the men taken prisoner in the Pacific. Only 1 percent of our POW's died in Nazi Germany in spite of all the horror of the concentration camps against civilians, but over 60 percent of our men died in the Pacific.

Read this book and you will never again express shame or whimper about the end of the Second World War, using atomic weapons.

HOPE FOR THE FUTURE OF PAKISTAN

(Mr. TORRICELLI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, several months ago a young bright woman came to visit me in my office and she talked about her hopes for the future of her country. She spoke about her deeply felt desire that freedom return to the land of her birth. Her name was Benazir Bhutto and the country of her birth is Pakistan.

Several days ago she was rewarded for her beliefs in democracy and liberty for her country by being placed under house arrest. Despite the death of her father by the Zia government, Miss Bhutto spoke not a word in retribution. Despite 8 years of military rule by the Zia government, she spoke of peaceful change. Indeed, shortly before her arrest she told her supporters that the government must have a chance to live up to its promise to end martial law and restore constitutional civilian rule.

Her sole crime, Mr. Speaker, was her popularity. Let the Zia government understand today that Miss Bhutto has friends in America, as she has popular support in Pakistan.

Let him understand as well that we are watching that she is safe and secure and let that Government understand that as we have extended the hand of friendship, so, too, it can be withdrawn.

SOUL OF AMERICA AT STAKE

(Mrs. BENTLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, the President's decision not to support the ITC finding that the American shoe industry should be protected against a flood of foreign imports highlights a growing problem of constitutional separation of powers.

The Constitution grants to the Congress the power over "interstate and foreign commerce"—a power which over the last 20 years has been given over by this body to the executive branch in a series of trade laws.

The distinguished chairman of the Commerce, Science, and Transportation Committee of the Senate suggested this past weekend that it is time for the Congress to take back some of the power it has ceded away. I think he is right.

Weekly we hear of yet another industry being destroyed by rising imports—petrochemicals being the newest to be added to the list which ranges from the smallest ball bearings and shoes to automobiles and trucks. What is at stake here is not an ideal of free trade in a perfect world, what is at stake right now is the very soul of America—our industrial base.

As Members of Congress we are sworn to uphold the Constitution. If we are charged by that document with the responsibility for interstate and foreign commerce, then I think we are bound to go about our duty to take back that responsibility.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE HONORABLE CHARLES W. SANDMAN, JR.

(Mr. HUGHES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, regretfully I rise today to note in the RECORD the great loss of a friend, and a distinguished fomer Member of Congress, the Honorable Charles W. Sandman, Jr.

"Charlie," as he was affectionately known to his many friends and supporters in southern New Jersey, died on August 26 after suffering a stroke at his home in Cape May County.

His passing has left a void in the hearts of those who knew, respected, and loved this fine man.

Charlie Sandman was a devoted public servant, who served in the State legislature for 10 years, the U.S. House of Representatives for 8 years, and most recently was chief judge of the Cape May County Family Court.

While he was perhaps best known for his impassioned defense of President Nixon during the impeachment hearings in 1974, Charlie's record of accomplishments goes well beyond that one moment in history, when he was called upon to cast one of the most difficult votes to ever confront a Member of Congress.

In fact, he was a tireless worker who loved his country, his community, and his family. He dedicated himself for more than two decades to improving the quality of life for the people he served.

Charlie Sandman is survived by his wife Marion and his six children: daughters Carol and Marion, and sons William, Robert, Charles, and Richard. I wish to extend my deepest sympathy toward the entire Sandman family. Charlie was a remarkable man, and we will all miss him greatly.

PRAISE FOR PAKISTAN'S HUMANITARIAN EFFORTS

(Mr. McCOLLUM asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I recently had occasion to visit the country of Pakistan as part of my duties as a member of the Subcommittee on Immigration and Refugees and the Subcommittee on Crime of the Judiciary Committee. I would like to take this opportunity to commend the Government of Pakistan on their outstanding humanitarian efforts in providing for the almost 3 million refugees from Afghanistan who have flooded their country, and their program to eliminate poppy cultivation in Pakistan.

The Government of Pakistan has done a remarkable job in caring for and supporting the largest refugee population in the world. One-fifth of the entire Afghan population now is residing in 308 refugee camps inside Pakistan. The refugees in Pakistan are about one-third of the total number of refugees in the world from all countries.

Support of the refugees costs over $1 million a day of which the Government of Pakistan pays about half. Obviously, the drain on their budget and GNP have been enormous. In addition, 3 million sheep and goats have come with the Afghan refugees which have created added pressure on the water and pastures of the country.

The Government of Pakistan has also made great strides in eliminating one of the world's major sources of heroin by taking major steps to reduce poppy cultivation. The number of acres of poppies in Pakistan which have been a primary source of opium and heroin have been dramatically reduced since 1980. In addition, Pakistan is proceeding with a beefed-up, tough program against narcotics trafficking.

The Government of Pakistan deserves recognition and praise for these heroic efforts.

BRING BEN WEIR AND THE OTHER HOSTAGES HOME

(Mr. MINETA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, as we return from our district work period, a great many problems and challenges are before us. I hope that as we confront these issues, we do not forget the seven Americans who are still held hostage in Lebanon.

For the families of these hostages, the days, weeks, and months of waiting go on. Can any of us begin to imagine the pain, the agony, and the loneliness of their solitary vigil waiting for news of their loved ones?

We must not let this human drama go on without our attention and help. We must not let this problem slip out of our minds, and we must insist that this administration do everything in its power to bring these hostages home, and bring them home soon.

Rev. Ben Weir, whose family lives in my district, has been held for more than 1 year. That is too long. Bring Ben Weir and the others home.

STATEMENT ON SEMYONOV HUNGER STRIKE

(Mr. HOYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, two blocks from the Soviet Embassy, I met and talked with Alexei Semyonov, stepson of Nobel Peace Prize Laureate Andrei Sakharov and son of Elena Bonner. Five days ago, he began a hunger strike to protest Soviet mistreatment of his parents from whom he has not heard in more than 4 months. Dr. Sakharov, a champion of intellectual freedom, has been in internal exile in the closed city of Gorky since 1980. His wife was sentenced to exile in 1984. Such exile is to live as those already dead.

As cochairman of the U.S. Helsinki Commission, I join in the eloquent remarks of Secretary of State Shultz, who, at the recent 10th anniversary of the Helsinki accords, characterized Sakharov as "the man who, more than any other, represents the ideals enshrined in the Final Act."

The freedoms Dr. Sakharov and Elena Bonner extol are those which are guaranteed by the Helsinki Final Act. Their plight is not an isolated example. It epitomizes the Soviet Union's disregard for the human freedoms and moral standards which guide relations among the states set forth at Helsinki.

If the leaders of the Soviet Union truly wish to improve the atmosphere for the November summit in Geneva, then let them observe the human rights accords they signed 10 years ago and permit the International Red Cross to visit and report on the Sakharovs' condition. In addition, I urge you to join me in requesting the Soviet leaders, as a confidence-building measure, to release Andrei Sakharov and Elena Bonner before the November summit.

VOTE FOR H.R. 1460, ANTI-APARTHEID ACT OF 1985

(Mr. FAUNTROY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, now that we're back from recess, one of the first orders of business Congress must take up is to complete passage of H.R. 1460, the Anti-Apartheid Act of 1985.

While we have spent much of this year debating whether economic sanctions should be imposed by the United States against South Africa, it is clear that the apartheid regime has done more to destroy its own economy than any sanctions we have contemplated to date.

Perhaps now, in the wake of a rapidly deteriorating situation in South Africa, we can send a decisive message to that government and halt its blind march to tragedy, bloodshed, and violence and spark a serious attempt at national reconciliation and dialog with all of the people.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Domestic Monetary Policy of the Banking Committee, I have written to Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul Volcker and to certain American financial institutions encouraging them to give serious thought before extending credit or refinancing debt for South Africa, unless new political dispensation and negotiations with all groups in South Africa occurs.

It seems to me that now is the time for all people of conscience to join together and urge the Senate of the United States to vote favorably on the House/Senate conference report on H.R. 1460, and for all of us in the Congress to be prepared to override a veto which our President may use in defense of South Africa's President Botha, and the dying apartheid regime.

COMMUNICATION FROM CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services:

COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES,
Washington, DC, August 21, 1985.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL,
The Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to notify you pursuant to Rule L(50) of the rules of the House that Warren Nelson of the Committee staff has been served with a subpoena duces tecum issued by the United States Claims Court. In consultation with the General Counsel to the Clerk of the House, I will make the required determinations and will notify you of those determinations.

Sincerely,

LES ASPIN, Chairman.

NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 223 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 10.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 10) to amend the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965 and the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965, with Mr. HOYER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Under the rule, the gentleman from New York [Mr. NOWAK] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. NOWAK].

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the chairman of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to express my strong commitment to and support for H.R. 10. This bill provides a vastly improved legislative vehicle for the Federal Government to invest in our Nation's most economically distressed communities.

The National Development Investment Act, title I of H.R. 10, amends the existing Public Works and Economic Development Act and completely revises the approach for providing assistance to encourage economic diversification, adjustment and development in regional and subregional areas.

Title II of H.R. 10 extends the Appalachian Regional Development Act by authorizing the finish-up program endorsed by the Appalachian Governors and under which the Commission has been operating since 1982.

For the third time, this legislation comes before the House. In the 97th Congress, H.R. 6100 passed overwhelmingly by a vote of 281 to 95; in the 98th Congress, H.R. 10 passed 306 to 113. The bill before us today has been cosponsored by 173 Members and has strong bipartisan support.

This is a pretty good indication that a majority of present and former Members of the House know firsthand the benefits that have been derived in their own areas from successful economic development programs and realize the value of these regional and subregional programs to our overall national economy.

In many years of experience with regional and local economies, we have clearly seen that policies which address economic problems solely at the national level have not sufficiently helped many of our Nation's economically distressed areas. Despite periods of national economic expansion, many areas are bypassed for any number of reasons. There is a continuing urgency to retain targeted economic programs to help as many as possible of our most distressed areas. A strong national economy depends on self-sufficient and productive local and regional economies, economies that have some stability yet sufficient flexibility to weather the technological and structural changes which accompany and facilitate national growth.

The drafting and refining of this legislation has involved extensive oversight and legislative hearings, an in-depth evaluation of existing economic development programs and many long hours of hard work over a period of several years. A number of people have had a role in shaping this bill, however, at this time I want to commend and express special thanks and appreciation:

To HENRY NOWAK, chairman and long-time member of our Subcommittee on Economic Development, who has guided the bill through committee and to the floor in this Congress, and who has worked hard to garner support to continue financing the existing programs until we can enact H.R. 10.

To JIM OBERSTAR, whose dedicated leadership of the subcommittee in the 97th and 98th Congresses was so instrumental in bringing about this carefully constructed economic development initiative;

To BILL CLINGER, ranking minority member of the subcommittee, whose contributions to the legislation and whose bipartisan support and effort helped make the bill possible; and

To GENE SNYDER, ranking member of the Public Works and Transportation Committee for his cooperation in reporting this bill out of committee with a unanimous vote.

I want to take this opportunity also to give special thanks to the members of the Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee, especially to Chairman ST GERMAIN and to Chairman LAFALCE of the Economic Stabilization Subcommittee, for their fine work in amending the legislation in the last Congress and for their support in moving this bill forward.

The National Development Investment Act provides for up to 50 percent Federal grants for construction, repair, rehabilitation, and improvement of public facilities; for locally administered revolving loan funds to assist small business, retain existing business, and for projects that will promote development and create jobs; and for planning, assistance with preparation of development investment strategies, and technical assistance.

There is a new focus in this legislation not found in existing law. It emphasizes a local leadership role, more private sector involvement, and intergovernmental cooperation and coordination. It encourages long-range investment in mutually supporting projects and activity that will harness existing resources and build on a sound economic basis.

It limits eligibility to areas with an unemployment rate of 1 percent or more over the national level for the previous 2 years or with a per capita income of 80 percent or less of the national average, and targets funds to areas of need and where there is the greatest potential for success and self-sufficiency. It retains eligibility for areas where a major employer has closed or is about to close, which would result in a sudden and severe economic dislocation.

The long-term designation for eligibility, as in current law, is eliminated. Now, an applicant must demonstrate distress, using most recent data, with each application.

It sets a limit of $2 million for a grant in any fiscal year to an applicant to implement a development investment strategy and limits to $1 million, a revolving loan grant. This is to provide a wider distribution of limited Federal funds, to avoid giving one area unfair advantage over another, and to promote a balance of economic development programs in both urban and rural areas.

Title II of H.R. 10 provides for continuation of construction of the remaining 380 miles included in the finish up program for the Appalachian highway system and for the gradual completion, rather than abrupt termination, of the area development projects in progress or ready to go. We cannot turn our backs on the Appalachian region at this point in time without seriously jeopardizing much of the value of the large investments made to date. This would drastically impair the region's efforts and opportunities to move closer to national averages for employment and income and overall standard of living, and would be a waste of both the region's and the Nation's resources.

This bill is a realistic approach for developing long-term economic strategies and addressing regional and local disparities. It retains a measure of Federal help by providing seed capital to stimulate and encourage areas undergoing severe economic shock to tackle their own unique problems, but it calls for States, local communities, and the private sector to assume a greater share of the planning, implementing, and financing to achieve these goals.

The bill also reduces the authorizations for both titles to levels appropriate to our national fiscal problems and reflects the deep concern of us all about the size of our Federal deficit.

I urge passage of H.R. 10.

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Chairman, I will yield myself such time as I may consume.

It is a great pleasure for me, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Economic Development, to join with my colleagues—Mr. SNYDER, Mr. CLINGER, Mr. OBERSTAR, and Chairman HOWARD—in bringing H.R. 10 to the floor.

This bill is intended to provide badly needed assistance to our Nation's most severely distressed areas in their efforts to solve their own economic problems, promote economic growth and diversification, create or retain permanent jobs in the private sector, and move closer to the Nation's economic mainstream.

H.R. 10 completely revises the programs provided by the Public Works and Economic Development Act and extends the Appalachian Regional Development Act. Title I, the revision of the Economic Development Act, draws upon the positive elements of past economic development activities, yet it provides a new look for a private/public partnership to address the needs of the 1980's. At the same time, it responds to the criticisms of existing programs.

This bill follows the guiding principle that economic development should be initiated at the local level. The bill retains a grant program providing 50 percent Federal grants to States, economic development districts, Indians and local governments, to construct public facilities and improve the basic infrastructure necessary to support development. It also retains grants for business development loans. However, the funds will now go to communities to establish and administer their own revolving loans funds to aid small business with startup capital and expand existing operations to create jobs. Funding is also available for economic development planning, including preparation of development investment strategies, and for technical assistance.

A central feature of the bill is the locally developed, long-range development investment strategy. Communities will prepare their own strategies, setting their own priorities and directing their own destinies, requiring considerable private sector and intergovernmental cooperation and coordination.

Eligibility is determined by any one of three distress criteria: an unemployment rate of 1 percent over the national average for the previous 2-year period; or a per capita income that is 80 percent of the national average. The bill also retains eligibility for areas which have experienced, or are about to experience, sudden economic distress through loss of a major employer.

I want to emphasize that H.R. 10 is a great improvement over existing legislation, and it addresses many of the criticisms and shortcomings of current programs.

The Federal financial responsibility is reduced to a 50-percent funding match, which is less than current law that can go up to 80 percent. This is intended to give local government and the private sector a greater stake in a program's success and to foster even greater leveraging of the Federal dollars.

Under the committee amendment, we are further reducing the amounts to bring the figures in line with the budget resolution passed August 1. H.R. 10 funding for EDA would provide a total fiscal year 1986 authorization of $182.8 million. This is 20 percent less than appropriations for fiscal year 1985 for EDA.

There is a limit of $2 million on the total funds an applicant may receive in a given year to implement a development investment strategy. This is to stretch limited Federal funds and to avoid giving one or a few areas an unfair advantage of revolving disproportionately large amounts. A limit of $1 million is set for each revolving fund grant.

Eligibility criteria is scaled down and only areas with the greatest need will receive assistance. Also, an area, once it is determined as eligible, will no longer remain so indefinitely and must demonstrate it meets distress criteria with each application.

Title II of H.R. 10 covers the Appalachian Regional Commission which has proven to be one of the most successful examples of a Federal/State partnership. The Appalachian region is, in a sense, at a crossroads right now in its efforts to achieve parity with national economic levels. While there has been considerable improvement since 1965, the region is still substantially behind most other areas of the Nation in economic opportunity and quality of life.

This bill provides the legislation to put into effect the finish-up programs the Appalachian Governors agreed to in 1982. It represents a great compromise from original plans, especially to the highway system. The 13 States and localities have assumed greater financial responsibility and private sector involvement has increased, but, according to testimony we received at our hearings, their finances are stretched to the limit. Without Federal assistance, the gaps remaining in the highway system may not be completed, at least in the near future, and some on-going and recently completed projects that are dependent on those highways will not achieve their planned potential.

The committee amendment reduces Appalachian funds to $121 million—down 20 percent from the fiscal year 1985 appropriation.

The help the Federal Government provides under this bill is not excessive, and it requires a substantial contribution by the local community. However, it represents an investment by the Federal Government that can act as a stimulus to economically distressed areas.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation has been overwhelmingly supported by this body twice before. Four years ago, in the 97th Congress, it passed by a vote of 281 to 95; and 2 years ago, in the 98th Congress by 306 to 113.

Two weeks ago, an amendment designed to terminate EDA by striking funding from the fiscal year 1986 appropriations bill, was soundly defeated 315 to 98. The strength of that vote is a clear indication of the high value placed on this subregional economic development program by the Members of the House.

The bill we bring to the floor today, for the third time, would vastly improve the existing programs, gearing them to meet current economic conditions and needs in local areas. I urge continued overwhelming support for H.R. 10 as a strong signal to the other body that we believe these programs are important and should continue to play a role as a catalyst for economic development in our Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. NOWAK] has consumed 10 minutes of his allotted time.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER], the ranking member of the subcommittee.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, Emporium, PA, is a small town of 2,800 people nestled in a valley in the Allegheny Mountains and near the New York State line. It is part of Appalachia. It is struggling. The unemployment rate has been in double digits for a number of years; coming down, but not fast enough. Emporium was the birthplace of the Sylvania Electric Products Corp. which, until the late 1970's, was the principal employer, at one time employing over 3,000 people. When, in the late 1970's, a Dutch company, Philips, bought the plant and within months began to phase out all operations. Today, there are only about 80 people employed there. Most of the buildings in the complex are either idle or empty.

But Emporium and its people have not been idle. They have embarked on an ambitious program of economic development. An access road was built to a previously inaccessible site which allowed a local pressed metal plant to expand, creating desperately needed new jobs in the area. The county hired a dynamic young economic development specialist who has been aggressively pursuing ways to attract new jobs and preserve existing ones. Working with the local regional development and planning commission, the community leaders have developed an ambitious but realistic plan for turning their town around. They have already had success with their tourist promotion program.

It is great hunting and fishing country. They are planning to target small to medium companies involved in timber production and the manufacture of wood products. They are surrounded by a lot of timber, forests, very good timber prospects. Most exciting is their plan to take over most of an abandoned Sylvania-Philips plant and convert it into an industrial incubator. They already have five firms committed to move into this complex when it is completed and inquiries from a dozen more. They are raising industrial development money locally. The local banks are involved. A retraining program for workers is underway. Things are definitely looking up in Emporium, PA.

My point is that none of this would have been possible without EDA and ARC. It was the expertise which is available at the North Central Regional Development and Planning Commission funded, in part, by EDA and ARC that enabled them to develop a workable plan, and EDA helped build the access road, which created jobs at the pressed metal plant. EDA is also going to be a partner in developing the industrial incubator which I mentioned.

Mr. Chairman, a small town like Emporium cannot do it alone, but with modest, and I do mean modest, commitments on the part of the Federal Government through the Economic Development Administration and the Appalachian Regional Commission, this assistance, this very modest assistance, coupled with the town's own considerable human resources and its modest financial resources, Emporium is going to make it. It is going to come back. The alternative, Mr. Chairman, was to continue the slow process of withering and dying.

Emporium is not unique. There are countless small towns and cities across the land which have been helped to survive and literally survive and prosper through minimum support from EDA and ARC. They are doing productive work, and that is important, they are creating meaningful jobs, and these are not make-work jobs they are creating, they are not propping up failing industries. The money is going to industries which have a real potential for growth, a real potential for competitiveness, not only domestically but internationally. And that is why, Mr. Chairman, I rise in such strong support of H.R. 10, the National Development Investment Act. I would first like to commend my chairman, Mr. NOWAK, for his outstanding leadership of the Economic Development Subcommittee and for his bipartisan stewardship of the legislation that is before us today.

Mr. Chairman, I also want to commend Chairman JIM HOWARD and the ranking member, Mr. SNYDER, for their leadership and cooperation as well. I feel genuinely fortunate to serve on a committee that has such a long tradition of bipartisan cooperation.

Mr. Chairman, as our chairman indicated, H.R. 10 significantly reforms two Federal assistance programs, the Economic Development Administration and the Appalachian Regional Commission. In the first instance, H.R. 10 completely rewrites the current eligibility and assistance criteria under the EDA, an area under present legislation which in my view has been rightly criticized.

It eliminates the troublesome loan and loan guarantee programs, another sensitive area for these agencies which has not been as effective as others and instead relies solely on grants as a means of assisting local economies. In addition, Federal participation in local development projects would be limited to more than 50 percent. This legislation also imposes a new set of eligibility standards for EDA applicants. Under current guidelines, once a community has attained eligibility as a distressed area, it can use that designation for future applications without regard to changes in the local economy. As many critics of the EDA well know, and as stated on this floor, at present more than 80 percent of our country is deemed distressed and is consequently eligible for EDA assistance and this is clearly not an acceptable situation, which is why H.R. 10 addresses this very critical point.

H.R. 10 indeed changes all that. It abolishes reliance on historic designations and requires the community to establish eligibility with each and every application submitted. To qualify, a community must meet one of three very simple criteria based on unemployment, per capita income, or the prospect of sudden and severe economic dislocation such as a plant closing.

I think it can be safely said that the economic recovery has not been felt in all areas of this country. I am sure most every Member has a few communities that suffer, a community or two that has suffered from persistent and still suffers from persistent high unemployment in spite of the general national improvement in our economy. In view of this situation, it is my firm belief that we need to retain a program such as EDA in place to those areas who, for reasons beyond their own control, cannot keep pace with the rest of the country.

With regard to the Appalachian Regional Commission, H.R. 10 adopts the 5-year close-out program endorsed by the Governors of the 13 States, bipartisan support, of the Governors of the 13 States participating in the ARC. It also transfers the ARC Highway Program to the Department of Transportation.

Mr. Chairman, legislation, as has been indicated, very similar to H.R. 10 has passed the House by overwhelming margins in the two previous Congresses. The bill before us today was reported by unanimous voice vote of the full Committee on Public Works and earlier this month, the House demonstrated its support for EDA defeating an amendment by a 3-to-1 margin to the State, Justice, Commerce appropriations bill to eliminate program funding.

Over the past 4 years, Mr. Chairman, we have seen a number of federally funded local assistance programs slated for reduction or elimination. The community development block grant, urban development action grant, and revenue sharing are three examples.

It is my belief that we in the Congress should maintain a Federal assistance program aimed at helping communities who are genuinely distressed and who have nowhere to turn for assistance and who are willing to make a significant contribution on their own part to turn around their own fortunes. The EDA is such a program, a program dedicated to creating private-sector jobs which are going to aid and enhance the overall economy and it is my hope that we will continue to support it again today.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 10.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER] has consumed 7 minutes of his 30 minutes.

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAFALCE], the chairman of the Subcommittee on Economic Stabilization.

Mr. LAFALCE. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 10, the National Development Investment Act. This bill would authorize the continuation of economic development programs initiated under the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965 and the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965, while making some needed changes designed to make both programs more efficient and effective.

Since 1981 these programs have been under direct assault from the Reagan administration, and on September 30, 1982, their authorizing legislation was allowed to expire. Although the House, by substantial margins, passed new authorizing legislation in both 1982 and 1983, the Senate failed to join in these actions. This scenario will likely be repeated again this year, as we have reason to expect that the Senate or the White House will drop their objections to this bill.

Despite this legislative stalemate, the programs have continued through the appropriations process. This has been, at best, a stopgap solution which has created uncertainty among potential grant recipients and prevented the implementation of the meaningful reforms contained in H.R. 10. Several regions of the country have been left largely untouched by the overall economic recovery, which now appears to have stalled. The time is ripe to pass authorizing legislation which addresses this situation.

Notwithstanding the existence of serious economic problems throughout the country which require our attention, the administration has called for termination of both the EDA and the ARC. In explaining its opposition, the administration has argued that the EDA, in recent years, strayed too far from its original mission, and was not effectively targeted to assist those areas experiencing the greatest need.

Some of these criticisms are well taken, and I, myself, have had some past misgivings regarding the untargeted nature of these programs and the sometimes political nature of the decisionmaking process. But the administration has conveniently chosen to ignore the EDA's and ARC's substantial record of achievement. These programs have leveraged billions of dollars in private capital, saved or created approximately 2 million private sector jobs, returned billions in tax receipts to the Treasury, and improved the economic situation of some of the Nation's most distressed regions. We are not resting solely on this record of success, however. H.R. 10 also attempts to address and correct the very weaknesses which have provided ammunition to the programs' critics.

While retaining many of the same tools available under the old act, H.R. 10 establishes tightened eligibility criteria which are designed to ensure that Federal development funds reach only those most deserving of assistance. No longer, as under current law, will distressed areas be automatically eligible for grants, but applicants must demonstrate distress criteria for each application. But need is not the only factor to be considered. Grants are to be made only to those applicants which offer a genuine prospect of achieving long-term economic growth. The ad hoc project-by-project approach prevalent under existing law will be replaced by strategic planning, which emphasizes mutually supporting projects that offer the promise of harnessing existing resources and the development of a sound economic base.

H.R. 10 also recognizes that economic development cannot be promoted from above, but requires intense local involvement in the planning and decisionmaking process. It also requires substantial coordination and cooperation between all levels of government and the private sector. Private sector linkage is a principal characteristic of this legislation. Priority is to be given to those projects which promise significant private sector involvement. Indeed, Federal funds cannot account for more than 50 percent of project costs, which ensures that the project has the support and commitment of all interested parties. Stringent monitoring provisions provide the necessary degree of accountability to guarantee that the programs do not stray from these goals.

These changes meet the stated concerns of EDA's and ARC's critics. Yet, the administration opposition actually extends far beyond the specifics to the very nature of the program itself. The administration has argued that these programs are anachronistic given today's fiscal situation, and that they reflect outdated regional targeting economic policies which serve no national economic purpose.

Nothing could be further from the truth. Rather than being anachronistic, programs of this type are particularly relevant in these times of stagnant and uneven economic growth. They can, if well managed, play a critical role in enhancing the competitive position of our industries and those distressed regions and localities which bear the brunt of structural change.

A strong national economy depends on the cooperation of self-sufficient and productive local and regional economies—economies that have both stability and sufficient flexibility to deal with the technological and structural changes which accompany and facilitate national growth. Increased competitive pressure has made it particularly essential that we adopt institutional mechanisms to overcome and adapt to economic dislocations so as to maintain the competitive position of our economy. There is, therefore, a continuing urgency to retain targeted economic programs to assist some of our most distressed areas in their efforts to diversify their economies, to adjust to necessary changes, and to rejoin the Nation's economic mainstream.

Although I am concerned about EDA's failure to address the adverse impact of increasing international competition on large segments of our economy, these programs symbolize the concept of the public-private entrepreneurship which must be kept alive if we are to eventually restore the Nation's international competitiveness.

While H.R. 10 goes a long way in remedying the past problems associated with these programs, alone they will be insufficient to the task. The Subcommittee on Economic Stabilization, which I chair, has proposed several complementary initiatives necessary to revitalize the economy. These proposals include the creation of a Council on Industrial Competitiveness, a Bank for Industrial Competitiveness, a secondary mortgage market for industrial loans, and an advanced technology foundation. If passed, these measures would facilitate public-private cooperation, provide necessary seed capital to potentially viable businesses, and ensure the enhancement of our industrial competitiveness. These proposals, along with those contained in H.R. 10, as well as sound fiscal and monetary policies, constitute the elements of a well-rounded policy which can successfully promote the international competitiveness of our economy.

I am particularly pleased that H.R. 10 incorporates several amendments advanced by the Subcommittee on Economic Stabilization. These amendments, among other things, ensure that the funds granted under this program could not be used to assist plants and business establishments merely to shut down in one area and move to another, and would require the Secretary of Commerce, working with the Secretary of the Treasury, to conduct a study during the first year of this program to determine what it would cost to construct and repair certain public works facilities to bring them up to present service level needs.

Because H.R. 10 incorporates these changes, and in order to expedite consideration of this important legislation, the subcommittee chose not to exercise its jurisdiction over EDA to conduct further hearings during this session of Congress. If, however, H.R. 10 meets the same fate as its predecessor versions have in the Senate, as I regrettably anticipate, the subcommittee will work actively to ensure that EDA does not totally ignore the thrust of these proposed reforms, and to develop, as part of an overall industrial competitiveness strategy, legislation which addresses these vital concerns.

This legislation will harness both public and private resources in such a way as to promote economic growth in those regions of our country most in need of assistance. I urge the House to adopt H.R. 10 as a necessary part of a larger program to revitalize our economy.

Mr. Chairman, I urge support of the bill.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE], the ranking member of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, which has joint jurisdiction over H.R. 10.

Mr. WYLIE. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for yielding this time.

Mr. Chairman, who can disagree with the objectives and intentions of H.R. 10, the promotion of economic development in distressed areas of our Nation? And I hate to disagree with my respected colleagues, Messrs. NOWAK, CLINGER, HOWARD, and SNYDER, but the best intentions cannot and should not be the basis of legislation. At best, such legislation is illusory and through short-term popup development projects fails to recognize long-term marketplace realities.

At worst, it flings wide open the door to pork-barrel abuse and increases our ever-worsening Federal budget deficit. H.R. 10 is the primary example of well-intentioned, yet badly flawed, legislation.

The EDA's original mandate was to save jobs by lending to hard-pressed businesses in poor rural areas. In 20 short years, however, that mandate has been knocked out of kilter. Eligibility requirements have been broadened to the point that all but 19 of 435 congressional districts are now deemed to be "economically distressed" and eligible for loans. Even New York's Westchester County, one of the wealthiest areas in the country with a median family income of over $27,278 a year, makes the hit parade of distressed areas.

Moreover, EDA's lending program has not left a legacy of new jobs or economic activity. Instead, its track record reflects a plethora of problems, including mushrooming loan losses costing an estimated $400 million and imprudent agency underwriting and management of loans, which themselves are thinly veiled—yet classic—pork-barrel projects. According to a 1984 report by the Commerce Department's inspector general, many of EDA's loans never achieved their intended economic impact, many of the loans should never have been made, and, in fact, at least one-third of those loans examined were "manifestly imprudent" and made with the prospects of repayment that were "dim to nonexistent."

I must question why we would continue a program which, in essence, has failed so miserably and now provides outright subsidies for inefficient borrowers. Is this any way to run a program? I think not.

The Federal Government does not have the knowledge or expertise to conduct successful economic development programs, such as that envisioned in this bill. Unlike State and local governments, the Federal Government cannot fully comprehend how to stimulate local economies or fill voids resulting from regional disparities and transitional economies. Federally created programs also carry with them the baggage of extraordinary overhead costs which, when combined with State and local government costs, outweigh any benefits of these programs.

Finally, and most importantly, we cannot ignore the fact that with mounting Federal deficit, we simply cannot afford the luxury of programs such as the EDA that have little, if any, record of success. I am convinced that the only really way to improve local and regional economies is through control of Federal spending and continued economic growth.

A broad-based economic recovery is well within our realm. Indeed, the economy has been expanding, reducing unemployment and increasing economic activity across the Nation.

The single greatest threat to this, however, is the specter of the monstrous Federal budget deficit. Born of our profligacy at home, the deficit has produced real high interest rates, an overvalued dollar, and an ever-increasing trade deficit. All of these results adversely impact our economy and particularly the distressed sectors.

We, the Members, must resolve the budget deficit issue first. We cannot substitute it with other remedial measures which, however laudable they may be, will contribute to—indeed, exacerbate—the very problems which are largely responsible for our current economic difficulties.

I understand that an amendment will be offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. CLINGER, to reduce the funding in H.R. 10 as reported from the Public Works Committee and I applaud that effort. The more crucial vote, however, will occur when we vote on final passage, for it is there that the Members will have a clear opportunity to vote decisively to reduce the Federal budget deficit on our first day back from the August district work period.

Mr. Chairman, our former colleague, Clarence "Bud" Brown, now the Deputy Secretary of Commerce, has urged that we eliminate the EDA and begin "the painful effort to eliminate nonessential Government spending." Bud Brown is right, in my opinion: The EDA at this time represents nonessential Government spending. For this reason, I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on final passage of H.R. 10.

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WISE], who is a great contributing member of this committee.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 10, to reauthorize the Economic Development Administration and the Appalachian Regional Commission. As my colleague from New York, Mr. NOWAK, knows, I am an original cosponsor of this legislation.

One project in West Virginia that is funded by the ARC highway program deserves special note—Corridor G in central and southern West Virginia. So far, 51 miles of the highway have been completed, and 5 miles are currently under construction, which leaves a balance of 24 miles to finish the whole project. Without this authorization, the $429 million needed to complete Corridor G would not be forthcoming. Corridor G is vital if my State is to have the transportation system necessary to open up the entire southern section of the State for continued economic development.

This bill is important for a number of reasons. Yes, it creates some primary jobs for the unemployed; yes, it actually saves Federal and State Governments money because of the reduced need for unemployment and welfare programs; but most importantly, the assistance that ARC and EDA provides the States will help us help ourselves. It provides tools to build permanent structures. In my view, a job opportunity is a moral imperative, and this bill will provide the opportunities to create thousands of meaningful jobs for our unemployed citizens.

Is the job done?

An editorial in the Charleston, Gazette, August 25, pointed out that there has been much said and printed about the advances that Appalachia has made in the past 25 years since the ARC was begun. There have been gains, but the work is not completed. Hardship, low income, and low education still are widespread in some regions of Appalachia. For instance, 40 percent of the residents of one county do not have drinking water in their homes. Two months ago, Standard and Poor lowered the rating on $773 million worth of outstanding bonds in West Virginia from AA+ to AA— citing "lingering hard times." Seven million net jobs have been created in the country since 1980, but Appalachia has lost 26,000. Per capita income is 75 percent of the national average in Appalachia.

Both the ARC and EDA have touched almost every county in my State. The funding has helped communities like Elizabeth, Summersville, Charleston, Sutton, Clay, Spencer, Gassaway, and almost every town in my district with such things as highways, vocational schools, clinics, libraries, ambulances, sewer systems, road repaving, airport expansion, technical development and planning, hospital construction, and basic community development.

Mr. Chairman, the ARC is a commitment that is not yet fulfilled. There has been improvement; there is even more to do. No one in Appalachia wants a handout. We aren't looking for a great Federal hand to wipe away our problems. We'll do it ourselves. What the ARC does is put some of the tools in our hands to improve greatly the hardest-hit regions of Appalachia. We're not talking about frills, Mr. Chairman. We're talking about safe water in rural areas, health care and roads. The cost—$121 million next year—more than $20 million less than was spent last year. We're determined to bring to Appalachia the same standard of living, the same opportunities enjoyed by so much of the country. We're asking that the ARC be permitted to continue that important work.

Mr. Chairman, every 1 percent in the national unemployment rate adds $30 billion to our Federal deficit. I view this legislation as deficit reducing, and killing two birds with one stone. Sure, just like every other Government agency that I know of, and many private businesses and corporations, ARC and EDA have had some "flops" in investment—but let's not throw out the baby with the bathwater.

I urge my colleagues to maintain the funding levels in this legislation for ARC and EDA, and to vote in favor of the bill.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT], the senior member of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation and a long-time member of the Economic Development Subcommittee.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me, and I also thank him for the expertise and the long-time effort he has made on H.R. 10 and the economic development of our Nation.

I also want to recognize the leadership of the gentleman from New York [Mr. NOWAK] and the fine product that he and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER] brought to the floor.

I also want to commend our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD] and the ranking member of the full committee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SNYDER], for their cooperation.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 10, the National Development Investment Act, which would reauthorize programs of the Economic Development Administration and the Appalachian Regional Commission.

Communities throughout this Nation, and especially in rural America, have benefited enormously from the assistance provided through these programs. The financial investment in Federal economic development assistance has actually been quite modest, but the return on that investment has been outstanding when measured in terms of job creation and retention.

The Federal role in assisting distressed communities in their efforts to rebuild their public infrastructure and provide basic public services is an altogether proper one, in my judgment, and should be continued. It would be a terrible mistake to assume that all areas of the country have been able to participate fully in our national economic recovery. Pockets of poverty still exist. The needs are still there in so many of our rural communities.

While I firmly believe that we need a Federal program to help distressed communities and while I recognize the outstanding record of the Economic Development Administration, I am mindful of the legitimate criticisms of how the program has been structured. H.R. 10 seeks to address those criticisms with some significant reforms in the EDA Program and its application.

One of the major problems confronting the EDA grant program has been its overly broad eligibility criteria, which literally allowed some 80 percent of the country to be eligible for a limited amount of Federal funds. That had to be changed, and H.R. 10 does just that, and in the process, reduces the portion eligible for assistance nationwide to about 44 percent.

By limiting eligibility, the bill targets the limited number of Federal dollars to those areas with the greatest need. The new eligibility criteria would also ensure that such areas would receive the money, provided their programs are success oriented.

Applicants would no longer submit requests for funding for specific projects, as is the current practice. This project-by-project approach would be replaced by a requirement that applicants present an investment strategy, for which the Federal Government would provide 75 percent of the cost.

The strategy required would be comprehensive, covering a broad range of information, including a cost-benefit analysis of projects envisioned and the identification of past, present, and projected investments by private and public sector participants.

This legislation places great emphasis on private sector involvement. The private sector is the mainstay of our economy and the proper place for the vast majority of permanent meaningful jobs—and that, of course, is what we want Federal economic development assistance to produce.

H.R. 10 will also bring some order to chaos where the EDA loan program has been concerned. This legislation provides only grants. It takes the Federal Government out of the loan business, which has been a source of criticism because of the large number of loans in default and on the brink of default.

The bill authorizes the establishment of a revolving loan fund at the State level for use by small business. Placing the administration of the loan program in local hands makes much more sense, since a better assessment of who should receive loans and a better monitoring program can be carried out at the local level.

H.R. 10 also provides for a gradual phaseout of Appalachian regional development programs, consistent with the recommendations of the Appalachian Governors. We authorize ARC's nonhighway programs through 1990 and finish-up funding for its priority highway program through 1992, when completion of construction is expected.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, this bill is not a budget-buster. The amendment to be offered by the Public Works and Transportation Committee, on which I serve, will lower the authorization levels to those assumed in the first concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1986 adopted by this body in August.

I believe that the bill before this House is a good bill, carrying a reasonable and modest authorization level, consistent with budgetary restraints, and one that should not satisfy many of the objections to program as it is currently administered.

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I first want to commend the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. OBERSTAR] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER] for bringing this particular legislation forward, of which I am a cosponsor, and also to Mr. NOWAK for the specific leadership he showed.

Mr. Chairman, I want to address another area of the legislation. This proposal assists local governments in developing a strong and viable economic case to support growth and expansion, while at the same time, giving our local officials the necessary flexibility needed to choose the course of action best suited to their local economic needs.

Ladies and gentleman, that is a very important part of this particular project.

While some Members keep saying that the economic growth of our country will ultimately reverse our economic woes, ladies and gentleman, that is not working. H.R. 10 addresses itself specifically to problems of depressed communities such as mine, the 17th District of Ohio, that lost all its steel mills and has one of the highest unemployment rates in all of America.

One thing this will do is it will develop jobs to address infrastructure needs. I am very strongly in support of this. I am hoping that there would not be any cuts in the money that is made available to it. We would go forward with it because our major problem right now is jobs and trying to spur that economic growth.

The programs we have talked about have not worked, and I commend our chairman and EDA for its efforts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would advise the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER] that he has 17 minutes remaining and the gentleman from New York [Mr. NOWAK] that he has 13½ minutes remaining.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER].

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY].

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, today I urge my colleagues of the U.S. House of Representatives to continue in their fight to control the deficit by supporting legislation that fosters economic development, creates jobs, and promotes a strong national economy. A vote for H.R. 10, the National Development Investment Act of 1985, is a vote to invest in the economic development of America and help reduce the Federal deficit.

As has been pointed out already today by the able chairman of the Economic Development Subcommittee, Mr. NOWAK, the able ranking minority member of the subcommittee, Mr. CLINGER, and the outstanding chairman of the House Public Works and Transportation Committee, Mr. HOWARD, H.R. 10 is designed to provide vital direction and necessary incentives to areas of a depressed economy to create and retain jobs in the United States. Economic self-sufficiency through the private sector is the objective of the National Development Investment Act of 1985. With the current trend of an eroding industrial base in America as a result of foreign competition and an increase of imports, we need legislation to support jobs for Americans.

A section of my home district, adjacent to the city of Baltimore, MD, has been severely affected by the closing of several industries. Unemployment is at an all time high. Unfortunately, this is not a unique problem. Areas throughout our Nation are suffering from industries being forced to close down and the result is unemployment and a depressed economy. With the passage and enactment of the National Development Investment Act of 1985, the Economic Development Administration will continue to provide direction and incentives for economic growth and self-sufficiency through private sector jobs to economically depressed areas.

Enactment of H.R. 10 will establish locally administered revolving loan funds to assist small businesses or retain existing businesses which promote development and create jobs. An effective implementation of the National Development Investment Act will be instrumental in achieving a more competitive U.S. market in international trade. Passage of H.R. 10 is a step closer to a balanced trade.

When this Congress votes to appropriate the National Development Investment Act of 1985, it will be voting to do just that, make a wise investment in our Nation for economic development. Again I urge my colleagues to vote for H.R. 10, the National Development Investment Act of 1985.

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 10, the National Development Investment Act. I wish to commend the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. OBERSTAR] and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER], for their leadership and perseverance in introducing this bill. I would also like to thank the chairman of the full committee [Mr. HOWARD] for his crucial role in determining the swift consideration of this urgently needed legislation.

H.R. 10 recognizes that economic assistance should be directed to distressed communities. The current economic crisis cannot be addressed solely at the national level. Each local community is unique, with different resources and different needs. Any program of national economic recovery must depend on the interdependence and cooperation of regional and local economies. I believe that now, more than ever, there is a great need for targeted economic programs to assist some of the most economically distressed areas in our Nation.

Mr. Chairman, in Missouri an urgent need exists for infrastructure repair. Many of our public facilities—our bridges, our roads, and our sewer systems—await the physical improvements necessary to make them viable for the long term. Unemployment and a sustained period of high interest rates have placed financial constraints on all communities. The creation of new jobs, assistance in the growth of local businesses, and the construction and maintenance of infrastructure systems have been deferred for too long. But money spent now in conjunction with the private sector is an investment in our future. In my own district, whether the funds are directed toward street improvements in Kinloch or St. Louis County, or the construction of a new community center in Wellston, or support for local shoe manufacturing companies, these funds will invigorate the local economies which in turn will contribute to national recovery.

Mr. Chairman, if local economies continue to deteriorate, our national economy can only continue to falter. This bill provides funds for distressed communities; these funds are for those who cannot help themselves. Surely there is no more important role for the Federal Government to play and no role which has as great a potential for our Nation as this.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 10, especially title II which reauthorizes the programs of the Appalachian Regional Commission [ARC].

When the ARC was established in 1965, the people of Appalachia lagged far behind the Nation in nearly every important socioeconomic measurement.

Average per capita income in the region was a third below the national average.

One in every three families lived below the poverty level.

Unemployment was 40 percent higher than the national norm.

More than a quarter of the housing in the region was in need of major repair with many posing serious health hazards.

The incidences of infectious disease were a third higher than for the rest of the Nation.

Most communities had rudimentary sewer and water facilities with outdoor plumbing all too common.

Indeed, conditions deviated so far from the national norm, that some sections of Appalachia more nearly resembled life in a developing country than in the United States. The seriousness and pervasiveness of the problems clearly justified a strong coordinated effort. Thus, the ARC was established.

The Appalachian Regional Commission through a wide variety of programs has played an indispensable role in narrowing the huge gap that existed between life for many in Appalachia and life in the rest of the country. The Commission has funded health planning agencies and innumerable health demonstration projects. It has helped establish a network of vocational education programs and job training centers. The Commission has helped improve the quality of housing in the region as well as, help assure its affordability.

Just as important as the Commission's investment in the human potential of the region, has been its efforts in improving the infrastructure of the region. As a result of the Commission's foresight, an assorted collection of nearly impassable dirt roads and inaccessible mountain terrain has given way to a system of modern highways and connecting roads.

The progress of the last two decades is easily measured. Nearly half a million new jobs grew up around the new highway system and more than 2 million jobs overall have been created through both public and private investment. There have been dramatic increases in educational attainment at every level. The infant mortality rate has declined steadily in line with the rest of the Nation. And, primary health care is now available in most counties.

Yet as impressive as the Commission's efforts have been thus far, its successes have only been partial. Far more must be done.

Nearly 60 of the region's counties are still without any form of primary health care. More than 1,000 miles of the planned highway system remains unbuilt. While showing significant improvement, infant mortality, educational achievement, and the quality of housing still lag noticeably behind the rest of the Nation.

In short, Appalachia is still far poorer than any other region of the country.

Perhaps more importantly, the 1980's have exposed the overall vulnerability of the region's economy. That economy is anchored by durable manufactured products like footwear, textiles, and apparels. These industries have proven to be highly vulnerable to foreign competition. In fact, a great number of plants in these industries have already closed down throwing thousands of people out of work.

And, coal, still an important part of the region's economy, has experienced a steep fall in demand due to energy conservation and falling world oil prices. Some areas of the region heavily reliant on coal, still have unemployment rates at recession levels. The competitiveness of coal which depends in large part on the development of new technologies to increase productivity, carries a bleak prospect for future employment.

Indeed the relative decline of the industries which form the backbone of the region's economy during the 1980's, threaten to undo many of the advances made over the last two decades. Today, Appalachia is still a region at risk and still in need of the Nation's help.

However, the people and leaders of the region are not blind to the exigencies of the day. We know that our pressing budgetary crisis demands resolution. The people of Appalachia are more than willing to share in the national effort required to bring discipline to our fiscal affairs.

As a demonstration of this willingness, all 13 Governors who comprise the ARC voted unanimously to phase out all ARC programs. The plan adopted called for scaling back previous plans in almost every area. The unfinished portion of the highway system would be cut in half. The delivery of needed health care to those counties still unreached would be limited to the most basic care, while upgrading of sewer and water systems would be provided only to the most distressed areas.

Mr. Chairman, we think that this phaseout plan constitutes a substantial sacrifice. We think that Congress should not ask more of the people of this region. We think that Congress should incorporate this plan which was agreed to on a bipartisan basis by the Governors of the region, into any authorizing legislation on the ARC.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 10 does indeed embody the essentials of the Governors' phaseout plan. For that, I commend the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. OBERSTAR] as well as the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAFALCE].

This House has, in fact, passed nearly identical authorization bills in each of the last 2 years only to see matters come undone in the other body. Since 1980, ARC, and EDA, have been legislated only through the appropriations process.

I am hopeful that this year we will see the actual enactment of H.R. 10. I believe that a strong vote of support by this House will help bring this about.

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RAHALL].

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Chairman, today, I would like to rise in strong support of H.R. 10, the National Development Investment Act. Included in H.R. 10 is authorization for the Appalachian Regional Commission, a program which has been instrumental in attempting to alleviate the devastating effects of poverty in Appalachia.

The role of the Federal Government in the economic development of rural areas, particularly Appalachia, was nonexistent before the commitment of President John F. Kennedy to revitalize these regions of the Nation. Since 1965, the ARC has continuously promoted much needed economic progress in Appalachia, decreasing the poverty level, boosting the level of income, slashing infant mortality rates, and increasing the number of doctors. Furthermore, private sector jobs have shown a marked increase and the level of education now approaches the national average. Progress has been made.

This progress could not have been made without the cooperative effort of government—on the local, State, and Federal levels—working in conjunction with the private sector, which includes many businesses and individuals who are willing to invest in the future of their communities.

The father of the Appalachian Regional Commission in the other body, the former Senator Jennings Randolph, always termed these expenditures of money as investments in the future of America. And, indeed, that is truly what we are doing today, Mr. Chairman. I salute and thank Jennings Randolph for his staunch defense, and, indeed, offense, on behalf of ARC from its very inception when Jennings Randolph led many a fight for ARC in the White House itself.

While dramatic improvements have been made, Appalachia still suffers disproportionate socioeconomic hardships. My home State of West Virginia continues to be burdened with the highest unemployment rate in our Nation. The people of Appalachia struggle not only for jobs but for the daily necessities others take for granted. Many people in Appalachia are still poor today. There is much that remains to be done.

The contribution of government to the economic development of rural areas is to be commended. But we cannot stop now. The problems still exist. The phaseout funding provided for the ARC in H.R. 10 is imperative for the continued improvement in the quality of Appalachian life. Without these funds, not only will improvements cease, but the positive effects of past progress will be lost to inevitable regression. I urge you support of H.R. 10.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. JOHNSON], a member of the subcommittee.

Mrs. JOHNSON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, as a strong supporter and cosponsor of H.R. 10, both in the last Congress and in this, I want to congratulate the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. NOWAK]; the former subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. OBERSTAR]; and my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER], on again coming forward with a very fine and responsible rewrite of an important program whose purpose it is to provide employment in the areas of high unemployment throughout this Nation.

We often talk about structural change. All of us deal day in and day out with industries in America that are having to reduce dramatically their levels of employment, whether it is for technological reasons, foreign competition, or whatever. Industry in America is changing, and what we call structural change is affecting the lives of the people that we represent.

What is so outstanding about this program is that it provides the material support for communities to make that change from one employment base to another employment base.

In my district, it is machine tools, it is bearings, it is brass that are no longer what they used to be, and EDA grants have helped my communities create industrial parks, do the site work, in other words, create the circumstances through which that community can attract those employers of the future to employ the old brass workers, the old machine tool workers, the bearing factory workers, so that their skills can be utilized in creating a dynamic economy in this Nation for the decades ahead.

This is the guts of structural change, the Government's role in the lives of the people of this Nation creating job opportunities, job security and economic vitality in the decades ahead.

I commend my colleagues on a very fine piece of legislation, and I would like to note that the amendment will bring the spending down to conform with our first budget resolution. I hope this bill pass by the same resounding majority that it passed by in the 98th Congress.

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the Delegate from the District of Columbia [Mr. FAUNTROY].

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 10, the National Development Investment Act, which would authorize $500 million in each of fiscal years 1986 through 1988 for a new Economic Development Program which would replace the present Public Works Grant Program.

I also understand that an amendment will be offered on behalf of the Public Works and Transportation Committee to bring the authorization levels provided under this legislation for the Economic Development Administration and the Appalachian Regional Commission into compliance with the assumptions contained in the first budget resolution for fiscal year 1986 (S. Con. Res. 32), and to provide such sums as are necessary for the programs of both agencies in the additional fiscal years.

Mr. Chairman, it is vital that we pass this legislation which would continue and improve upon Federal programs that have created jobs, provided targeted assistance to areas of our country that have suffered from long-term levels of high unemployment.

While it is true that some in our Nation have benefited from the economic recovery in recent years, there are many regions and many people that have been bypassed and have not been beneficiaries in the recent economic resurgence.

These still depressed regions lack the capital and the financial institutions to participate in the economic recovery. What is and has been needed is a stimulating mechanism such as the Economic Development Administration. The EDA has been a stimulating force providing an incentive to investment, creating jobs and returning tax dollars to our Federal Treasury.

Within the District of Columbia, the Economic Development Administration has been of great benefit. The first revolving loan fund for small and disadvantaged business was provided by the EDA. The District of Columbia's only municipal industrial park is being funded by the EDA. These two projects are providing much needed assistance and employment opportunities for the all too many unemployed and underemployed citizens of the Nation's Capital. The District of Columbia is also looking for the EDA to assist with the development of import and export enterprise.

Mr. Chairman, I am also pleased that H.R. 10 addresses the two substantive criticisms that have been made of the EDA. Under H.R. 10, assistance would be targeted only to the most depressed areas of our country. For example, States, local governments, economic development districts, native American tribes, nonprofit organizations inside cities or counties in areas of economic distress, would be eligible for Government assistance if the area met one of the following three criteria:

A per capita income of 80 percent or less of the national average;

An unemployment rate 1 percentage point above the national average for the previous 2-year period; or

A sudden or anticipated increase in unemployment due to plant closings, or other major economic dislocation.

H.R. 10 also corrects a problem identified in the Loan Program by putting the direction of that program at the local level, where administration of that program can be better executed.

The National Development Investment Act serves the national interest and I urge my colleagues to support its passage.

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KOLTER], a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. KOLTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support today for H.R. 10, the reauthorization of the Appalachian Regional Commission and the Economic Development Administration.

Since enactment of the law creating the ARC and the EDA, all of Appalachia—including my district, the Fourth Congressional District of Pennsylvania—has experienced a steady climb from the dark Appalachian days of the 1960's toward a more fair share of our Nation's prosperity.

Through the years, both the ARC and the EDA have proved themselves as viable programs that are capable of giving assistance to distressed areas, stimulating economies, improving overall health, and creating jobs for countless thousands throughout the region.

With very restrictive funding, both the ARC and the EDA have achieved amazing results and their list of accomplishments are indeed impressive.

But beyond the facts and figures, statistics and rhetoric, lies the real reason to pass H.R. 10. In a word, that reason is—people. These programs have enriched their lives more than ever expected. And while the task is not yet done, the entire region has felt a ray of hope where none existed before.

We must continue our work to help the aged, infirm, illiterate, and unemployed. To do that, we cannot close the door of opportunity in the faces of those so desperately in need.

Mr. Chairman, I humbly ask that each of my colleagues support the National Development Investment Act and vote in favor of H.R. 10.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RIDGE], a member of the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, with joint jurisdiction.

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me, and I congratulate the gentleman on his leadership with this particular initiative. I know that economic development has been a high priority for my friend and colleague from northwestern Pennsylvania, and I do appreciate his leadership on this issue as well.

Mr. Chairman, there remain congressional districts with communities that haven't seen single-digit unemployment since the mid-1970's, where local officials struggle with dwindling tax bases and greater economic and social pressure to provide more services, where plant closings are still a frequent reminder that the national recovery announced and praised in Washington has yet to be experienced and enjoyed everywhere.

The goal of a complete economic recovery encompassing the entire country, and not just portions of it, will not and cannot be realized if we ignore the plight of these communities. The need to address regional pockets of distress demands our attention and our response. The language of the committee report best describes the economic and legislative imperative to support the National Development Investment Act.

The hope and the potential of H.R. 10 can be seen in the successes of previous EDA and ARC programs in northwestern Pennsylvania. We are a Nation of regions, each with different resources. We are interdependent parts and each part has a cumulative effect on our overall national economy. A strong national economy depends on the cooperation of self-sufficient and productive local and regional economies—economies that have some stability yet sufficient flexibility to deal with the technological and structural changes which accompany and facilitate national growth. The committee believes there is a continuing urgency to retain targeted economic programs to assist some of our most distressed areas in their efforts to diversify their economies, to adjust to these changes, and to rejoin the Nation's economic mainstream.

In 1982, a small community, Girard, PA, with unemployment at a miserable 20 percent, decided to turn the liability of a vacant, industrial building into a productive community asset. With the untiring commitment of several retired businessmen and community leaders, local economic development specialists, private capital, and the catalyst of ARC and EDA funding, a small business incubator project was started. With approximately 1 million in Federal dollars generating $4.5 million in private investment, there are now several small businesses employing 140 people.

The Industrial Development Commission of another community, Meadville, PA, with 14 percent unemployment took a vacant and outdated industrial facility of nearly 250,000 square feet and, with an ARC planning grant and an EDA renovation grant, attracted 13 businesses to provide 450 jobs.

One final achievement. With an EDA grant of $500,000, the Northwest Pennsylvania Regional Planning and Development Commission set up a revolving loan fund similar in scope to that provided with this legislation. Eleven communities, all of which provide a local match, participate in this fund. To date, this money has leveraged five times as much private investment, which, in turn, preserved hundreds of jobs while helping to create another 200; 1 job for every $1,500 invested by EDA.

The past infusion of Federal money through EDA/ARC served as the primary economic stimulus to these communities, enabling them to assess and to attract public and private resources, as well as to achieve new growth. This will be especially true under the new requirement that localities provide a comprehensive development program for their communities. The development investment strategy required by H.R. 10 will force local governing bodies to evaluate their long-term resources and needs to develop mutually supportive projects and to invest in only the most productive projects. The development investment strategy will help to promote economic stability and will create regional and local economies capable of supporting investment and job creation in both urban and rural areas.

I commend my colleagues for including stricter eligibility requirements for assistance from the EDA. New requirements terminate the long-term designation of distressed areas. Localities must prove current economic distress so that areas that have successfully used Federal assistance to promote economic growth will not continue to receive these funds when they are no longer in need. The bill defines economic distress as unemployment 1 percent above the national average over the most recent 24-month period of per capita income 80 percent or less than the national average. Additionally, the assistance granted is confined to the distressed areas and cannot be used outside of those areas. This legislation provides an excellent targeting device which assures that the money will be used in communities that have not yet shared in the economic recovery we hear so much about on Washington, but have yet to experience in northwestern Pennsylvania.

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. MOLLOHAN].

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to once again lend my support to the National Development Investment Act which would reauthorize the Economic Development Administration [EDA] and the Appalachian Regional Commission [ARC] programs.

I voted for a similar bill in the last Congress, I intend to vote for H.R. 10 today, and I encourage my colleagues to join me in supporting these programs which can make a difference in creating jobs, bolstering our economy, and meeting community priorities.

Both EDA and ARC have made significant contributions to my district and to the State of West Virginia over the years. These programs have enabled cities and counties to develop essential public facilities—county courthouses, city buildings, water and sewer facilities, industrial parks and recreation areas.

Further, ARC's area development assistance to community health centers, hospitals, vocational education facilities, libraries, and housing complexes are responsible for major social and health gains throughout West Virginia. EDA's revolving loan fund has paved the way for new and existing businesses to create and retain jobs as well as to stimulate local economies.

Building interstate-grade highways in mountainous West Virginia is not easy, but ARC's highway development aid has been instrumental in furthering State transportation goals.

Let's get to the heart of the matter as far as ARC is concerned. ARC was conceived and is still necessary as an equalizer for West Virginia and other Appalachian areas. It is common knowledge that it costs more to build a highway, water or sewer facility, or other public project in a mountainous area.

Historically, it has cost $5.5 million to build a mile of interstate highway in West Virginia as opposed to $2.2 million nationwide. Currently, remaining ARC interstate highway planned in West Virginia will cost $12 million per mile and $9.5 million per mile for other interstate highway development throughout West Virginia. This simple comparison illustrates the overwhelming need to retain ARC assistance.

Therefore, I fervently support reauthorization, and I encourage my colleagues to join me in support of H.R. 10.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, let me commend, first, the authors of this bill for putting together this important legislation and working to get it to the floor. The EDA and the ARC programs have provided enormous assistance to an area that cannot get by without it, to this moment, at least, in the Appalachian area of our country.

This bill is now without some of the troublesome features which have led many to criticize these programs in the past.

Mr. Chairman, there are so many areas of our country that are right now enjoying the benefits of a solid economic expansion, in fact, the most vigorous expansion since World War II—lower interest rates, declining unemployment, fewer poverty-stricken families, general prosperity. And then there are some parts of the country, regions of our country, which know not of America's economic rebound. The people in those areas are still straddled with endemic unemployment, in pockets of poverty far beyond the national average, trailing in nearly every index of economic well-being and health. A good number of these are many of the people of my own district where unemployment reigns at over twice the national average and where in some countries the percentage of families in poverty rises up to 60 percent. They want economic growth. They have the private-sector resolve for economic growth, but they do not have the tax base that draws from the fortunes of industrial development that allows the local governments the revenues with which to build highways, with which to build water districts, with which to recruit industry, and so on. These areas desperately need highway access, the lifeblood, like the veins in the body, that brings nourishment to those areas, so essential to their development. And that comes by way of help from this National Government now through the ARC.

Surely, we owe these people the modest helping hand that comes from the EDA and the ARC. The object of these communities and these areas is private employment, not Government jobs, not Government handouts. They look for the time when they will be self-sustaining, with private jobs and private initiative. And those areas have made some progress in the last few years, thanks to the help of the National Government through the EDA and ARC. But both these programs also tie right in with private support, which pays for the badly needed infrastructure in our afflicted localities throughout Appalachia. Their effects are positive, long lasting, and vital. EDA funds in my district have helped build desperately needed water lines and, most recently, a rail spur which will permit the expansion of a factory, adding desperately needed new jobs. And this is one of the most important, I think, features of these programs, and that is to encourage and lend a helping hand to those communities who are attempting on their own to secure employment for their people.

ARC money has supplied the financial trigger for hospitals, sewer lines, highways, and the like—some of the most basic human services which would not exist in my district, certainly, without this kind of funding.

Yes, in the last few years, Appalachia has made some progress, thanks to Appalachian regional highways that brought life-blood to those areas and access for factories and other economic encouragement, such as coal, and others, and, yes, we have secured water lines to allow us to develop those living places that otherwise would be uninhabitable without life-feeding water, and we have been able to recruit some industry into the area other than our natural resource, coal.

But the job, as has been said here before, is only beginning. We simply must not cut off the aid that we have been giving to those areas to encourage them to spend their own money and to invest their own initiatives into the building of their own areas. They realize that if the answer is to come to their area, it has to come basically from them, but they need our help. I urge this body to approve this bill to reauthorize the EDA and the ARC programs providing enormous assistance to a people who cannot get by without it.

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Tennessee [Mrs. LLOYD].

Mrs. LLOYD. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 10, and I commend my colleagues on the Public Works Committee for bringing this very valuable legislation to the floor. I just wish that half of the programs that this body authorizes could have the track record of the ARC and the EDA programs that really strike at the heart of a great American philosophy of helping Americans to help themselves.

To fully appreciate what EDA and ARC have meant to Appalachia you really have to have seen the region over the past 20 years. It is an area rich in natural resources but for generations, it was a region isolated by the very mountains that provided so much of its wealth. During the 1950's, steel and coal production were down. Argiculture had become marginal, and the textile industry had been weakened by imports. The region was plunged into a prolonged economic decline and the lack of transportation discouraged new development. The States were hardly in a position to undertake the massive road construction which was needed.

But in 1965, the ARC was created and while the returns were not immediate, they have been invaluable to the people who have made this difficult land their home. The progress and advancement these people have realized in only 15 short years is remarkable. The percentage of Appalachians living in poverty was cut in half, as was their rate of infant mortality. More than 57 percent of the Appalachian population had completed 4 years of high school compared with the only 33 percent in 1960; 2 million new private-sector jobs had been created and a per capita income rose from 78 percent of the national average to 85 percent. We have literally improved the lives of these people through our funding of ARC. Let us not bring this progress to a sudden halt, but instead continue to aid those Americans who still need our support.

H.R. 10 extends the Appalachian Regional Development Act to provide a finish up of the Redevelopment Program by 1990 and of the Highway System Program by 1992. Of course, private involvement is necessary if economic stability is to be realized. This bill stresses private support and investment and encourages the establishment of a development foundation for the region. It disturbs me that this administration has been so opposed to the programs of the ARC and the other development programs. While foreign aid under President Reagan has increased, these programs have been targeted for elimination. My record is one of fiscal conservatism. I agree that we must reduce Federal spending but I fail to see why it must be at the expense of these programs which have provided a decent life for our own people. This administration has supported development programs overseas while seeking to eliminate the very same types of programs in this country. The figures alone are deplorable. The Reagan administration in its 5 years has requested over $60 billion for foreign aid. That figure compared to the less than $3 billion appropriated for UDAG and the less than $2 billion for EDA prove only to show where the administration's priorities lie. Not only has the administration failed to request any moneys for development programs such as UDAG and EDA, but they have repeatedly called for total elimination of those very same programs which have served to eliminate the extreme hardships of many Americans. It is not fiscally irresponsible to sue Federal resources to help Americans.

Mr. Chairman, we have all benefited from programs funded through ARC, UDAG, CDBG as well as the Economic Development Administration. I ask you to think about your individual districts and over the past 2 years or, in my case, 10 years, the number of industrial parks, roads into the industrial parks, sewer and water projects, libraries and civil centers that might not be there today had it not been for the availability of the programs that I have just mentioned, especially programs under EDA.

I know that in my district, a county of some 7,000 which had tried for 6 years to gain funding for a $9 million sewer project could not have supported such an expenditure had it not been for the help of the Economic Development Administration in providing some funding for a badly needed wastewater treatment facility.

My district is not atypical. You have all had the same kinds of problems in your districts and such agencies as I have mentioned have come to be relied upon to provide the necessary assistance that will enhance economic development. I urge you, ladies and gentlemen, to support the Public Works Committee's efforts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would advise that the gentleman from New York [Mr. NOWAK] has 9½ minutes remaining and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER] has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. OBERSTAR].

Mr. OBERSTAR. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, the Economic Development Administration is clearly one of the most extraordinary success stories in the Federal Government's panoply of programs to help communities, distressed areas; people who have lost their jobs through no fault of their own, who simply want to return to work and lead creative, productive lives. EDA has met its mark; has carried out its mission; has been an extraordinarily effective program.

In the hearings conducted in the Subcommittee on Economic Development over 4 years ago in which the gentleman from Pennsylvania was an active participant, the gentleman from New York, now the chairman of that subcommittee, was an active participant, we demonstrated that over the now 20-year history of that program the Federal Government's investment of $4.5 billion in distressed areas of this country, leveraged additional investments of $9 billion from private, State, and local sources, created over 1.5 million jobs, and that every year those jobs are returning to Federal, State, and local treasuries $6.5 billion in taxes.

Every year the jobs EDA created are paying for that cumulative 20-year Federal investment. That is a record that few Federal Government program investments can match if any can match it.

Nonetheless 4 years ago, when we started out to review this very successful program, the gentleman from Pennsylvania and I vowed that we would rewrite, and reshape, and refocus the EDA Program to narrow its application; to make it a more highly targeted program, and we have done so. This was without regard to partisan considerations because the views of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER], the views of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT], of our former colleague, the ranking member on the full Public Works Committee, Mr. Don Clausen, contributed heavily to the thought process that went into reshaping the EDA Program. The gentleman from New York [Mr. NOWAK], who contributed an enormous amount of time; our colleagues throughout the Appalachian region, together we rewrote this program which is a claim that few committees in this body can make. That is, to take a very favored Federal Government program and narrow it down, trim its sails, and focus its resources, which we did, and the result is H.R. 10, the National Development Investment Act, which has twice passed this body by overwhelming votes. Those votes are testimony in themselves to the bipartisan nature of this bill, to the intermingling of ideas, to produce a result that will benefit, even more effectively than before, the distressed areas of this country.

People who are out of work, communities that have lost economic base, do not look for a handout; they want a hand up. That is what this legislation will do. I urge your support for the National Development Investment Act. The National Development Investment Act would reauthorize in modified and improved form the programs now administered by the Economic Development Administration. It would also authorize the finish-up program proposed by the Appalachian Governors for the Appalachian Regional Commission.

Mr. Chairman, this bill has twice before passed this body, by overwhelming bipartisan margins: by 281 to 95 in the 97th Congress, and by 306 to 113 in the 98th Congress. I have complete confidence that it will receive equal support this year. I hope also that the other body will this year appreciate the value of and need for this program, and act favorably on it.

H.R. 10 emphasizes the concern on the part of the Public Works and Transportation Subcommittee on Economic Development, and the full committee, for those areas of the country, such as my own district in northeastern Minnesota, which have not benefited from the current economic recovery, and will need continued assistance as they try to diversify their economies and rejoin the Nation's economic mainstream.

This is not a quick-fix jobs bill. It is not a short-term or miracle cure for economically distressed areas. It is a program for stable, long-term, sustained economic growth and permanent, private sector job creation in the Nation's most depressed areas.

It will lay the groundwork for economic recovery at the local level. Our country's economic strength has always been measured by the soundness of the sum of its parts. This bill addresses the most distressed of those parts, our hardest pressed communities, those which do not have the minimum resources, the critical mass, needed to begin the ascent to economic self-sufficiency.

Title I of this bill, the National Development Investment Act, would establish a successor agency to the Economic Development Administration [EDA]. The programs are similar to those under EDA: grants for public capital facilities, loans to small businesses, and technical assistance and planning grants.

But we have modernized and updated these programs to conform to the very positive changes that have been wrought at the State and local levels. States, multicounty agencies, and local communities have, over the years, in large part thanks to EDA's planning assistance, developed substantial economic development capacity, and are ready and willing to take over this role from the Federal Government. H.R. 10 recognizes this capacity, and provides its grantees with the funds, on a 50/50 matching basis, to chart and pursue their own courses toward economic growth and development.

It sharply curtails the percentage of our country's population which would be eligible for assistance: down to 40 percent of the country, plus those communities which are suddenly faced with the loss of a major employer, either a military base or other Federal facility, or a company which has or is about to close its doors.

Title II would put into legislative language the finish-up program proposed for the Appalachian Regional Commission by its member Governors. This is a modest and pragmatic plan of action to sustain economic recovery in a major region of America which, like my northeastern Minnesota district, has not been able to keep pace with the progress of other parts of this country.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation focuses on the economic development needs of the 1980's: on private sector jobs; on small business, which studies have shown to be the major source of jobs; and on repair and rehabilitation of the Nation's deteriorating infrastructure, as well as on construction of new buildings, facilities, and on the public capital that may be required.

It is a good bill, a sound bill, and a needed bill that concentrates assistance on the economic problems of those remaining distressed areas of the country which genuinely need outside assistance.

I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KANJORSKI].

Mr. KANJORSKI. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank you for this opportunity to speak in support of H.R. 10, the National Development Investment Act. The two categorical programs in this act, the Economic Development Administration and the Appalachian Regional Commission, are vitally important to the continued economic development of our Nation's depressed urban and rural areas.

The Appalachian Regional Commission, which this year celebrated its 20th anniversary, is an example of a program whose benefits cannot only be measured in dollars and cents but also in personal success stories. I represent a seven county area in north-central and northeastern Pennsylvania that is part of Appalachia and as a result I have personally witnessed the progress made through the ARC's industrial development projects, the health and social service programs, and the much needed infrastructure projects.

Over the last 20 years, the $58 million allocated by the ARC to my seven-county area has leveraged almost $150 million in additional direct project funds. This $205 million has been a major factor in creating thousands of new employment opportunities, thereby raising the region's overall economic stability, standard of living, education levels, transportation system and health-care facilities. In addition to the $205 million in direct project funds, these moneys have help to generate tens of millions of new investment dollars throughout Appalachia.

The Economic Development Administration has been an integral part of the revitalization of numerous distressed communities. The EDA was a major factor in the redevelopment of downtown Wilkes-Barre after the devastation caused by Hurricane Agnes in 1972. The EDA through its public works, direct loans and technical assistance programs continues to provide the necessary capital for new business startups, company expansion projects, infrastructure development and the creation and retention of thousands of jobs each year. Earlier this year, the EDA committed $1 million to complete a secondary sewage treatment facility in Berwick, PA, which will result in the creation of 950 new jobs.

Mr. Chairman, unemployment in my district is averaging some 13 percent which no significant reduction expected. Programs such as the Appalachian Regional Commission and the Economic Development Administration are two of the few tools available to us to maintain and improve our industrial and employment situation. Those that would eliminate these vital programs demonstrate a callous disregard for the well-being of millions of American citizens now living in depressed urban and rural communities throughout this Nation.

These programs are so important to the present and future economic development of not only my district but numerous other depressed communities, that I support the full funding of H.R. 10. In good conscience I cannot ask my constituents, the local business community and the local governments to accept additional budgetary reductions in programs that have spurred jobs, new business opportunities, better health and medical facilities, improved transportation systems and raised the overall standard of living, while being cost efficient to the Federal Government.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend the committee for their diligent work on H.R. 10 and would urge my colleagues to join with me in support of this important industrial development and job creating legislation.

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALLON].

Mr. TALLON. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 10. Like so many rural States across the Nation, my State of South Carolina has not enjoyed the economic recovery realized by other areas. The need for economic development assistance is real.

The Federal Government is in a unique position to foster long-term economic growth in every part of the United States. This legislation relies on the private sector to create the jobs, but calls on the public sector to help rebuild local infrastructure and assist development.

Assistance is directed only to those areas not sharing in the benefits of our expanding economy. Furthermore, all grants under this act must be part of a comprehensive development strategy with specific economic objectives.

All 10 counties in the Sixth District of South Carolina, which I represent, would qualify for assistance. In the past year, over $350,000 in Federal grants were made available to my district for economic development.

Mr. Chairman, I know that the program we authorize today will make a difference. I urge my colleagues' support of H.R. 10 to help bring each community into the mainstream of economic life.

I thank the gentleman for his leadership and fine work.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time, 3 minutes, to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

Mr. GEKAS. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I take my turn now in supporting the legislation that is in front of us. It seems to me, Members of the committee and colleagues, that for all purposes we are really confirming what the Congress has already said with regard to the issues in this particular piece of legislation. We ought to be supporting this legislation by a unanimous vote for a historical set of reasons. No. 1, more recently in the history of this legislation, the budget resolution itself which reestablished the theme of what we are about, and albeit it reduced funding by 20 percent, said in effect that we want to continue the program with a pruned down and modernization effort that was put into the new bill that is in front of us. That is why I am a little bit in disagreement with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE], who spoke previously on the floor, who is worried about, as I am, about renewed efforts that we must take to reduce the deficit.

For the time being, we have spoken on that subject. The budget resolution was supposed to be, and for our purposes today, was broad based fair application of reduction of funding for programs across the board for which this Congress is responsible. We acknowledge that. We take our lumps, as we say in the vernacular, with respect to this program and we come to the floor today to confirm that budget resolution.

In my remaining time, I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER] if he would consult with me for a moment of dialog just so I can get some of my thinking straight, and I would yield to him for that purpose.

If we did nothing today and withdrew this legislation from the floor, God forbid we want it to pass, the programs would continue, albeit in their similar themes as already propounded on the books today. Is that correct?

Mr. CLINGER. The gentleman is absolutely correct, and I would like to respond just for a moment to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE], who had some legitimate criticisms of the existing programs. He talked about the loan program. He talked about other aspects.

The point is, if we do nothing today, the program would continue because the appropriations process is entrained. We would still be dealing with the old legislation, which means that the very parts that he was attacking would still be in existence.

What this bill does is to address those concerns, get rid of the abuses that have been in assistance, targets it more directly, and therefore makes a better program. The money is going to be there. Let us make sure we spend it efficiently.

Mr. GEKAS. That is exactly what I wanted to bring out; that we are supporting a modernization of a program. We are also supporting its part in the deficit reduction program, and we ask for unanimous vote in support of H.R. 10.

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Chairman, to close out the debate on our side, I yield the remaining time to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ALEXANDER], a great contributor to this program in the past.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ALEXANDER] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 10, the National Development Investment Act, and urge its passage. This bill is identical to the bill of the same name and number which passed with an overwhelming majority in the House last year. It is similar to a bill the House passed with nearly a 3-to-1 margin in 1982.

My support of this bill is rooted in my personal knowledge that the economic development program is a valuable contribution to our Nation. The provisions in this bill have been carefully formulated on the information the Committee on Public Works and Transportation and its Subcommittee on Economic Development have gathered during extensive hearings and study conducted in the past 5 years.

And, I am convinced that this proposal before us is a worthwhile successor to the Public Works and Economic Development Act. Federal seed money invested through the programs provided for under that act, as amended, have created or saved more than 2 million private sector jobs since these programs began in 1965. They have leveraged billions of dollars in private sector investment in job creation. The workers who hold those more than 2 million jobs pay enough in taxes every 18 months to repay the total Economic Development Administration Program investment made since 1965.

The partnership created through these programs, between the Federal, State, and local governments has meant the difference between real job opportunities and joblessness for millions of Americans.

It has been particularly vital to the efforts of rural communities, small towns and mid-sized cities to generate private sector work for their residents.

Just this last week I was privileged to take part in the groundbreaking for an industry that will bring 400 jobs to an industrial park in the small town of Trumann, AR. EDA through its economic development programs invested $576,000 in that industrial park. Holders of the jobs Parker-Hannifin will bring to that park will earn an estimated annual payroll of $3,328,000. In 1 year the estimated tax payments they will make will be $655,600—more than enough to repay EDA's investment.

In order words, EDA investments are moneymakers for the Federal Government.

Trumann is just one of the communities throughout Arkansas which have benefited from EDA seed money investments. Between 1965 and 1984, EDA invested $165,386,249 job-producing dollars into 447 Arkansas projects. These investments generated 79,630 private sector jobs, with an annual payroll of $645,546,340, and annual tax payments of $129,605,012.

The share of these EDA investments and results in Arkansas' First District, which I represent, was—$44.1 million EDA dollars; 16,270 private sector jobs; $135.4 million in annual payroll; and, $27.1 million in annual individual income tax payments.

In other words, the 16,270 holders of the EDA seed money investment, private sector jobs pay more than enough in taxes every 2 years to more than repay the total investment EDA has made in the last 20 years.

Critics claim that economic development programs do not spur private sector job generation. Rarely, though, do the critics support their negative rhetoric with data such as I have provided today, and that my colleagues can provide.

In addition to such data, I believe it is worthwhile to consider the results of a 2-year General Accounting Office econometric study of EDA Programs. This study was titled "Estimated Employment Effects of Federal Economic Development Programs." It was released 1 year ago. The study covered the period of 1974 through 1978. In it GAO states:

> The estimates from this (econometric) model suggest that these programs did create jobs between the mid and late 1970s. Our results also show evidence that:
> Most jobs were created in the manufacturing sector of the economy * * *. Among the various grant categories, public works grants were the most effective in creating jobs; grants were most effective in creating jobs in states with low employment growth.

The GAO study also found that:

> A $500,000 increase in economic development grants would initially be associated with 216 additional jobs at an estimated cost of $2,315 per job per year * * *.

And that—

> In the long run, the number of new jobs would be reduced to 171, at a estimated cost of $2,924 per job * * *.

The bill before us today tightens eligibility criteria to emphasize assistance where it is most needed, can do the most good, and where local governments and private enterprise are most strongly committed to the economic development goals. These are reasonable and rational requirements.

EDA Programs have always emphasized a strong Federal-local partnership with the economic development project decisions being generated at the local level.

This bill provides strong encouragement to local and State governments to pursue and encourage diversification of their economies. This, too, is important as insurance against the fatal shocks which can come from distress and depression in a single sector of the economy.

This bill promotes a commitment on the part of State and local governments to a continuing, long-term practice of pursuing economic development. This is vital to creating, maintaining, and increasing private sector job opportunities across the Nation.

I have some concerns about some portions of this bill.

In the past two decades, the local governments and community leaders have used the Federal-local partnership to develop and maintain a vital, healthy, strong system of substate economic development districts. I hope that the committee would bring us a bill which would ensure that this system continues its essential and invaluable service. Having reviewed the provisions of the bill and committee report, I believe its intention that these districts continue their work is unequivocal, although I would have liked stronger provision on this. It is my hope that the implementation of the bill's provisions will follow the intent of the bill.

A vitally important element in the success of EDA programs has been the agency's hardworking, committed, knowledgeable field staff. They are known as economic development representatives—EDR's for short. While I would prefer bill language on this, I am encouraged that the committee's intent that the field structure remain in place is clearly stated—more than once—in the report. It is my hope that the implementation of the administrative provisions ensures that the EDR system remains in place and working.

Our Government system is, as it should be, one of consensus making, of compromising to build the best programs possible to serve the interests of the greatest number of our people as possible. Thus, rarely is everyone of the 435 Members of this House going to be satisfied with every one of the provisions in any bill before us. H.R. 10, the National Development Investment Act, is that kind of bill. It serves the interests of every American who is interested in strengthening our economy through private sector job generation. It is a bill worthy of the support of every Member of this House, I urge its passage.

Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 10, the National Development Investment Act. This legislation was unanimously reported out of the Public Works Committee on May 15, and I am proud to have participated in this action which salvaged economic development programs from the administration's budget ax.

I can think of no more shortsighted idea than to phase out a program of proven success that has been effective in creating jobs in economically distressed areas. The Economic Development Administration has such a track record throughout the country and in the U.S. Virgin Islands. In my district, EDA has funded a wide variety of projects ranging from industrial parks to schools, to vocational training centers, to planning assistance and targeting studies on our key industry of tourism. In every case EDA's financial and technical assistance was invaluable, if not in fact the determining factor in the success of each project. In a small, isolated district such as mine, our economic future depends on diversification and training, and EDA is helping us to achieve that goal.

Given the difficulty that any isolated district, particularly one like the Virgin Islands, has in attracting industry and investment, and availability of EDA assistance is critical. There are few Federal agencies capable of taking the broad, long range economic view so necessary to sound development, and few that have been given the tools and the authority broad enough to accomplish that goal.

In this legislation before us today, Congress is reaffirming its belief in the EDA philosophy. For several years now the administration has tried to phase or wipe out EDA Programs. In this legislation, Congress will say: No, that is not in the best interest of the country. I wholeheartedly concur and the people of the U.S. Virgin Islands agree. On their behalf, I would like to commend the chairman of the Subcommittee on Economic Development, Mr. NOWAK, and my distinguished colleague and chairman, Mr. HOWARD, for their commitment and all their effort in preserving these important economic development programs. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. MCEWEN. Mr. Chairman, it is a pleasure to express my strong support for H.R. 10, the National Development Investment Act. Four years ago, as a member of the Economic Development Subcommittee, I had the opportunity to work on this vital measure which addresses critical development and job needs in the areas of our Nation most in need of our help. The House approved the legislation in the 97th Congress and again in the 98th. Now the bill is before the House once more and I am hopeful that this will be the year it is passed and signed into law.

As an original cosponsor of H.R. 10, and as member of the Public Works and Transportation Committee, it has been my privilege to work on framing this legislation to meet two important goals: Extension and modification of programs under the Economic Development Administration and the implementation of a finish-up program for the Appalachian Regional Commission.

It should be noted at the outset that both the Economic Development Administration and the Appalachian Regional Commission have been helping communities in distressed regions of our Nation for a long time, and they have established fine records in that regard.

Both agencies have filled a great need, and that need in some areas of the country continues. Those areas will need continued help as they seek to diversify their economies in order to join mainstream America.

Their problems vary. For some, their local public facility infrastructure is falling apart, making economic expansion virtually impossible. Some communities have suffered the shock of losing major industries and hundreds of jobs. For them, economic adjustments and diversification is essential but financially beyond their reach without some measure of Federal help.

H.R. 10 incorporates the finish-up program proposed by the Appalachian Governors for the Appalachian Regional Commission. That proposal calls for phaseout of the ARC by 1990 and the completion of its priority highway program by 1992. States served by the Commission are in agreement with the phaseout schedule for both ARC highway and nonhighway programs.

The ARC was created to help turn around the impoverished Appalachian area by establishing programs to improve literacy, health care, income, and the basic infrastructure upon which all development is based.

Certainly the programs of the ARC have breathed new life in the economically deprived areas of Appalachia, and we are making certain in the legislation that the phaseout of this program is a gradual one.

Programs under EDA would be reauthorized through fiscal year 1988. However, H.R. 10 is more than an EDA reauthorization bill. The committee has been concerned with widespread complaints over the grant program's broad eligibility requirements and the excessive number of defaults in the Agency's loan program.

Those concerns are reflected in major changes provided in the bill for both problem areas. New eligibility criteria in the legislation would reduce from 80 percent to about 44 percent that portion of the country now qualified for assistance as a distressed area.

The loan program would be restructured so that grants would be made for the establishment of locally administered revolving loan funds to provide seed capital for small businesses or to retain existing businesses. I believe that this program can best be administered and monitored at the local level.

In the past, EDA has been called a sacred cow. This is not without some justification. Over the past 20 years, the original purpose of the EDA has been lost. When EDA was established, its purpose was to help promote long-term economic development to areas with severe unemployment. However, as the EDA Program grew, its scope grew as well. Soon, the requirements to be considered a "distressed area" were broadened so as to include 80 percent of the entire Nation. It quickly became apparent that EDA had outgrown its original intent and therefore lost much of its effectiveness and support.

The legislation before us today streamlines EDA to allow the original intent of the program to be realized once again. Under this new program, only areas with chronic unemployment, or especially low incomes would be eligible for assistance. In addition, an area could qualify temporarily if there was a dramatic loss in jobs such as the closing of a major plant.

H.R. 10's overall purpose is to provide a program for stable, long-term sustained economic growth and permanent, private sector job creation in the Nation's economically distressed areas.

If enacted into law, it will, in my judgment, lay the groundwork for providing effective economic revitalization at the local level, where lasting recovery must begin.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, today I rise in support of H.R. 10, the National Development Investment Act.

Contained in this legislation is funding for the Appalachian Regional Commission [ARC], which has proved to be a productive partner to the States, local governments, and the private sector in my State of Mississippi and throughout the entire Appalachian region. That partnership has helped our people help themselves.

We have seen the development of roads, water, and sewage systems, education and health facilities and other projects that have helped improve the quality of life for the people served by the ARC.

Jobs have been created, poverty and illiteracy have been reduced, better housing and better highways have been built as a result of the efforts and opportunities made available through the Appalachian Regional Commission. This work has helped bring the Appalachian region more into the mainstream of our national economy.

Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the National Development Investment Act, H.R. 10. This bill reauthorizes the Economic Development Administration [EDA] and the Appalachian Regional Commission [ARC], which were established to provide aid to economically distressed areas of the country through the development of industrial facilities and the improvement of basic infrastructure—the real key to economic development in this Nation.

No one can deny, Mr. Chairman, that for many areas of the country, there has been no economic recovery: recession and joblessness continue. In my own State of Pennsylvania, for example, unemployment is still above the national average. In May, 31,000 Pennsylvanians lost their jobs.

The Northeast and Midwest region of the country was particularly hard-hit by the recent recessions, and it is this region that is also the oldest in the Nation. Consequently, its cities and public works are aging as well and the deterioration of its infrastructure is strangling our economy, costing us jobs as industries move to foreign countries.

Unless we take action soon, many more jobs will be lost, communities will be further devastated, and hopes for long-term economic recovery will be dashed forever. Economic growth, and the resulting job creation, is simply not possible unless we have the basic infrastructure to support such growth.

Yet while there is increasing awareness in this country of the importance of sound infrastructure to jobs and a strong economy, we have seen under attack over the past 5 years the very tools that are vital in rebuilding our Nation. With the President's proposed elimination of the deduction for State and local taxes and with Federal support for Amtrak, mass transit, UDAG's and general revenue sharing under attack, it is difficult to imagine how we will be able to meet the clear needs that are before us.

And in fact, the administration has repeatedly proposed to eliminate another tool for infrastructure improvement that we are discussing today; namely, the Economic Development Administration. I think that the reauthorization of the EDA is absolutely vital not only to Pennsylvania and the Northeast and Midwest, but for distressed areas throughout the Nation.

This bill represents a balanced, fair attempt to help distressed communities leverage private capital and plan development strategies. The Public Works and Transportation Committee, on which I am proud to serve, has tightened up the program to address some of the criticisms that have been levelled at the EDA. In addition, the committee will offer a floor amendment to limit spending in the bill to the fiscal year 1985 level, which balances our economic development needs with a responsible approach to the crisis posed by the Federal budget deficit.

H.R. 10 will reauthorize the EDA for 3 years and the ARC for 5 years. The bill provides that EDA grants must be matched by a 50-percent contribution by local interests, meaning that projects will be backed by the communities in which they are located. In addition, this aid will be contingent on the adoption by localities of a comprehensive community development plan. Finally, H.R. 10 eliminates long-term eligibility for EDA grants. In the future, communities will be required to include the most recent data on distress in each application; this will guarantee that economic development aid goes to communities that need it most.

The community development plan, known as development investment strategies, are the heart of the new legislation. Applicant communities must analyze their economic problems; inventory other available Federal, State, local and private resources and past investments; and present a long-term schedule for approaching economic self-sufficiency.

The Secretary of Commerce is directed to evaluate the strategies and base his or her project selection on the basis of greatest potential for success as well as on a basis of need. The priority is to spend these scarce dollars where they will have the most impact.

Mr. Chairman, the Economic Development Administration has been of particular importance in my State of Pennsylvania. Since it was created in 1965, the EDA has obligated over $94 million in vital development funds in my State. In distressed areas, EDA funding is available to help redevelopment efforts. Over the past several years, the EDA has helped communities across Pennsylvania. To note a few examples, EDA funding has been used:

In Philadelphia, to build port facilities, develop export programs, and rehabilitate the Frankford Arsenal; in Altoona, to develop an industrial park and help the local redevelopment authority with road construction; in Scranton, to replace a bridge; in Luzerne, for new sewage construction; in Hazelton, for improvements to the water system; in Jeanette, for sewer reconstruction; in Johnstown, for general infrastructure improvements; in Pittsburgh, a variety of planning grants to the city of Pittsburgh and the Allegheny County Development Department; in Allentown, for bridge improvement; in Lewisburg, for a planning grant for export develpment; in Williamsport, for storm sewers; in Uniontown, for a feasibility study for a foreign trade zone; in Erie, for a grant to Girard Borough for water system improvements.

This is a good bill, Mr. Chairman, it helps us keep the tools we need in our economic development tool chest. It allows us to continue to aid economically distressed communities in a fiscally responsible manner. I urge the passage of H.R. 10.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, I would first like to thank Mr. HOWARD and Mr. OBERSTAR for their commitment to H.R. 10, the National Development Investment Act. This worthwhile and necessary bill was unanimously reported out of the Public Works and Transportation Committee for good reason.

This House attempted in the 97th and the 98th Congresses to enact this measure, but both times our efforts were thwarted by the other body, which took no action after the House bills were passed. This legislation, if enacted, will provide aid to economically depressed and distressed areas for necessary community projects and facilities. For example, in my area, funds were made available through the Economic Development Administration for much needed work on fire stations, jails, schools, and many other community projects.

Since fiscal year 1982, neither the Economic Development Administration nor the Appalachian Regional Commission has been authorized, although both have continued to operate.

The need for assistance to economically depressed areas is clear and indisputable; this House has several times shown its support for regional development programs. I urge my colleagues now to support this bill, which authorizes funds in fiscal years 1986 through 1988 for an economic development program to replace the public grant program now being used. This authorization bill is necessary to ensure the continuation of economic aid to areas in need of development assistance.

H.R. 10 represents the third attempt to authorize the National Development Investment Act. We must act swiftly and with resolve to pass this bill and to finally persuade the other body to do so also. Congress can no longer afford to act in an ad hoc manner when it comes to authorizing funds for development assistance. This legislation must be passed to facilitate the timely allocation of needed funds for projects such as water and sewage systems, education and health facilities, ports, roads, and grants for private economic development projects.

To ensure that only the most distressed areas receive aid, stringent eligibility requirements are included in H.R. 10. Also, a detailed development strategy must be submitted to demonstrate that the area's particular economic problems have been analyzed with other available resources in mind. Thus, one can be reassured that priority for development aid will be given to those areas that are most needy and that exhibit a realistic improvement plan.

The National Development Investment Act is a sound piece of legislation that will facilitate the authorization and appropriation of funds to areas in need of development assistance. I wholeheartedly support H.R. 10 and I strongly urge my colleagues also to support this worthwhile bill.

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to rise in support of the National Development Investment Act, H.R. 10. We should not forget the purpose of this legislation. The Economic Development Administration [EDA] and the Appalachian Regional Commission [ARC] were established to provide aid to economically distressed areas of the country through the development of public facilities such as roads, ports, community water and sewage systems, and education and health facilities, and through grants for private economic development projects. Despite the valuable nature of the programs, the administration has continually opposed the continuation of both EDA and ARC. Throughout the extensive hearings on this legislation, State and local government organizations have stressed the necessity for continued Federal support to promote economic development. It is clear from the committee's witnesses that whether one is concerned about health care in rural Appalachia or the retention of small businesses in Liberty City in Dade County, FL, that the Federal Government has a responsibility to aid localities in preserving and/or enhancing the economic life of these communities.

The committee has addressed critics' charges of overlapping resources with a targeting approach to areas of economic distress which are clearly defined by three distinct criteria. In addition, funding priority will be given to applicants showing a high ratio of private investment to public funding would receive the highest priority. The bill's requirement that an extensive development investment strategy be submitted for grant awards is a further inducement for maximizing economic resources. I am particularly pleased that the committee's bill again included my amendment requiring minority business enterprise participation in the development investment strategy.

Mr. Chairman, the cities and towns of America continue to need their Federal Government's support to ensure economic self-sufficiency. We have an obligation to respond to this need. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 10 to retain two agencies, EDA and ARC, who have more than proven their effectiveness in assisting local governments with their economic problems.

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 10, the National Development Investment Act. I would first like to take this opportunity to commend Mr. NOWAK and his subcommittee for their commitment to creating a thoughtful, comprehensive piece of legislation. Additionally, I wish to commend the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. OBERSTAR] for his leadership and dedication to this bill, which addresses a difficult subject with vision and innovation. Finally, I would like to congratulate the full committee for its rallying, in a truly bipartisan manner, to present a viable solution to a national problem.

I am pleased to be a cosponsor of a bill that recognizes both our responsibility to assist the Nation's economically depressed areas, and our responsibility to spend the Nation's money wisely. Let us keep those parts of the Economic Development Administration that have provided valuable support to needy communities in the past and refine those parts that do not meet the initial goals. By redefining eligibility requirements and spending limits, H.R. 10 allows us to do just that.

During its years of existence, EDA has helped the Second District of West Virginia in many ways. By providing operating funds to the regional planning and development councils in the State, EDA ensures coordinated economic development planning, as well as the evolution of long-term development strategies. By providing funding for the construction of infrastructure to industrial parks in both Berkeley and Greenbrier Counties, EDA has helped to attract the investment of the private sector which, in turn, will create much needed jobs. For this reason, I support title I of H.R. 10.

The Second District of West Virginia has been the beneficiary of many Appalachian Regional Commission programs; from the construction of major roadways to the support of an infant mortality reduction program. There are four counties in my district that fall into the distressed county category. In these counties basic services, such as clean drinking water and sanitary sewage disposal, could be considered as luxuries; yet they are now slowly being provided as a result of ARC funding. For example, in Pendleton County, a water system is just now ready to go to construction—the result of combining local and Federal dollars in the spirit of cooperation that this bill wishes to expand.

There is no question that Appalachia still lags behind the rest of the Nation in recovery. Although great strides have been made toward correcting this situation, we have not achieved complete socio-economic parity for Appalachia. Our job is not yet done. For this reason, I support title II of H.R. 10.

This bill befits the philosophies and needs of the 1980's. By offering seed money for revolving loan funds, it acknowledges the role of the Federal Government in helping its neediest communities achieve economic self-sufficiency. By giving top priority to those applications with a high ratio of private investment to public funding, it encourages the participation of the private sector. By setting aside money for technical assistance and feasibility studies, it rewards those communities that seek to help themselves through thoughtful planning and wise investment strategies. By requiring a master economic development plan with each application, it correctly identifies the need for and the desirability of long-range planning. By setting strict eligibility criteria, it assures that only the communities most in need receive funding.

I want the people of the Second District of West Virginia to be able to remain in the communities that they so love. I want them to have jobs in their communities. I want them to have access to good medical care in their communities. I want them to have basic water and sewer services in their communities. Most of all, I want them to be able to share in the economic revival and unique partnership that the National Development Investment Act would create. For this reason, I strongly support H.R. 10 and urge my fellow members to vote for passage of this innovative measure.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for general debate has expired.

Pursuant to House Resolution 223 and the order of the House today, immediately after the enacting clause is read it shall be in order to consider the amendments printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 11, 1985, as modified, by and if offered by Representative HOWARD or his designee, which shall be considered en bloc and shall be in order, although amending portions of the bill not yet read for amendment shall not be subject to amendment but shall be debatable for 20 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent of the amendments and a Member opposed thereto.

The Clerk will read the enacting clause.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. HOWARD

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. HOWARD:

Page 18, strike out line 8 and all that follows through "1986," on line 9 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

$125,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and such sums as may be necessary for the fiscal years ending

Mr. HOWARD (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD] will be recognized for 10 minutes and a Member opposed will be recognized for 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, these amendments would reduce authorized funding levels to bring them into conformity with the budget resolution as passed on August 1.

This is a below-the-freeze amendment. It is an amendment which was agreed upon in principle by our committee at the time of our committee markup on this bill.

Very simply, as we have done in all other authorizing bills considered by the House in this session with the exception of the Water Quality Renewal Act of 1985, the committee amendment would reduce the funding levels in H.R. 10 by bringing the fiscal year 1986 funding authorized by the bill, as introduced, in line with the funding levels proposed by the budget resolution for the EDA and ARC programs. It actually reduces authorized funding levels 20 percent below the total funds appropriated for each of these programs for fiscal year 1985.

Total authorizations for title I, the National Development Investment Act, would drop from $530 million authorized in the bill to $182.8 million for fiscal year 1986 and would be as follows: $125 million for development investment grants; $35 million for investment strategy, planning, evaluation, and demonstration grants; and $22.8 million for administrative expenses.

Authorizations for the Appalachian finish up programs would be reduced from a total of $319.9 million to $136.17 million for fiscal year 1986. This is allocated as follows: $79.5 million for the highway program, $39.2 million for nonhighway programs and $2.3 million for salaries and expenses.

The total fiscal year 1986 cost of the bill would be $303.8 million.

Authorizations for subsequent fiscal years—through fiscal year 1988 for the National Development Investment Act, through fiscal year 1990 for the Appalachian Nonhighway Program and through fiscal year 1992 for the Appalachian Highway Program—are authorized for "such sums as necessary."

Mr. Chairman, the committee remains convinced there is a continuing need for the basic development tools contained in this bill and for the Federal Government as a partner in promoting economic growth in distressed communities of the Nation.

The decision to propose this committee amendment reducing funding for these important programs reflects the deep concern of our members over the size of the Federal deficit and its negative impact upon the overall economy. We believe this amendment is appropriate in view of the need to reduce Federal spending to achieve a sound fiscal position for our country.

Mr. Chairman, I urge support for the committee's amendment.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, as an unwavering supporter of the Economic Development Administration since its inception and as an original supporter of H.R. 10 to amend the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965 and the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965, I rise in support of the measure.

This program has been of more consistent assistance to my area than any other federally sponsored program of its kind.

Over the years as a result of the EDA programs, we have been successful in developing the Port of Brownsville, in locating the largest and finest foreign trade zone in the United States in McAllen, TX, and in bringing water to thousands of deprived migrant workers who had been accustomed to nothing but outdoor plumbing before the Military Highway Water Supply Corporation was established. This is to mention but just a few of the contributions the EDA has made to my area. There are many, many more.

The EDA has been around for 20 years, and I hope it will continue functioning as the mainstay of economic development in this country for a long time to come. This one Government agency more than any other has helped to revitalize rural America, and it has done so without scandal and with a well-administered budget. It has been my experience that moneys injected into the EDA programs have been tax dollars well-spent.

There are Members still serving on the Committee on Public Works and Transportation who will remember that in the past I have gone before the committee to plead for the retention of the Economic Development Administration. The committee always responded sympathetically to my overtures. I would urge my colleagues to show the same consistent assistance in preserving an agency as invaluable as the Economic Development Administration.

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 10, a bill to amend the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965 and the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965.

Many communities across the Nation are confronted with high unempolyment, financial instability and a shortage of available capital. Some of our regions, counties and communities are in such poor economic condition that even at times when government spending for social insurance programs has increased, the level of poverty has sharply risen.

We are a nation of regions, interdependent on one another for a strong national economy. A strong national economy depends on the cooperation of self-sufficient and productive local and regional economies—economies that have some stability yet sufficient flexibility to deal with the technological and structural changes which accompany and facilitate national growth.

H.R. 10 is designed to permit the Federal Government, in cooperation with the States to assist distressed local and regional communities to take actions to achieve lasting economic improvement and prosperity. Under the act, new local employment opportunities would be created by developing and expanding public works projects and other facilities and resources. The bill specifically assists distressed communities by helping them to construct public facilities and improve the basic framework necessary to support development. Assistance is continued by facilitating economic adjustment, by promoting economic diversification, by effectively responding to sudden and severe local economic dislocations and by encouraging and supporting local economic planning. This legislation will attempt to provide some relief by making funds available for business expansion and retention through locally administered revolving loan funds.

Economic progress is likely to occur where all levels of government and the private sector are firmly and actively united in a long-term commitment to achieve economic self-sufficiency. What particularly appeals to me about this legislation is that it encourages cooperation among communities in different States and urges, where such communities desire, their respective governments to bring their own resources to bear in support of these local interstate efforts. It also encourages the cooperation of various jurisdictions, such as associations of counties and/or of communities, where various units of local government agree to pool their resources to the mutual benefit of all. This attempts to coordinate all available funding sources to promote economic development.

Mr. Chairman, while I am aware of our need to reduce the Federal budget and to reduce the growth of Federal spending I feel that legislation of this nature will lead to reduction of the national debt. It has been reported that the Federal money provided by these programs has generated billions of dollars in private capital and returned billions more in taxes annually to Federal, State and local treasuries.

I therefore ask my colleagues to join in support of H.R. 10, a bill that is beneficial to the economic development of this Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD].

The amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill, as modified by amendments offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD] which have just been adopted, shall be considered as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the 5-minute rule by titles, and each title shall be considered as having been read.

The Clerk will designate title I.

The text of title I is as follows:

TITLE I—NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT

SEC. 101. The Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965 is amended to read as follows: "That this Act may be cited as the 'National Development Investment Act'.

"TITLE I—DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT ASSISTANCE

"FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

"SEC. 101. (a) The Congress reaffirms the proposition that this Nation's economic strength is derived from the health of its regions, States, and local communities, both rural and urban, and that national interest dictates the maintenance and enhancement of economic vitality at the subnational level.

"(b) Congress also recognizes that economic conditions and political relationships change and that legislation must address these changes.

"(c) Congress further affirms that this legislation is designed to make government more efficient and responsive by supporting the following principles: leave to private initiative all the functions that citizens can perform privately; use the level of government closest to the community for all public functions it can handle; utilize cooperative intergovernmental agreements where appropriate to attain economical performance and popular approval; reserve national action for residual participation where State and local governments are not fully adequate and for the continuing responsibilities that only the National Government can undertake, such as monitoring the manner in which Federal funds are used in order to ensure the carrying out of the activities for which assistance is given.

"(d) The private sector remains the ultimate generator of employment and economic growth, but the public sector must reverse decades of infrastructure neglect as a necessary concomitant to private business stability and expansion. State and local governments now have a greater capacity than in previous decades to direct their own destiny, in part because of past Federal efforts; this new capacity must be incorporated in any new legislation at the national level. America's increased involvement in international trade has brought both challenges to some industries, and opportunities for others; these challenges and opportunities must be addressed. Capital shortages will for the foreseeable future curtail the Nation's ability to meet public and private investment needs; it is therefore imperative to marshal the resources of all levels of government and the private sector to create the critical mass of capital and other assets needed to generate growth. Finally, there is a continued need to assist in adjustment of change, which is the only permanent feature of our national, regional, and local economies.

"(e) In recognition of these constants and changes, Congress finds it an appropriate role for the Federal Government to foster the coordination of investments between the public and private sectors and to promote long-term economic development partnerships at the State and local levels, in both rural and urban areas.

"(f) The purposes of this Act are therefore—

"(1) to establish a framework within which Federal, State, and local governments, and the private sectors, in urban and rural areas, can combine their resources to achieve economic development in all parts of the Nation;

"(2) to help create a strong investment climate which promotes the expansion and retention of job opportunities for local residents; and removes economic barriers in local areas which impede the free market forces;

"(3) to build, rehabilitate, and repair public infrastructure where it is inadequate to support and encourage private investment in the area;

"(4) to recognize and rely upon improved State and local governments' capacity to direct their own destinies;

"(5) to link public and private funds to foster coordination of resources between these sectors, in order to leverage the maximum investment in the long-term economic vitality of all areas;

"(6) to facilitate local and regional economic adjustment and economic development diversification in a changing national economy, by assisting State and local efforts to foresee adverse economic changes; to prevent their consequences where possible; to respond as necessary; and to achieve economic self-sufficiency;

"(7) to assist in relieving capital shortages and fill local credit gaps which impede private business startups and expansion;

"(8) to assist communities and industries to respond to the opportunities and challenges of a world increasingly knit together by international trade; and

"(9) to enhance the economic development of Indian reservations, pursuant to the Federal Government's trust responsibilities to Indian tribes.

"ELIGIBLE ACTIVITIES

"SEC. 102. (a) Upon application of a State, economic development district, unit of local government, Indian tribe, or private or public nonprofit organization established for economic development purposes which meets the eligibility criteria established by this Act, the Secretary is authorized to make a grant for a portion of the cost, as provided in section 108, of projects submitted in a development investment strategy. Development investment assistance may be for the following purposes—

"(1) the construction, repair, rehabilitation and improvement of public facilities, including the acquisition of land and other public works improvements to encourage and support private development;

"(2) revolving loan funds to promote the establishment and growth of small businesses and to retain indigenous firms and entrepreneurs which contribute to the creation, retention, and expansion of private sector jobs;

"(3) to conduct feasibility studies, site preparation, and other technical assistance to prepare for development and to enhance the investment climate; and

"(4) development activities which address and prevent economic dislocation and facilitate economic adjustment including assistance to promote qualified employee ownership organizations and which contribute to economic diversification and long-term economic vitality of the area.

"(b) The Secretary shall provide technical assistance and conduct feasibility studies to assist any person to establish a qualified employee ownership organization for purposes of subsection (a)(4).

"APPLICANTS

"SEC. 103. (a) A State may apply for a grant under this title for an eligible project within any unit of local government within the State, other than a unit of local government with a population of fifty thousand or more, if such unit meets the requirements of section 105 and is not within the boundaries of an economic development district.

"(b) A unit of local government within a State, other than a unit of local government with a population of fifty thousand or more, which meets the requirements of section 105 and is not within the boundaries of an economic development district may apply for a grant under this title for an eligible project within such unit, but only if such unit consults the State in the preparation of the grant application.

"(c) An economic development district may apply for a grant under this title for an eligible project within any unit of local government within such district if such unit meets the requirements of section 105.

"(d) A unit of local government within an economic development district may apply for a grant under this title for an eligible project within such unit if such unit meets the requirements of section 105, but only if such unit consults the economic development district in the preparation of the grant application.

"(e) An Indian tribe may apply for a grant under this title.

"(f) A unit of local government with a population of fifty thousand or more which meets the requirements of section 105 and is located outside an economic development district may apply for a grant under this title for an eligible project within such unit and a private or public nonprofit development organization representing an area within such unit may apply for a grant under this title for an eligible project within such area, but only if such grant application is approved by such unit before its submission.

"(g) In the case of a unit of local government which has a population of fifty thousand or more and does not meet the requirements of section 105—

"(1) such unit may, for an area which meet the requirements of section 105 and is within such unit, apply for a grant under this title for an eligible project within such area, but, in the case of a unit of local government which is located within an economic development district, only if such unit consults the economic development district in the preparation of the grant application; and

"(2) a private or public nonprofit development organization representing an area which meets the requirements of section 105 and is within such unit may apply for a grant under this title for an eligible project within such area, but only if such grant application is approved by such unit before its submission.

"APPLICATION FOR GRANT

"SEC. 104. (a) An application for a grant under this title shall include, but need not be limited to—

"(1) a certification that the area for which the grant is to be made meets the distress requirements set forth in section 105;

"(2) a certification relative to the performance of any responsibilities which the Secretary has agreed to accept under section 306; and

"(3) a development investment strategy prepared in accordance with section 106.

"(b) In approving applications for grants under this title, the Secretary shall consider the purposes of this Act as set forth in section 101 of this Act, including but not limited to the following:

"(1) the severity of distress in the area for which the grant is to be made;

"(2) the ratio of private sector investments committed in such area to the amount of the grant applied for;

"(3) the extent to which the appropriate State and local governments have undertaken or agree to undertake other related actions to encourage economic development and the expansion of employment opportunities;

"(4) the effectiveness of the development investment strategy and the degree to which the proposed project contributes to its implementation (including the strategy's relationship to economic problems identified in the strategy), expands employment opportunities in the existing labor market, provides incentives to retain indigenous private businesses, expands or improves public facilities, and encourages private investment;

"(5) the extent to which the strategy and activities are consistent with State and local goals and contribute to long-term economic growth and private sector employment opportunities and establish an overall strengthened economic and business environment which will be self-sustaining; and

"(6) the extent to which assistance under section 102(a)(4) will assist a qualified employee ownership organization to obtain majority ownership of a business.

"(c) No assistance may be provided under this title for projects intended to facilitate the relocation of industrial or commercial plants or facilities from one area to another, unless the Secretary finds that such relocation would not significantly and adversely affect unemployment in, or the economic base of, the area from which the industrial or commercial plant or facility would be leaving.

"DISTRESS REQUIREMENTS

"SEC. 105. (a) In order to be eligible for a grant under this title, the applicant must certify that any activity or project to be funded under such grant will be carried out or located in an area which meets any one of the following criteria:

"(1) the area has a per capita income of 80 percent or less of the national average;

"(2) the area has an unemployment rate 1 percent above the national average percentage for the most recent twenty-four-month period for which statistics are available; or

"(3) the area has experienced or is about to experience a sudden economic dislocation resulting in job loss that is significant both in terms of the number of jobs eliminated and the effect upon the employment rate of the area.

"(b) Documentation of distress shall be supported by Federal data, when available, and in other cases by data available through the State government. Such documentation shall be accepted by the Secretary unless it is determined to be inaccurate. The most recent statistics available must be used.

"DEVELOPMENT INVESTMENT STRATEGY

"SEC. 106. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), an applicant for a grant under this title shall prepare a development investment strategy for the area for which the grant is sought which—

"(1) identifies the economic development problems sought to be addressed by the grant;

"(2) identifies past, present, and projected future economic development investments in such area and public and private participants and sources of funding for such investments;

"(3) identifies the extent to which the development investment strategy takes into account—

"(A) availability of developable land and space in the area;

"(B) public works, public service, and development facilities in the area;

"(C) availability of low-cost capital;

"(D) tax policy on investments in the area;

"(E) level of skill of the labor force; and

"(F) ability of State and units of local government to provide financial assistance in the management and implementation of the strategy;

"(4) sets forth a strategy for addressing the economic problems identified in paragraph (1) and discusses the manner in which the strategy will solve such problems;

"(5) provides a general discussion of the projects necessary to implement the strategy, an estimate and analysis of the costs and anticipated benefits of implementing the strategy, and an estimate of the timetables for completion of such projects;

"(6) provides a summary of public and private resources which are expected to be available for such projects; and

"(7) provides a comprehensive plan to demonstrate a representative percentage of participation by small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals, as defined by section 8(d) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)) and relevant subcontracting regulations promulgated pursuant thereto, in all phases of the development and implementation of the development investment strategy.

"(b) In any case in which a unit of local government is the eligible applicant under subsection (b) or (d) of section 103, the unit of local government shall consult the State or economic development district, respectively, in the preparation of a development investment strategy. In any case in which a private or public nonprofit development organization within a unit of local government is the eligible applicant under subsection (g) of section 103, the unit of local government shall approve the organization's development investment strategy.

"PRIVATE SECTOR INCENTIVES

"SEC. 107. (a) To stimulate small business development and to promote internal economic growth which contributes to an improved local tax base and the creation of permanent employment opportunities, the Secretary is authorized to make grants to an applicant and to a State to establish a revolving loan fund to be used for making loans or guaranteeing loans to small businesses for initial or working capital, or the purchase, rehabilitation or expansion of facilities or equipment. In addition, loans or guarantees may be made to businesses where a relatively small amount of capital is needed to complete financing necessary to retain the business in the area. A grant made to a State under this section shall be made on the condition that the revolving loan fund established by such State shall be available only in areas in such State which meet the requirements of section 105.

"(b) No grant for the establishment or recapitalization of a revolving loan fund shall be made for more than $1,000,000.

"(c) No loan or guarantee shall be made from a revolving loan fund which has received a grant under this title unless the financial assistance applied for is not otherwise available from private lenders on terms which in the opinion of the administrator of the revolving loan fund will permit the accomplishment of the project.

"(d) Any applicant for a grant for a revolving loan fund shall give assurances that amounts of any loan which are repaid to the revolving loan fund will be available only for the purposes set forth in subsection (a).

"(e) No loan or guarantee may be made from a revolving loan fund which has received a grant under this title unless the applicant for such loan or guarantee provides reasonable assurance of repayment of the loan.

"(f) The Secretary may make additional grants for a portion of the cost, as provided in section 108(b), of recapitalization of a revolving loan fund, taking into consideration the past performance of such fund.

"(g) The grantee of any grant for a revolving loan fund shall administer the fund.

"FEDERAL SHARE

"SEC. 108. (a) The amount of any grant for a project for any eligible activity described in paragraph (1) of section 102 shall be that amount which when added to amounts available from all other sources is sufficient to complete such project, except that in no event shall the amount of any grant under this title exceed 50 percent of such cost of completing the project as determined at the time of the grant application. No additional funds shall be granted or otherwise made available under this Act for any such project for which a grant has been made under this Act.

"(b) The amount of any grant for the establishment of a revolving loan fund under paragraph (2) of section 102(a) shall not exceed an amount which is equal to the amount of funds available from all other sources for the establishment of such revolving loan fund. The amount of any additional grant for the recapitalization of a revolving loan fund previously established with a grant under this Act shall not exceed an amount which is equal to one-third of the amount of funds available from all other sources for such recapitalization.

"(c) In the case of a grant to an Indian tribe, the Secretary may reduce or waive the non-Federal share.

"LIMITATIONS

"SEC. 109. (a) Except for expenditures to Indian tribes, not more than 15 percent of the appropriations made pursuant to this title may be expended in any one State.

"(b) The Secretary shall not obligate more than $2,000,000 in any fiscal year to any person (including any State or local government or public organization) for grants under this title, other than grants which promote qualified employee ownership organizations.

"OBLIGATION OF FUNDS

"SEC. 110. (a) Not later than May 31 of each fiscal year, the Secretary shall obligate for grants under this title not less than 50 percent and not more than 60 percent of the funds appropriated for such fiscal year pursuant to this title.

"(b) Not later than September 30 of each fiscal year, the Secretary shall obligate for grants under this title the remaining funds appropriated for such fiscal year pursuant to this title.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 111. There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this title, to be available until expended, $425,000,000 per fiscal year for each of the fiscal years ending September 30, 1986, September 30, 1987, and September 30, 1988. Not more than 25 percent of the amount appropriated pursuant to this section for any fiscal year shall be expended to carry out section 107.

"TITLE II—INVESTMENT STRATEGY, PLANNING, EVALUATION, AND DEMONSTRATION

"INVESTMENT STRATEGY AND PLANNING

"SEC. 201. (a)(1) The Secretary is authorized to make grants for economic development planning, including the preparation of development investment strategies under section 106 and the payment of administrative expenses, to States, economic development districts, Indian tribes, counties which meet the distress requirements of section 105 and which are located outside of economic development districts, and those other units of local government having populations of fifty thousand or more which meet such distress requirements and which are located outside of economic development districts. Such planning shall be a part of a comprehensive planning process and shall be a continuous process involving public officials and private citizens in analyzing local economies, defining development goals, determining project opportunities, and formulating and implementing a development program. The Secretary is authorized to make grants for preparation of a development investment strategy under section 106 to any unit of local government having a population of 100,000 or more which meets the distress requirements of section 105 on condition that such unit consult with any economic development district of which it is a part in the preparation of such development investment strategy.

"(2) Any State economic development plan prepared with assistance under this section shall be prepared by the State with the active participation of units of local government and economic development districts located in whole or in part within such State and shall set goals for economic development within such State. Each State receiving assistance under this subsection shall submit to the Secretary an annual report on the planning process assisted under this section.

"(3) Any economic development planning by an economic development district or a unit of local government for which a grant is made under this section shall be consistent with the State economic development plan for the State in which such district or unit is located.

"(b) Grants under this section shall be used, to the maximum extent possible, to provide logical coordination of investment for community facilities, economic development, manpower training, and transportation services.

"(c) Any applicant for assistance under this section is encouraged to provide project planning, financial analysis, marketing, management, feasibility studies, and other technical and financial assistance to communities and neighborhoods within its boundaries.

"EVALUATION AND DEMONSTRATION

"SEC. 202. (a) The Secretary is authorized to conduct a program of evaluation of Federal, State, and local development investment efforts in order to—

"(1) assist in determining the causes of unemployment, underemployment, severe economic adjustment problems, and chronic distress in areas and regions of the United States; and

"(2) assist in formulating, implementing, or improving programs at the National, State, or local levels which are designed to increase employment in private firms, assist depressed industry sectors, or otherwise promote economic development or adjustment.

"(b) The Secretary is authorized to conduct any demonstration program to test the feasibility of new ways to increase productivity and growth and the understanding of regional and local economies, to foster innovative technology and research in the field of economic development, to match the labor force with projected labor markets, to improve United States competitiveness, or to encourage economic diversity and regional balance.

"(c) Programs authorized under subsections (a) and (b) of this section may be carried out by the Secretary acting through the staff of the Department of Commerce, in cooperation with or by the provision of funding to other departments or agencies of the Federal Government, or by contract.

"(d) The Secretary is authorized to make grants to colleges, universities, and other nonprofit educational and research organizations to establish and support ongoing programs which provide to businesses and units of local government management and technical assistance for the purposes of promoting productivity, economic development, and employment opportunity.

"(e)(1) The Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury and such other departments and agencies as the Secretary considers appropriate, shall conduct a study—

"(A) regarding the financing needs for the construction, repair, and rehabilitation of public facilities in order to improve the condition of such facilities so that such facilities can adequately meet present levels of service;

"(B) regarding the ability of State and local governments, including special public authorities which own or operate public facilities, to meet such financing needs;

"(C) to determine—

"(i) the present level of financing for public facilities;

"(ii) the types of financing used to meet such financing needs;

"(iii) those obstacles which affect the ability of State and local governments to meet such financing needs;

"(iv) the access, or lack of access, of State and local governments to the private credit market;

"(v) the ability of the private credit market to absorb such financing needs on a taxable or tax-exempt basis;

"(vi) the extent to which debt limitations affect the ability of State and local governments to meet such financing needs, including a survey of such debt limitation factors with respect to each State; and

"(vii) the ability of State and local governments to increase taxes, or impose or increase user fees, in order to meet such financing needs; and

"(D) regarding such other factors as the Secretary deems appropriate in order to assist the Congress in determining the total financing needs necessary to improve such public facilities.

"(2)(A) The Secretary shall transmit to each House of the Congress an interim report not later than June 30, 1986, and shall transmit a final report to each House of the Congress not later than December 31, 1986.

"(B) The final report shall contain a detailed statement of the findings and conclusions of the Secretary, together with the Secretary's recommendations for such legislative or administrative actions as the Secretary considers appropriate.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'public facilities' shall only include the following: non-Federal-aid roads and bridges; water supply and distribution systems; sewer systems; solid waste disposal systems; and transportation facilities which represent an element of local, State, area, or regional economic development, such as airports, ports, waterways, and docks.

"FEDERAL SHARE

"SEC. 203. The amount of any grant under section 201 shall not exceed 75 percent of the cost of economic development planning or of the preparation of a development investment strategy. The amount of any grant under section 202(d) shall not exceed 75 percent of the cost of establishing and supporting the ongoing management and technical assistance program. In determining the amount of the non-Federal share of costs under this section, the Secretary shall give due consideration to all contributions both in cash and in kind, fairly evaluated, including but not limited to space, equipment, and services. In the case of a grant to an Indian tribe under section 201, the Secretary may reduce or waive the non-Federal share.

"OBLIGATION OF FUNDS

"SEC. 204. Not later than December 31 of each fiscal year, the Secretary shall obligate for grants under section 201, 90 percent of the funds appropriated for such fiscal year pursuant to this title (other than those funds available for purposes of section 202). The remainder of such funds shall be obligated during such fiscal year only for making grants under section 201 in areas meeting the criteria set forth in section 105(a)(3).

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 205. (a) There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this title, to be available until expended, $75,000,000 per fiscal year for each of the fiscal years ending September 30, 1986, September 30, 1987, and September 30, 1988.

"(b) Of sums authorized to be appropriated under subsection (a) of this section—

"(1) not to exceed $13,000,000 in the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and not to exceed $15,000,000 in each of the fiscal years ending September 30, 1987, and September 30, 1988, shall be available for purposes of subsections (a) through (d) of section 202; and

"(2) not to exceed $2,000,000 in the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, shall be available until expended for purposes of section 202(e).

"TITLE III—ADMINISTRATION

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 301. For purposes of this Act—

"(1) the term 'economic development district' means—

"(A) an economic development district designated on or before January 1, 1985, under section 403(a)(1) of the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965; and

"(B) any district within a State which is designated by the Secretary, which district is of sufficient size or population and contains sufficient resources to foster economic development on a scale involving more than one county and does not contain within its boundaries any part of another economic development district designated under subparagraph (A) or under this subparagraph;

"(2) the term 'qualified employee ownership organizations' include—

"(A) a qualified employee trust as defined in section 3(c)(2) of the Small Business Act, except that—

"(i) such term shall not be limited to plans maintained by small business concerns or to loans guaranteed under such Act;

"(ii) in the case of any form of financial assistance, the principles of section 3(c)(2)(B) of such Act shall apply under regulations prescribed by the Secretary; and

"(iii) there shall be periodic reviews of the role, in the management of the concern involved, of employees to whose account stock is allocated; and

"(B) any business organized on a cooperative basis;

"(3) the term 'Indian tribe' means the governing body of a tribe, an Indian authority or tribal organization or entity, an Alaskan Native village, or any Indian group which is recognized as an Indian tribe by the Secretary of the Interior, except that the term 'Indian tribe' shall also include those bodies, authorities, organizations, entities, or groups not recognized by the Secretary of the Interior, if—

"(A) such body, authority, organization, entity, or group is recognized, as of May 5, 1985, as a tribe or other similar appropriate entity by the State in which it is located and such State, as of May 5, 1985, holds land in trust on behalf of such tribe or other similar appropriate entity; and

"(B) the project or assistance involved will be located on such land held in trust or on tribal land;

"(4) the term 'unit of local government' means any city, county, town, parish, village, or other general purpose political subdivision of a State;

"(5) the term 'small business' means a business that is independently owned and operated, is not dominant in its field of operations, and meets such other criteria as the Secretary, after consultation with the Administrator of the Small Business Administration, may by regulation establish, including but not limited to, numbers of employees and dollar volume of business by industrial classes;

"(6) the term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Commerce; and

"(7) the term 'State' means the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas.

"APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT SECRETARY

"SEC. 302. The Secretary shall administer this Act with the assistance of an Assistant Secretary of Commerce, created by section 601 of the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965. Such Assistant Secretary shall perform such functions as the Secretary may prescribe.

"CONSULTATION WITH OTHER PERSONS AND AGENCIES

"SEC. 303. (a) The Secretary is authorized from time to time to call together and confer with any persons, including representatives of labor, management, agriculture, and government, who can assist in meeting the problems of area and regional unemployment or underemployment.

"(b) The Secretary may make provisions for such consultation with interested departments and agencies as he may deem appropriate in the performance of the functions vested in him by this Act.

"ADMINISTRATION OF ASSISTANCE

"SEC. 304. No grant shall be approved under this Act unless the Secretary is satisfied that the project for which Federal assistance is granted will be properly and efficiently administered, operated, and maintained.

"POWERS OF THE SECRETARY

"SEC. 305. In performing his duties under this Act, the Secretary is authorized to—

"(1) adopt, alter, and use a seal, which shall be judicially noticed;

"(2) hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, and take such testimony, as he may deem advisable;

"(3) request directly from any executive department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, independent establishment, or instrumentality information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics needed to carry out the purposes of this Act; and each department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, establishment or instrumentality is authorized to furnish such information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics directly to the Secretary;

"(4) acquire, in any lawful manner, any property (real, personal, or mixed, tangible or intangible), whenever deemed necessary or appropriate to the conduct of the activities authorized by this Act;

"(5) procure by contract the temporary or intermittent services of experts and consultants or organizations therefor as authorized by section 3109(b) of title 5, United States Code, compensate individuals so employed at rates not in excess of $100 per diem, including travel time, and allow them, while away from their homes or regular places of business, travel expenses (including per diem in lieu of subsistence) in accordance with section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons in the Government service employed intermittently, while so employed;

"(6) sue and be sued in any court of record of a State having general jurisdiction or in any United States district court, and jurisdiction is conferred upon such district court to determine such controversies without regard to the amount in controversy; but no attachment, injunction, garnishment, or other similar process, mesne, or final, shall be issued against the Secretary or his property. Nothing herein shall be construed to except the activities under this Act from the application of sections 517, 547, and 2679 of title 28, United States Code; and

"(7) establish such rules, regulations, and procedures as he may deem appropriate in carrying out the provisions of this Act.

"CERTIFICATION

"SEC. 306. (a) The Secretary may discharge any of his responsibilities relative to a project for which a grant may be made under title I of this Act by accepting a certification by the applicant of the applicant's performance of such responsibilities. The Secretary shall promulgate such guidelines and regulations as may be necessary to carry out this section.

"(b) Acceptance by the Secretary of an applicant's certification under this section may be rescinded by the Secretary at any time if, in his opinion, it is necessary to do so.

"SAVINGS PROVISIONS

"SEC. 307. (a) No suit, action, or other proceedings lawfully commenced by or against the Secretary or Assistant Secretary or any other officer in his official capacity or in relation to the discharge of his official duties under the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965, shall abate by reason of the taking effect of the provisions of this Act, but the court may, on motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within twelve months after such taking effect, showing a necessity for the survival of such suit, action, or other proceeding to obtain a settlement of the questions involved, allow the same to be maintained by or against the Secretary or Assistant Secretary or such other officer of the Department of Commerce as may be appropriate.

"(b) Except as may be otherwise expressly provided in this Act, all powers and authorities conferred by this Act shall be cumulative and additional to and not in derogation of any powers and authorities otherwise existing. All rules, regulations, orders, authorizations, delegations, or other actions duly issued, made, or taken by or pursuant to applicable law, prior to the effective date of this Act, by any agency, officer, or office pertaining to any functions, powers, and duties under the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965 shall continue in full force and effect after the effective date of this Act until modified or rescinded by the Secretary or such other officer of the Department of Commerce as, in accordance with applicable law, may be appropriate.

"ANNUAL REPORT

"SEC. 308. The Secretary shall make a comprehensive and detailed annual report to the Congress of his operations under this Act for each fiscal year beginning with the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986. Such report shall be printed and shall be transmitted to the Congress not later than February 1 of the year following the fiscal year with respect to which such report is made.

"PREVAILING RATE OF WAGE

"SEC. 309. All laborers and mechanics employed by contractors or subcontractors on projects assisted by the Secretary under this Act shall be paid wages at rates not less than those prevailing on similar construction in the locality as determined by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with the Davis-Bacon Act, as amended (40 U.S.C. 276a-276a-5). The Secretary shall not extend any financial assistance under this Act for such project without first obtaining adequate assurance that these labor standards will be maintained upon the construction work. The Secretary of Labor shall have, with respect to the labor standards specified in this provision, the authority and functions set forth in Reorganization Plan Numbered 14 of 1950 (15 F.R. 3176; 64 Stat. 1267; 5 U.S.C. App.), and section 2 of the Act of June 13, 1934, as amended (48 Stat. 948; 40 U.S.C. 276c).

"RECORD OF APPLICATIONS

"SEC. 310. The Secretary shall maintain as a permanent part of the records of the Department of Commerce a list of applications approved for a grant under this Act, which shall be kept available for public inspection during the regular business hours of the Department of Commerce. The following information shall be posted in such list as soon as each application is approved: (1) the name of the applicant, (2) the amount and duration of the grant for which application is made, and (3) the purposes for which the proceeds of the grant are to be used.

"RECORDS AND AUDIT

"SEC. 311. (a)(1) Each recipient of a grant under this Act shall keep such records as the Secretary shall prescribe, including records which (A) fully disclose the amount and the disposition by such recipient of the proceeds of such grant, the total cost of the project or undertaking in connection with which such grant is given or used, and the amount and nature of that portion of the cost of the project or undertaking supplied by other sources, and (B) review the efficiency, economy, and effectiveness of the project carried out under this Act.

"(2) Not later than ten days after January 1 and July 1 of each year, each recipient shall transmit a report to the Secretary containing all information prescribed under paragraph (1) which relates to all activities carried out during the preceding period relating to grants made to it under this Act. Each report submitted in January of each year shall include an audited statement of all funds spent on the project or undertaking during the preceding fiscal year prepared by an independent certified public accountant in accordance with the Standards for Audit of Governmental Organizations, Programs, Activities, and Functions issued by the Comptroller General of the United States.

"(b) For the purpose of reviewing the efficiency, economy, and effectiveness of programs carried out under the provisions of the Act, including audit and examination, the Secretary and the Comptroller General of the United States, or any of their duly authorized representatives, shall have access to any books, documents, papers, and records of any recipient, subrecipient, contractor, or subcontractor that are pertinent to assistance received under this Act.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 312. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for salaries and administrative expenses to carry out the provisions of this Act $30,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $35,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and $40,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988. Appropriations authorized under this Act shall remain available until expended unless otherwise provided by appropriations Acts. Any contract entered into pursuant to this Act shall be effective only to such extent and in such amounts as may be provided in advance in an appropriation Act.".

Mr. LUNDINE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 10, the National Development Investment Act. I am a cosponsor of this important legislation and I supported similar bills in the 98th and 97th Congress. I am hopeful that this year H.R. 10 will be enacted into law.

Funding for the Economic Development Administration [EDA] and the Appalachian Regional Commission [ARC] is provided for in this legislation. The EDA and ARC were established to provide various types of assistance to economically distressed areas of the country. Aid for the development of public facilities, such as roads, ports, community water and sewage systems, and education and health facilities, as well as grants for private economic development projects are provided for by EDA and ARC.

It is important to national economic revitalization that we approve this legislation without further delay. Solutions to many of our economic problems can only be found at the local level. I believe, therefore, that State and Federal governments must continue to provide support to facilitate the development of innovative local efforts to address economic problems.

This bill before us today is particularly suited to assist in this effort. It authorizes $500 million in the next 3 fiscal years for a new economic development program to replace the existing Public Works Grant Program. In addition, it authorizes funding for 50-percent Federal matching grants to eligible localities for the development of public infrastructure, for the creation of local revolving funds, and for the establishment of employee stock ownership organizations.

Great care has been taken in this legislation to address the past criticisms of administration of EDA programs. The Business Loan Program is eliminated and to insure that projects funded under this legislation are part of an overall development strategy, the preparation of a development strategy by local concerns interested in assistance is required. Furthermore, to insure that assistance goes to the most distressed communities, eligibility for assistance under the legislation will be determined by a combination of need, as defined by high unemployment or per capita income below the national average, and the ability to prepare an adequate development strategy which provides maximum private sector leveraging for Federal dollars. Finally, the Federal share for capital projects is reduced to 50 percent to assure local commitment.

I am particularly pleased that this legislation contains a provision which allows funding for matching grants for both technical assistance and capital funds to promote employee stock ownership. Such assistance is particularly important in cases where employees seek to purchase plants or firms which otherwise would be shut down.

Employee stock ownership plans [ESOP's] have grown significantly in recent years. There are approximately 5,000 to 6,000 ESOP's in this country today. Most hold only a small percentage of a company's stock. Such stock plans can facilitate the capital expansion of a business, broaden the base of ownership, and provide an incentive for improved productivity.

Most often, access to technical assistance and help in leveraging private credit for potential employee-owned firms is crucial to their success. The employee-ownership provisions of this bill build on the limited, but important, past involvement of EDA under their title IX program.

The advantages of such assistance is no more vividly illustrated than in a case which enabled the employee purchase of specialty steel firm in my congressional district in Dunkirk, NY. In 1976, EDA granted $10 million to the State of New York which was, in turn, loaned to 35 management employees to purchase the Al Tech Specialty Steel Corp. Since then, the record of Al Tech has been very successful. Perhaps the most impressive fact is that within the first 2 years alone, Al Tech employees paid more than $10 million in Federal income taxes.

I also want to express my strong support for title II of this legislation which extends the Appalachian Regional Development Act by adopting a finish-up program for the Appalachian Highway System by 1991 and the area redevelopment program by 1988.

The Appalachian Highway Program, in particular, has been critically important to the upstate New York area and has been instrumental in the construction of the Southern Tier Expressway, the only four-lane, limited-access highway linking our economically depressed rural region with the Interstate System. Traveltime from certain points in upstate New York to New York City has already been reduced from 10 hours to 7 hours, and the Southern Tier Expressway has not yet been completed. I am sure that my colleagues can appreciate the importance of this development and the need to complete this highway project.

In addition to contributing to highway development, much progress has been made in the areas of vocational training, health care delivery, child development, community development, energy and enterprise development, and housing in my district, and in the rest of the Appalachian region. For example, the James Prendergast Library in Jamestown and the Steele Memorial Library in Elmira, two of the most important information centers in my district, were built with ARC library funds. In Steuben County, the regional business development center, sponsored by the Corning Community College, whose graduates have made significant contributions to the economy of the region, was started with ARC vocational education funds. In the field of health, the burn and rehabilitation unit at St. Joseph's Hospital in Elmira was started with $200,000 in ARC funds, and the development of rural ambulatory care at the Salamanca Hospital in Cattaraugus County was assisted with over $300,000 in these funds. I could go on and on with examples of how my congressional district has benefited from ARC funding, but I think that my point is clear. The ARC's contribution to the 14 New York counties has been invaluable and the future of the ARC is of great concern to me.

The 13 Appalachian Governors' 1986 budget request for ARC is $311 million. This is consistent with the Governors' finish-up proposal submitted to Congress in 1981 and with the authorization passed by the House last session. Also, it is consistent with a resolution adopted by the National Governors' Association at its recent meeting. That resolution, in endorsing the concept of multistate regional development strategies and programs, states specifically: "The Administration and Congress should give full financial support to the Governors' plan to provide for phase-out funding for the Appalachian Regional Commission." Consistent with the Governors' request, H.R. 10 includes $234 million for the Appalachian Highway and Access Road Program so that the task of completing the most essential segments of the revised highway plan, such as the Southern Tier Expressway can be completed. I believe that the Governors' 1983-to-1985 record in managing the ARC finish-up program which was worked out with Congress justifies this request for funds in 1986.

If we are to address the serious economic problems we face, this legislation must go forward. I urge my colleagues in the Senate not to permit this bill to die in that body as they did during the last two Congresses. Instead, the Senate should join with the House to design an effective program for local economic development.

I am convinced that we can utilize both our public and private resources more effectively to improve productivity and foster economic growth. The House of Representatives, with my support, took an important first step toward this goal when it approved funding for fiscal year 1986 for the Economic Development Administration on July 17. The passage of H.R. 10 is the next step which must be taken if we wish to see progress in future economic development in this country. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this measure.

Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the legislation.

At this time, I would like to add my support for H.R. 10. This bill was unanimously reported out of Public Works and Transportation, with very good reason.

This legislation directs valuable resources to a part of this country that has long been distressed and unable to attract necessary capital. The Economic Development Administration and the Appalachian Regional Commission have proven effective in the development of public facilities, community water and sewage systems, and education and health facilities. One must agree in the importance of these facilities for improving the standard of living for many Americans. This legislation is very important in my area of the country. The State of Ohio has had to deal with the closing or phasing out of many industries including steel, coal, pottery, and glass. It is an area that has, in several cases lost the fight against imports and faces high unemployment. I am sure that many of my colleagues can well appreciate this situation and can see the value in this kind of legislation.

The bill is not simply another Government expenditure. It provides economic development grants which have proven to be a much needed boost for the local economies. It also would provide for a revolving loan program that would be administered locally. The community must demonstrate that it can provide the necessary loan management capability before they can even qualify. These two provisions are important due to the nature of this area. In the past, it has been extremely difficult for these communities to attract new business, as well as, necessary investment for capital improvements. This bill would give communities and individuals the tools to compete and increase the prospects for raising revenues. We have the opportunity to stimulate the economies of distressed communities, which in the long run will ease the dependency that they now are forced to have on the Federal Government and the taxpayer.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation in the name of fiscal responsibility and management.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MCCOLLUM

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCOLLUM:. Page 11, strike out line 23 and all that follows through page 12, line 13, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 105. (a) In order to be eligible for a grant under this title, the applicant must certify that any activity or project to be funded under such grant will be carried out or located—

"(1) in an area which—

"(A) has a per capita income of 80 percent or less of the national average, and

"(B) has an unemployment rate 1 percent above the national average percentage for the most recent 24-month period for which statistics are available; or

"(2) in an area which has experienced or is about to experience a sudden economic dislocation resulting in job loss that is significant both in terms of the number of jobs eliminated and the effect upon the employment rate of the area.

Mr. McCOLLUM (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to commend the Committee on Public Works and Transportation for tightening the eligibility requirements that are in this bill over what the law presently reads. However, I am a member of the Banking Committee, which would have potentially the opportunity to review and offer amendments to this legislation, but we did not take it up and I am at this time taking an opportunity on the floor to offer an amendment that I would have in committee that would further tighten the eligibility requirements for grants under the Economic Development Administration portion of this legislation.

The present law allows over 80 percent of the communities in the country to be eligible for consideration under this program. In H.R. 10 the Public Works Committee recognized the problem and tightened the eligibility requirements, but in looking at the provision and its effects, I am not convinced that the standards in section 105 go far enough.

There are three standards set forth in section 105. In order for an applicant to be considered, it must meet one of these three standards. The standards are that the community must have a per capita income of less than 80 percent of the national per capita income, or have an unemployment rate that is 1 percent greater than the national unemployment rate for the preceding 24 months, or has experienced or is about to experience a sudden economic dislocation.

While these changes are a definite improvement over current law, there will still be about 45 to 50 percent of the country eligible under these provisions.

My amendment would simply require that an area have both a per capita income of less than 80 percent of the national level and have an unemployment rate that is 1 percent greater than the national rate. The third test will remain unchanged as an alternative for communities that do not meet the employment and income standards. The effect of this amendment is to reduce the eligible communities while targeting the funds available for the truly needy.

At a time when we have limited funds available for economic development, defining the truly needy and getting the funding to them takes on an even greater emphasis. An area that has a per capita income of 80 percent of the national average is not necessarily distressed. This could be an area where the cost of living is below the national average or have a significant retired population. An area with high unemployment, while being distressed, may not be a good candidate for Federal help because there is enough wealth and income to support economic development locally.

In any case, by reducing eligible communities, we allow for better administration of the funds because of a reduced workload on the EDA itself. This hopefully will provide greater resources to work with viable and needed projects in the most distressed areas.

Who should vote for my amendment? Well, first of all, I would suggest that those who have severely distressed areas in which an EDA project would have great impact should vote for it because there would be less competition for the grants and there would be more administrative help for the communities involved. Second are those who want to see the limited resources of this Government spent in areas of greatest impact. And third are those who do not believe that nearly 50 percent of this country is economically distressed. And I certainly do not believe that 50 percent is economically distressed.

But we do have limited resources. As has been pointed out, the appropriations process has already been undertaken, we have now conformed this particular bill to numbers and figures in the budget, and so on, but they are only limited resources, and it seems to me that above all else we ought to target those limited resources to those few communities in this country who are truly distressed, who have the high unemployment, and who also have the below the national average of per capita income, as indicated—both, rather than just one. And there is that escape valve that remains, even with my amendment, for the truly distressed area where you do have a dislocation that is occurring. So there could be an exception if in fact that were necessary.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that the majority of my colleagues will support the efficient use of resources of the Federal Government in this area and will vote in favor of my amendment.

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in reluctant opposition to the amendment offered by my friend, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM].

I say "reluctant" in that I believe the gentleman is attempting to address this whole question of eligibility, but I think there are some misconceptions really about what we are doing here and also about what is really necessary for economic development to take place.

There really is another factor. We have established certain eligibility standards—per capita income and unemployment rates. But beyond that we need to have the prospects for economic development to take place. You cannot have it without having certain factors present in any given community. I would posit the situation where you would have two communities under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida, one of which would meet his more stringent eligibility requirements and one of which would not, but the one that would meet those requirements would not have an available work force, would not have the available land, and would not have sufficient local capital to get a synergistic effect with the use of Federal funds to really have a critical mass of economic development take place. The other community which would meet either the per capita requirement or the unemployment-rate requirement would have those very essential elements—an eligible work force, a trained work force, land, local capital, training, et cetera, which are absolutely essential for us to really have the prospects of success in any investment we make.

Under that scenario we would be funding a situation in a community which really would have no prospect of success. It would be in effect putting an investment in an area as a pure subsidy to in effect buy them a little time, but that is about all, because the prospects of really having anything happen there would be really remote.

I think the Members have to keep in mind that the area of eligibility which we address in this bill only means that a community can apply for funds. It does not mean that they are going to get any funds. It does not mean that they are going to be selected for a project. It merely means that they have the eligibility to apply.

As a matter of fact, under the Reagan administration, where the funds have been targeted, even under the very generous eligibility requirements that presently exist, where we have not redesignated an area in 15 years and 80 percent of the country is eligible, actually only about 28 percent of the country has been in receipt of EDA funding over that period of time.

The point is that these applications are considered on a competitive basis, and I believe that EDA needs to have the flexibility which is provided in H.R. 10 to make that kind of selection process, to be able to look at competing communities and say, "Yes, this community may be worse off in terms of what is there and per capita income and unemployment, but the potential for reviving that with EDA assistance just does not exist."

What the McCollum amendment, it seems to me, does is to carry out what we used to call the worst first philosophy, and when I served at EDA as chief counsel, this was a concept that was debated and considered at great length. It was rejected, and I think that the reason it was rejected was the very reason that I have been citing, that there was a feeling very strongly that we could be wasting an awful lot of money if we just went to a worst first situation, and we would be missing a tremendous number of opportunities in adjacent or nearby areas where the potential or the very real potential for improvement and rejuvenation existed.

So, Mr. Chairman, I commend the gentleman for attempting to tighten our bill. I would only state that in my view at least it might have the counterproductive effect of having us end up wasting more money.

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLINGER. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I certainly do not like being on the other side of the issue from my good friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I have the utmost respect for him and for his experience, but it seems to me that with the eligibility we are talking about, we are particularly now faced with this terribly tight limitation on resources, and while what the gentleman is concerned about was undoubtedly true in EDA before, I believe frankly it needs to be reexamined. That is what I am attempting to do here.

It seems to me that this Congress ought to speak its word and really get tight with it because there are too many opportunities for someone down at EDA right now to pass out moneys to communities that might not be so deserving. While there may be a much more limited number that would have the resources to compete under my amendment, I am quite confident, based on my conversations with EDA officials, that we would have many more applications, even under my amendment, than we could possibly fulfill.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that that merits our acceptance of the amendment.

Mr. GRAY of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I first want to commend the full committee chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD], and the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from New York, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania for their outstanding work on H.R. 10.

As I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM], I would like to recite a little poem that I think will tell why we must defeat this amendment and allow this bill to have a broad base so we can induce industry to locate wherever we can find industry that wants to locate:

I watched them tear a building down—
A gang of men in a busy town.
With ho-heave-ho and a lusty yell,
They swung a beam and a sidewall fell.
I asked the foreman,
"Are these men as skilled
As the men you would hire if you had to build?"
He just laughed and said,
"No, indeed,
Just common labor is all you need."
So I said to myself,
As I turned and walked away,
Which of these roles have I tried to play?
Have I been a builder,
Who works with care,
Measuring life by the rule and square,

Making my deeds to a well made plan,
And doing the very best I can?
Or have I been a wrecker,
Who walks the town,
Content with the job of tearing down?

Mr. Chairman, inaction is just as destructive as someone taking a sledge hammer and knocking a building down. Grass will literally grow up in the cracks of a sidewalk if you do not have people active and interested. When you narrow this bill down—and the gentleman from Pennsylvania put his finger right on the problem—to where a contiguous district may have the opportunity of attracting industry, people from a very high-unemployment area can then go over and find a job. That is what this bill tries to do in its present form.

I had the great privilege in 1965 of helping to write the first EDA Act, and that program in the last 20 years has brought 1½ million new jobs to this country at a pittance of a cost of $4.7 billion. And as the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota said earlier, we are now bringing back to local, State, and Federal tax coffers more than $6.5 billion annually. Every year we are getting back more than the initial investment, over the past 20 years.

Take my congressional district in southern Illinois, as an example. We have coal, and when the coal mines go down, there is not a lot you can do to sell coal. But across the Mississippi River is St. Louis, and 300 miles to the north is Chicago. They may have an opportunity of bringing in new industry. And just south of us now is the Saturn plant which is going into Tennessee, and people can migrate from one area to the other in an emergency, until things get better at home. But if you limit the jurisdiction of eligibility, you take away that opportunity.

Let me say parenthetically that this committee bill is a pittance of $300 million. Mr. Chairman, let me say that we gave more money to Egypt last year in foreign aid than the entire authorization in this EDA bill. We should be ashamed of ourselves. We give more money to one country than we are providing for the American unemployed worker. This $300 million includes loans, grants, and money to make surveys and planning, and here we want to tighten it down just a little tighter so if it falls just 1 percentage point below the national average and some industry wants to locate, we have to say, "Well, I'm sorry, but we can't help you."

So, I ask my colleagues, vote down this amendment and let us vote the bill up and let us begin to think about increasing the amount of authorization and appropriations for the development of our own country.

We had one plant in my district, the Mark Twain boat plant. We gave them an EDA loan of $2 million. Think of this. They have already paid back that loan down to $300,000, and the company has paid $85 million in local payroll since the inception of that plant. I could go on and on and on and tell you about projects in my district—over 2,000 new jobs funded by EDA.

Let us vote down the amendment. I can understand my friend, the gentleman from Florida, because they are all moving out of these industrial areas right into the Sun Belt. They are going down where they can enjoy the gentleman's district. It is a beautiful area, and I like to visit it. But why do we want to siphon off what chance we have got of keeping jobs in these industrial areas and allow them to go to the Sun Belt and other places?

So, Mr. Chairman, I ask for a no vote on the gentleman's amendment. Let us pass this bill and get on with the job of providing jobs in this great country. Thank you.

□ 1430

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida just in what way he changes the criteria for eligibility. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I would just respond to the gentleman from Minnesota by saying that at the present time, there are three standards that are required; a standard dealing with the unemployment rate having to be over 1 percent. If in fact it is over 1 percent of the national average, then indeed you are eligible. If in fact under the particular law as it now exists in this bill, the per capita income of the community is 80 percent or less than the national average, the community is eligible, or if there is a situation in which a community or an area is experiencing or is about to experience a sudden economic distress or dislocation, under my amendment I simply combine the first two and that way you have got to have both a high unemployment rate of 1 percent above the national average and you also have to have a per capita income of 80 percent or less than the national average.

It is my understanding, if I might take the time to say this, that right now about 80 percent of the communities in America are eligible for EDA moneys. Under this legislation that is pending, without my amendment, about half the communities in the country are, and the best estimate out of the EDA is, if my amendment passed, about 25 percent or a quarter of all the communities in the country, would still be eligible for EDA moneys, which seems to me to be extraordinarily high, but nevertheless, that is where it would be under my amendment.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his explanation.

It does seem to me if the program is to be reduced, that it ought to have some sense of priority about it. We have always been told that this program was going to relieve distress. My personal opinion of it is that it has been relatively unsuccessful in meeting that purpose.

It seems unbelievable to me that half the United States would be eligible. We have a lot of distress, that is true, but that is quite a lot, half the United States.

I think the gentleman's amendment is rather important. I think it is one in which the House ought to be casting a vote. I cannot imagine that we would spread the taxpayers' bread that broadly on the waters so that half the American communities would be eligible for what most people believe is a particular aid to communities of relatively intense distress.

Mr. Chairman, I did not want to interrupt the love feast that took place in the scheduled debate, but it is my intention to vote against this bill anyway, because I think this program is not one of the essential ones that the Republic requires for growth and property.

I do not deny that federally stimulated investment is always the best way for growth, but I do think if we are to have a program, it makes an awful lot of sense to have our people have some confidence that they direct not toward areas where you can do pretty well or which are not doing badly by themselves, but areas where there is some genuine distress.

I do not know if the criteria of the gentleman from Florida are the best or the worst. At least they are tighter and seem to focus the bill better.

I therefore support the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I think that is the very point. I am trying to target it to a very narrow range of realism. While we might have great debate over whether we ought to have a program or not, it seems apparent that the majority is going to vote for the program, or already has, the vast majority; but while we are going to spend $300 million, that is a very small amount of money overall, and as the gentleman says, we ought to narrow it down, target it down.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GRAY of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GRAY of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend for yielding, and although I do not agree with his position on this bill, I wanted to rise and compliment the gentleman on the outstanding job he did this morning on C-SPAN.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, let us get the facts straight. The bill as drafted, with the criteria written in the legislation, apply to roughly 40 percent, probably a little bit less than that, of the population of the country. That is not an abstract number. That is not almost 50 percent—that is 40 percent. If the economy gets worse, the number could go higher because the distress would be reflected in the total economy of this country and be spread wider across the United States.

The previous criteria, those that are in current law, if applied as written in the law, would cover 80 percent of the population. We recognize that was not terribly well focused. There are a number of counties and labor market areas in the United States that are grandfathered in, I would say to the gentleman from Minnesota, grandfathered in under current law. We have stricken grandfathering. That would no longer be applicable under H.R. 10. Areas that are not eligible under any criteria will no longer be eligible under this legislation.

Further, as the program is administered currently, roughly 28 percent of the country is receiving—that is population-wise—is receiving assistance from EDA.

The gentleman's criteria, those in the pending amendment, combining the two essential features of our criteria in this bill, would narrow the application of EDA to roughly 25 percent of the population. This would not be a worst-first criteria, but a worst-only criteria and would strike at cities. This is aimed principally, whether the gentleman intends it that way or not, its thrust is principally at urbanized areas and would largely disqualify such areas from ever receiving consideration under this EDA program, and I think that is entirely wrong.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBERSTAR. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

We do have criteria in the bill for less than 80 percent of the average national income, I believe, and/or over 1 percent above the national unemployment level; is that correct?

Mr. OBERSTAR. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. If we combine the two, then we must have both, and is it not true that an area that may have 5 or 10 or 15 percent unemployment above the national average might not be eligible under this program?

Mr. OBERSTAR. That is entirely possible. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBERSTAR. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman yielding to me.

I rise to oppose the McCollum amendment at well. It seems to me that the amendment ties the hands of the agency administering this program. The track record of this agency, of the EDA, has been overwhelmingly successful over the last 15 or 20 or so years of its administration.

I would not think that we could improve the capacity of the agency to administer this program by severely restricting it as this amendment would attempt to do.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his comment. He is absolutely right.

Mr. Chairman, I want to make one further point, and that is that there is another element of targeting in this legislation which was the specific contribution of our former colleague and former ranking member of the House Public Works and Transportation Committee, the gentleman from California, Mr. DON CLAUSEN. Under his recommendation, we have limited the dollar amount to $1 million per project. That assures that the funds will go to the relatively smaller population areas and to only those that have the greatest need. That is the way this program is now being administered and that is the way it would be administered under the provisions of the pending bill.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBERSTAR. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I certainly agree with the gentleman that this bill as it has come out of the committee is far better than existing law. But I disagree strongly that we should not narrow it even further. It seems to me that we are not going to be hurting the truly economically distressed areas, because if you have got dislocation regardless whether it is urban or rural or wherever it is, you have got an escape valve for that, and Lord knows we have a number of those right now that need to be taken care of, and in addition to that, with the criteria that I have established in my amendment, you really and truly are getting those people who are in need, and that is the objective.

I mean, everybody here today said $300 million does not go very far when you spread it across the waters. It just seems to me that we have no business keeping eligible 40, 45, or 50 percent, whatever it is; EDA told me 45 to 50 percent; the gentleman says 40, but whatever, 25 percent that it would be under my amendment seems to me to be perfectly adequate.

I understand the gentleman's point.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. OBERSTAR] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. OBERSTAR was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. OBERSTAR. First from the budgetary standpoint, Mr. Chairman, we have looked at the total dollar amount committed in this legislation. That dollar amount has already been reduced substantially by the chairman's amendment. The Howard amendment cuts 20 percent, so our funding universe is already relatively small.

Second, with the criteria that we have written into the bill, we have narrowed the focus of the existing EDA Program to those most distressed areas that have 80 percent per capita income or 1 percent above national average unemployment for 24 months. That is a long period of time to require an area to be distressed in order to qualify for assistance.

Third, we limit the amount of money that can go to any individual project.

If $300 million were appropriated, which it has not been in several years, you would have 300 projects for the whole country if the maximum of $1 million per project were approved. That is not spreading it over 40 or 50 percent of the United States; so we have already a very limited program.

I urge the Committee to defeat the amendment.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I will not take all the time that is allowed.

I just would like to say that the words of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAY] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. OBERSTAR] make a lot of sense.

I look back at my first term. I remember the debate on the foreign aid bill. This House passed by a voice vote $13 billion plus without even calling for a recorded vote. Now we are here discussing America's infrastructure needs, economically distressed communities, areas which have been targeted by blight and rust bowls and now all the national debt defenders are out talking about breaking the bank with this type of legislation.

I would like to talk about, with the gentleman's amendment and I believe the gentleman means well, the gentleman probably knows much more about it than I do from his past experience; but I represent a district that has one of the highest unemployment levels in all America, having lost all its steel mills. If we pass the gentleman's amendment I probably would not qualify in my district because of the 80 percent per capita provision.

Our unemployment was 29.3 percent last summer in the city of Youngstown, which was 5 percentage points higher than the Great Depression years.

Now, I think this type of legislation is targeted toward communities certainly that must be like mine, because if it is not, it makes no sense at all. If we would take this type of action, we would emasculate and cut the pins out from under the legislation. It will absolutely have no effect and no bearing on a district such as mine and that in my opinion would be really a tragedy.

In my particular town, the city of Youngstown has created low interest subsidy loan programs and with $1 million made available to small businesses, they have created $12.5 million worth of economic development alone, on their own level, and created in excess of 200 jobs.

Now, this is an area that lost over 50,000 jobs in the last 7 or 8 years and for every job that is being created at $4 and $5 an hour, we are losing two jobs at $10 to $12 an hour with the continuing industrial manufacturing blight.

All I have to say is that I cannot fathom the thought that we would continue to assume a posture that is going to negate and wreck the American industrial and manufacturing base and economic development.

All I want to say is that I am strongly opposed to the gentleman's amendment and I hope everybody that is listening to what I say, you might be in a position such as mine where you have tough economic times and with this amendment you would not even qualify for the benefits that are being planned.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to point out to the gentleman that his community would qualify even with my amendment, because the gentleman has just described a severely dislocated area from the standpoint of unemployment. It seems to me that clearly is there, still an alternative method of qualification and eligibility under this legislation, regardless of my amendment.

I wanted to make sure the gentleman recognizes that fact and in fact this would target the efforts of this legislation to areas where there has been dislocation and distress.

Mr. TRAFICANT. I appreciate that. I want to say this. I am not quite so sure that I would qualify, I am really not. I would have to really investigate and not be rolling the dice here whether or not I would accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TRAFICANT. Go right ahead.

Mr. McCOLLUM. I want to point out also to the gentleman that what we are attempting to do here is to take some of the appearance of pork barrel out of this bill, which has always been around the EDA is the past. The idea the public has is the idea that we are spreading this to 80 percent of the people.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I will reclaim my time.

I think when we talk about infrastructure in American jobs, we seem to talk about pork barrel.

I agree with what the chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee, the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. JAMIE WHITTEN, said down at the Tom Bigbee inaugural. He said, "You may call it pork barrel, but we are leaving jobs for our children." I think we had better start looking at that, so I really do not want to hear much more about pork barrel.

I really appreciate the efforts of this committee and I think everybody should be very careful before they vote for the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. NOWAK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words. I rise in opposition to this amendment.

I would like to advise the House that this is really one of the questions that this committee looked at very carefully over a long period of time. This eligibility criteria was put together and it meant a great deal to the committee during the legislative markup and also before that during the hearing process where we tried to really balance this kind of criteria that would best serve and implement really the tenets of the bill.

I feel that the gentleman has put forth a thoughtful amendment, but it is something that we have looked at and tried to really bring about that delicate balance that makes success.

We have struck from the eligible population of the country 80 percent from the previous legislation to where H.R. 10 brings that down to practically 40 to 42 percent of the population.

I want to mention that the statistics as we look at this bill and what has happened in the past, we find that for the 5-year period, and we have taken a 5-year period, fiscal years 1980 to 1984, the average of the actual recipients of grants was only 30 percent; so if 30 percent received under the 80 percent that was eligible, we felt by bringing the eligibility down to 40 percent, we could narrow it; so the gentleman and the committee have really done the same thing. We have done it in the bill.

Really, I believe the gentleman's amendment bringing it down to 25 percent would be a little bit too stringent. I would rather have the House take a look at the experience of 1 year or possibly the next session when if this bill is enacted and we could operate under the 40 percent, we would be targeting then in my opinion much closer to what the gentleman wants to mandate through the discretionary administrative priorities that this administration would set for these types of grants in the future.

So I would hope that the House does not upset that balance. It is a thoughtful amendment, but I think we will be able to work with it.

One other point, this committee has requested and received from the administration now monthly reports as to the progress they are making in looking at and implementing all the program money, so our oversight has improved.

We would hope that we can work with the gentleman to improve that oversight and extend it into the future so that we can get a handle on whether or not this 40 percent that we have now is sufficiently targeting this money. I think it will. I would hate to disturb the balance at this late date without the Members knowing what portions of their cities or their counties would become eligible or would not become eligible.

I think we have got the best possible world with the present legislation as amended and I hope we can defeat this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCOLLUM].

The question was taken; and the chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 109, noes 247, not voting 78, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. McKay for, with Mr. Owens against.

Mr. Nelson of Florida for, with Ms. Kaptur against.

Mr. Shaw for, with Mr. Long against.

Mr. Thomas of California for, with Mrs. Collins against.

Messrs. WHEAT, VENTO, MOODY, JONES of Tennessee, MADIGAN, and CARR changed their votes from "aye" to "no."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to title I of the bill?

If not, the Clerk will designate title II.

The text of title II is as follows:

TITLE II—APPALACHIAN REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

SEC. 201. This title may be cited as the "Appalachian Regional Development Act Amendments of 1985".

SEC. 202. The sixth sentence of subsection (a) of section 2 of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "and in severely distressed and underdeveloped counties lacking resources for basic services.".

SEC. 203. Subsection (b) of section 105 of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: ", and not to exceed $5,800,000 for the two-fiscal-year period ending September 30, 1987 (of such amount not to exceed $900,000 shall be available for expenses of the Federal cochairman, his alternate and his staff), and not to exceed $5,800,000 for the two-fiscal-year period ending September 30, 1989 (of such amount not to exceed $900,000 shall be available for expenses of the Federal cochairman, his alternate, and his staff), and not to exceed $2,900,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990 (of such amount not to exceed $450,000 shall be available for expenses of the Federal cochairman, his alternate, and his staff).".

SEC. 204. Paragraph (7) of section 106 of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 is amended by striking out "1982" and inserting in lieu thereof "1990".

SEC. 205. (a) Subsection (g) of section 201 of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following: "$234,000,000 for fiscal year 1986; $250,000,000 for fiscal year 1987; $270,000,000 for fiscal year 1988; $289,000,000 for fiscal year 1989; $312,000,000 for fiscal year 1990; $337,000,000 for fiscal year 1991; and $364,000,000 for fiscal year 1992.".

(b) Subsection (h)(1) of section 201 of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 is amended by striking out "70 per centum" and inserting in lieu thereof "80 per centum". The amendment made by the preceding sentence shall apply to projects approved after March 31, 1979.

SEC. 206. Subsection (c) of section 214 of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 is amended by striking out "December 31, 1980" and inserting in lieu thereof "October 1, 1990" in the first sentence, and by inserting "authorized by title 23, United States Code" after "road construction" in the second sentence.

SEC. 207. Part B of title II of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"ECONOMIC ENHANCEMENT GRANTS

"SEC. 215. The Commission is authorized to make grants to States and public and nonprofit entities for projects, approved pursuant to section 303 of this Act, which will—

"(1) assist in the creation or retention of permanent private sector jobs, the upgrading of the region's manpower, or the attraction of private investment;

"(2) provide special assistance to severely distressed and underdeveloped counties which lack financial resources for improving basic services;

"(3) assist in achieving the goal of making primary health care accessible in the region; or

"(4) otherwise serve the purposes of this Act.".

SEC. 208. Clause (2) of subsection (b) of section 224 of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 is amended to read as follows: "(2) to enable plant subcontractors to undertake work theretofore performed in another area by other subcontractors or contractors;".

SEC. 209. Section 224 of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, grants with funds authorized under this Act shall not, after October 1, 1985, exceed 50 per centum of the costs of any project approved under this Act (except projects under section 201); but such grants may increase the Federal contribution to any project, notwithstanding limitations in other Federal laws, to such percentage as the Commission determines within the limitations in this Act.".

SEC. 210. Section 401 of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "In addition to the appropriations authorized in section 105 for administrative expenses, and in section 201(g) for the Appalachian development highway system and local access roads, there is authorized to be appropriated to the President, to be available until expended, to carry out this Act, $166,000,000 for the two-fiscal-year period ending September 30, 1987; $158,000,000 for the two-fiscal-year period ending September 30, 1989; and $75,000,000 for the fiscal year period ending September 30, 1990.".

SEC. 211. Section 405 of the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 is amended by striking out "1982" and inserting in lieu thereof "1990".

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to title II?

Are there any further amendments to the bill?

Under the rule, the Committee rises.

□ 1510

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having assumed the chair, Mr. HOYER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 10) to amend the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965 and the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965, pursuant to House Resolution 223, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. SUNDQUIST

Mr. SUNDQUIST. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. SUNDQUIST. I am, Mr. Speaker, in its present form.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SUNDQUIST moves to recommit the bill, H.R. 10, to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my name be withdrawn as cosponsor of H.R. 77.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GRAY of Illinois). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

OPERATION LIAPP: SAVING MICHIGAN'S BLACK HISTORY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CROCKETT] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CROCKETT. Mr. Speaker, I am very proud today to share with my colleagues the important work being done in Detroit by the Museum of African-American History, under the direction of Dr. Charles Wright, to document and make available the historical records of black accomplishments in Michigan.

Seventy years ago, in 1915, the "Michigan Manual of Freedmen's Progress" was published in Detroit, chronicling the contributions of blacks to the professional and cultural life of our community. Today, under the able direction of editor and publisher John Green, "Operation LIAPP" has been initiated. This project, designed to assist in the location, identification, and authentication of descendants of those mentioned in the "Michigan Manual," and the preservation and dissemination of that information to a wider audience, also calls attention to the anniversary of the first publication of the manual. Operation LIAPP also has taken on the awesome task of updating the material in the "Michigan Manual." Mr. Green and his staff will republish the "Michigan Manual," under the title "Negroes in Michigan History," with supplementary volumes with the updated research as they become available.

I salute the Museum of African-American History for this important undertaking, and especially editor John Green, whose exhaustive efforts over many years have led to the reality of publication.

I would like, for the benefit of my colleagues, to include in today's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and tomorrow's, excerpts from the "Michigan Manual of Freedmen's Progress," and commend to them the entire work:

PREFACE

When Thomas Wallace Swan, Secretary of the Illinois Freedmen's Progress Commission, induced the friends of Afro-Americans in that great state to secure the passage of a bill with a sufficient appropriation to hold a jubilee and Half Century Anniversary in commemoration of the great work accomplished by the world's greatest humanitarian, Abraham Lincoln, a peculiarly fitting accomplishment was effected.

The celebration of fifty years of freedom for the former Negro slaves of this nation marks an epoch in the history of our country that holds much for the future good of our nation. True it is that on the surface there appears to have been a growth of hostility to Negro Freedom, not so much because giving the Negro his freedom was an economic failure, nor yet because there remains in the minds of the people at large, any idea that slavery for black men was preferable to the freedom, or rather the partial freedom that they now enjoy, but this apparent growth of hostility to the Negro that has been emphasized in recent years by numerous measures of legislation proposed against him, is more the result of the fact that the daily press, when chronicling crimes of colored men almost uniformly set up the racial character in large type of Negro criminals, and it has come to pass that in a great majority of instances when the term "Negro" is used in news matter, it refers to the criminal Negro and not to that vast bulk of black people who are making good and pursuing the even tenure of their way. Ordinarily, on the other hand, when many of the newspapers mention anything commendable about a black man, his racial character is not mentioned, and in at least one instance where a black woman was assaulted and robbed by a white man in Michigan, no mention was made of the fact that the woman was a Negro while in the same article a colored robber who had assaulted and robbed a white woman was referred to in bold face type as a "Negro."

Another instance illustrating how the press emphasizes the racial character of black criminals and suppresses the racial character of black persons performing good deeds was shown in the campaign of the Old News Boys of the City of Detroit last December, for funds to aid the Good Fellows Club in buying Christmas presents for the poor and needy. Out of a list of some thirty Old News Boys, who had become prominent and wealthy citizens, there were included six Negroes who stood on the busy street corners of the city on an appointed day and sold newspapers for the benefit of the Good Fellows Fund. Some twenty articles appeared in the daily press of the City of Detroit mentioning some, or all of those Old Newsboys. The names of these Negroes were there, but no one could tell from reading the article that any negro had any part in raising those funds for charity, but in the same edition of these papers or in nearly all of them, appeared the "Negro" in headlines over some news item of a criminal act. The racial character of the bad Negro was fully expressed; the racial character of the good Negro was fully suppressed; therefore the effect and result has been a seemingly growing hostility to colored people because of the fact that in reading the daily press the average white man will conclude that there are no good Negroes, that all are bad and should be shunned.

While this has been almost a universal rule with the daily papers, there are a few notable exceptions to the rule. The ratio is shown by the following table which is compiled from clippings from the English-Speaking daily papers of the City of Detroit, from December 1st, 1914, to June 1st, 1915.

Newspaper references taken from four English-speaking daily papers in Detroit from Dec. 1, 1914, to June 1, 1915

Total number of articles mentioning "Negro"	232
Number of articles referring to Negro criminals	139
Number of articles referring to prejudice and discrimination	35
Number of articles referring to Ex-champion Jack Johnson	22
Number of articles commendatory of Negroes	36

It will be seen by this table that out of a total of 232 articles in which the Negro racial character of the persons is mentioned, 139 articles refer to Negro criminals; 35 articles refer to discrimination in various forms against Negroes; 22 articles refer to Jack Johnson, the defeated champion pugilist, and 36 articles were commendable to the Negro. In other words, out of 232 articles where the term "Negro" was mentioned, nearly 200 of them referred to the Negro in a manner that was not commendable, unless those referring to Jack Johnson could be so regarded. In 29 published articles referring to commendable acts in which Negroes took part, the racial character of the Negro was wholly suppressed. What has occurred in Detroit during the six months above referred to is an index to the treatment accorded the black people of this country by the daily press, especially in the large cities from one end of the nation to the other, and while it is not true in a large measure of the country newspapers, and there are some notable exceptions in the large cities, this constant bombardment of the moral character of the black people has produced an apparent growth of hostility to the Freedmen in recent years. So I say again that it is peculiarly fitting that an opportunity has been presented to us by the great State of Illinois, the home of the mighty Lincoln, to present to the world the other side of the story of the black man, to note his progress during the fifty years of freedom he has enjoyed, from total ignorance to an educated race, from abject poverty to a condition of healthful self-sustenance, and from vicious ignorance to a wholesome christian civilization, doggedly and determinedly working out his destiny with the means at hand, assisted and encouraged by those noble, God-fearing white men who can look beneath the surface and see some good in their black brother.

In January, 1915, Governor Woodbridge N. Ferris called me into his office for a conference regarding the accomplishments of the colored people of the State of Michigan. The invitation to the conference was sent through Mr. Charles A. Warren, an attachee of the Governor's office. When we had presented to the governor our statement of Negro accomplishments in this state, he declared that Michigan ought to install an exhibit at the National Half Century Exposition, and it was decided to encourage some member of the Legislature to introduce a bill I was asked to prepare. In February I again went to Lansing with the bill prepared to present to Senator Edgar A. Planck and Representative Frederick B. Wells, with an explanatory statement requesting them to introduce it into the Legislature and seek to have it adopted. The bill was introduced simultaneously in the Senate by Senator Planck and in the House of Representatives by Representative Wells, both of Cass County.

THE COMMISSION

In July, 1914, Governor Woodbridge N. Ferris appointed a number of Michigan Afro-Americans to be delegates to the Lincoln Jubilee and the celebration of the Half Century Anniversary of Negro Freedom to be held in the City of Chicago, State of Illinois, during August and September, 1915.

At the suggestion of Governor Woodbridge N. Ferris, Mr. Chas. A. Warren, one of the delegates so appointed, who is attached to the office of the Governor, sent an invitation to each of the delegates to meet in the City of Lansing in February, 1915, for the purpose of petitioning the Legislature for an appropriation to provide for a Michigan exhibit to be installed in the Chicago Exposition of Freedmen's Progress to be held in connection with the said Lincoln Jubilee.

A meeting was held at the A.M.E. Church in Lansing on the 23rd day of February, 1915. Those present were Chas. A. Warren, Wilmot A. Johnson, Wm. R. Roberts, Ellsworth L. Curtis, Mary E. McCoy and Francis H. Warren. Responses had been received from L. Margaret Williams, of Kalamazoo, Rev. S. Henri Browne, of Grand Rapids and Oscar W. Baker, of Bay City. All of these were named in the proposed bill drafted by Attorney Francis H. Warren, which was submitted to Senator Planck, Representative Wells and Governor Ferris and the delegates effected a temporary organization for the purpose of pushing the bill and securing petitions from the people interested, to obtain favorable action by the Legislature. Several members of the Commission addressed the Legislature Committees from time to time in favor of the bill and it was duly passed by the Legislature and signed by the Governor on the 14th day of April, 1915.

The persons named in the bill as Commissioners from the State of Michigan met at the A.M.E. Church in the City of Lansing, April 21st, and effected a permanent organization by electing Oscar W. Baker, of Bay County, as President, and Francis H. Warren, of Wayne County, as Secretary. Wm. Ross Roberts was elected Vice-President, Mary E. McCoy, Field Agent for Eastern Michigan, Ellsworth L. Curtis, Field Agent for Western Michigan and Wilmot A. Johnson, Chairman of the Executive Committee. Thus equipped, the Commission started in its labors of collecting and preparing exhibits of Afro-American progress from the State of Michigan and also to prepare and publish a Michigan Manual, showing the progress of the Afro-American people of this state. Following is a brief sketch of the personnel of the Commission:

Baker, Oscar W., is a native of Bay City, Mich., and a product of the public schools of that city, completing his education as an attorney-at-law in the University of Michigan. He enjoys an enviable reputation for both ability and integrity, not only in his home city, but throughout the state. He is still a young man and it is expected he will be called upon as time passes, to fill more and more of the responsible positions of trust, within both the gift of the people and of individual clients. He enjoys a lucrative practice at the Bay County Bar and the confidence of all who know him, without regard to race or color. (See sketch under Attorneys-at-Law.)

Roberts, Wm. Ross, is a native of Michigan, being born in Van Buren County 46 years ago and now living in Lansing, Ingham County, at 1214 Allegan St. Mr. Roberts has received a high school education and became exceedingly proficient in writing. He is also a portrait artist of high ability. The fine quality of his penmanship is frequently called into service in many ways and for several years past, he has engrossed the diplomas issued by the Michigan Agricultural College. From 1901 to 1905, Mr. Roberts was a clerk in the office of the Secretary of State. For four years succeeding 1905, he was a clerk in Gov. Warner's office, after which he accepted the position as clerk in the office of the Board of State Auditors. He resigned this position in September, 1913, to accept a clerkship with the State Board of Corrections and Charities and the Michigan State Penology Commission. One of the exhibits listed with the Michigan Commission is a portrait of Gov. Ferris' drawn by Commissioner Roberts.

Johnson, Wilmot A., is a native of Richmond, Va., the date of his birth being Feb. 17, 1852. He removed to Chatham, Ont., with his parents, where he was partially educated. Came to Michigan in 1864, and has lived in the City of Detroit since that year. He graduated from Prof. Dowell's Business College, Mr. Johnson has always been active in politics and was appointed clerk in the office of the Wayne County Treasurer under the Hon. Alex. I. McLeod. Subsequently became a deputy sheriff and served under both Sheriff Littlefield and Collins, after which he was appointed to a clerkship in the office of the Board of Assessors. For the past 16 years Mr. Johnson has been a clerk in the Auditor General's Department at Lansing, where he is still employed. He is still a bachelor.

McCoy, Mary Eleanora Delaney, born at Lawrenceburg, Ind., Jan. 7, 1846, in an underground railroad station. She was the daughter of Jacob C. and Eliza Ann Delaney. Mrs. McCoy did not have the benefit of a school education, though she did attend for a time a Freedmen's school at St. Louis, Mo. She is the wife of the noted invetor, Elijah McCoy, to whom she was married on Feb. 25, 1873. She is a charter member of the noted 20th Century Club of Detroit, which is composed of the best known women of Michigan's metropolis. The public spirited character of Mrs. McCoy may be shown by the numerous organizations in which she has been most active. She was one of the organizers of the Phyllis Wheatley Home for aged colored women and is now Vice-President of that corporation. She has maintained the McCoy Home for colored children and state organizer and Vice-President of the Federated Colored Women's Clubs of Michigan, is Vice-president of the Lydian Association of Detroit, and member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored people, Guiding Star Chapter O.E.S.; of the Willing Workers; of the King's Daughters, besides which she is an active church worker, being a member of the A.M.E. Church. She also has been identified with the Women's Suffrage Movement and was a flagbearer in the great parade at Washington in 1913, preceding the inauguration of President Wilson.

Williams, Lula Margaret Roberts, is a native of St. Joe County, Michigan. Now resides with her husband at 720 Parker St., Kalamazoo. Mrs. Williams is a high school graduate and also a graduate of the Indiana State Normal College. She taught in the public schools of Lafayette and Columbus, Ind., for several years and in Haines Industrial and Normal School at Augusta, Ga. In June, 1906, she was married to Henry A. Williams, of Kalamazoo, where they now live and whose home is cheered by two children. Mrs. Williams has been active in women's club work in her home city and chiefly through her efforts the Dorcas Club and Let Us Be Friends Club were organized.

Warren, Chas, Augustus. Born in Saginaw 1872, and at the age of three, removed to Windsor, Ont., with his parents, where he received his earlier school training. In 1882 he removed to Port Huron, where he continued school for a time and then lived with his parents in Grand Rapids. While living in this city, he entered the Michigan Agricultural College at Lansing and became a professor in horticulture. Was engaged as Professor of Horticulture at Tuskegee, Ala. In 1902, Mr. Warren returned to Michigan and settled in Cass County, where he engaged in farming. When Governor Ferris assumed office in 1913, he appointed Mr. Warren to a clerkship in his office, where he is still engaged, and from whence he directed his efforts in organizing the delegates to the Lincoln Jubilee at Chicago to become active in securing Legislative aid for a Michigan exhibit, in which he was fully successful. In 1902 he married Miss Edna Harris, of Cass County.

Curtis, Ellsworth L., is a native of Berrien County and was educated in the public schools of that county and of Niles. Mr. Curtis is one of the most enthusiastic of the Commissioners. In private business he is a dealer in nursery stock and supplies the farmers of southwestern Michigan with fruit trees and shrubs. He has always been active in politics in his part of the state, although never holding any public offices of consequence. When made a delegate to the Lincoln Jubilee, he was one of the first to become active in organizing the delegates for the purpose of boosting a Michigan exhibit. His efforts have been rewarded by being made Chief Field Agent in collecting and forwarding the exhibits from the State of Michigan.

Browne, Rev. S. Henri. Shortly after the organization of the Freedmen's Progress Commission in which Rev. Browne gave material assistance, he accepted a call to a Baptist Charge near Cincinnati, Ohio, and left the state permanently to assume his new charge. Rev. Browne has declined to furnish any information regarding himself and it is not available to the compiler of this manual.

Warren, Francis H., was born at Sarnia, Ont., Sept. 3, 1864. At the age of four, he removed to Saginaw with his parents, where he received his early education in the public schools. Later attended school at Reading, Mich., where he went to live with Dr. Thomas, with a view to studying medicine. Graduated from the 8th grade to the high school 9th grade, but was called from school to aid in supporting the family before completing his high school course. He became a newboy in Saginaw and learned the trade of plastering with his father. Later took up painting with John J. Prest in Detroit, and this occupation not agreeing with his health, he accepted work as a waiter in the old Russell House, which has recently been displaced by the Pontchartrain. During the time he worked as a waiter and later as a pullman porter, he traveled all over the United States and Canada, finally settling in Mackinac Island, where he took up the barber business and became quite successful in that line. In 1894 he branched out into a laundry and restaurant business at Mackinac Island and later in St. Ignace, and while thus engaged, he took up the study of law with a correspondence school. Becoming more and more interested in the legal profession, he came to Detroit in the fall of 1899 and entered the Detroit College of Law at the age of 35. He was admitted to the Michigan Bar in 1903 with his law class and immediately accepted a position in the County Treasurer's office under the late Fred S. Snow. Mr. Warren has been quite active in politics for many years, his efforts being chiefly for public ownership of public utilities and other economic reforms. As attorney for the Detroit branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, he has prosecuted many cases of race discrimination. He was for nine years the editor and publisher of the Detroit Informer, in which work he was ably assisted by Margaret E., his wife. Mr. Warren is one of the few of Michigan Afro-Americans who braved the criticism of his people and became affiliated with the Democratic party, with the hope of securing more favor from that organization for the colored people and of stifling the opposition of such men as Tillman, Vardaman et al. He entered the active practice of law in 1904 and occupied a suite of offices at 325 Broadway Market Building at Detroit.

FRANK LEDESMA—OUTSTANDING CITIZEN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, at this time it is my pleasure to rise and pay tribute to Frank Ledesma in recognition of 11 years of service to the city of Soledad, CA. I join the residents of Soledad in wishing him all the best in his retirement from the city council, effective June 24 of this year; however, we will sorely miss his dedication and commitment to serving the public interest in this community.

Mr. Ledesma's lifelong contribution to public service has been distinguished in a number of areas. As council member, 1974–78; then mayor, 1979–85; he has demonstrated his leadership through the implementation of a number of community projects. These include the organization and formation of the Soledad Redevelopment Agency and the Soledad Redevelopment Project, construction of a new sewer treatment facility for the city, and construction and renovation of the city's drinking water system. Furthermore, he has contributed substantially to the improvement and expansion of the city's affordable housing facilities through the initiation of rehabilitation loans through the Soledad Housing Assistance Program, annexation of unincorporated land to expand the city's housing base, and the creation of the Soledad Local Development Corp. Not least among his accomplishments during his years of public service to the city, are the improvements in the professionalism and training of the city's protection forces.

His accomplishments have extended beyond the city's borders. He has served the broader community through membership on the Monterey County Transportation Commission and the Monterey County Local Agency Formation Commission.

Outside of his official roles, Mr. Ledesma has been a moving force in the community through a number of additional clubs and organizations. He is a member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Knights of Columbus, Soledad Rotary, and American Legion, holding leadership offices in the latter two. He has been involved with sports programs for the young people of the city as well, including president and team manager for 12 years of the Soledad Little League and director for 2 years of Pop Warner. Additionally, he served as the Mayors' Select Committee of Monterey County. Mr. Ledesma is especially concerned with the welfare of children, as recognized through the appreciation award he received for serving 12 years as a member of the board of the Soledad Union Elementary School District.

A major portion of Mr. Ledesma's career was spent in the employ of the U.S. Postal Service, holding the position of Postmaster in both Soledad and Carmel. He is married to Dominga Torres Ledesma, with whom he has been blessed with six children and five grandchildren.

Mr. Speaker, the key to effective public service is action. It is said that it is better to light one candle than to curse the darkness. Mr. Ledesma has lit an important candle in this community that sends an important message to the public—"if you care, do something about it."

I am honored to bring the outstanding achievements and accomplishments of this distinguished individual to the attention of my colleagues here today. His honesty, integrity, leadership and motivation are to be admired and will be remembered long after his day. On behalf of the citizens of Soledad, I would like to express our deep appreciation to Frank for his dedicated service.

A GREAT VICTORY IN THE ELECTION OF JIM CHAPMAN IN THE FIRST DISTRICT OF TEXAS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GONZALEZ] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to make note to my colleagues of a great victory that we celebrated in Texas in the election of Representative CHAPMAN in the First District of Texas recently, because of the factors involved.

In my case, I would like to point out for the record that, when I was in the State senate, in the second session of the senate that I served, young CHAPMAN was a page, and his father was a member of the Texas House of Representatives. I recall vividly today at the end of that session when he came up with that very boyish, eager look, and the little brochure that contained the pictures of all the members of the senate, and he said, "You have got to sign this because you are the 31st. I have all 30, but I need yours." That was the last time I saw him until today, when he was taking the oath of office as a Member of this great body.

I think the most significant thing about it is the quality of the victory. This particular election had been targeted and several millions of dollars were poured, mostly because the junior U.S. Senator had made it an issue on a State basis, for what reason, of course, nobody that I know can fully say, but injected into the issue as a result of this heavy play of interest and the outpouring of external monetary financing into the purely local district race, issues were raised about which the American people anywhere, whether it is up in that northeast Texas area or whether it is anyplace else that I know of, are vitally concerned with. The American people, by far and by large, have been always and still are pragmatic, practical, realistic. Of course, we are all human, and we can be swayed. None of us is foolproof, and we can be swayed by issues that are intense in emotionalism, intense in passion. But I think the highest thing to be done under those circumstances by any American citizen seeking the approval of his citizens to an elective trust in this great democracy is how you stand up under that pressure. Do you try to imitate and postulate a position that would seem to be in consonance with their apparent supreme ideological thrust of the passion of the moment? Or do you discern that issue and realize that you cannot afford to fly under false flags under any circumstances because the people are entitled to know?

If you do not have the trust, if the people know the truth, that they will not vote for you, then what kind of a hollow victory is it to win a race?

I had the very similar experience when I started out. There was a lot of similarity here. In my first congressional race, the opposition party on a national basis—nobody knew me nationally then—decided to make it a national campaign to show that President Kennedy's New Frontier was not taking root. It was the first congressional race in the first year of President Kennedy's administration. They sent General Eisenhower down there for 3 days. Both of my newspapers were not for me. And they outspent me. In this case, the same thing thing happened. And yet the people came through, in the sense that they disgarded what they knew was an appeal to rank bias, and appeal to the exacerbation of passion and emotion rather than clear and limpid thinking on those issues.

So I take this opportunity to include in the RECORD at this point a recital or report of the election in a brilliant way by a young Texas author by the name of Jim Presley that appears in this month's issue of the Texas Observer.

I salute Mr. CHAPMAN and wish him well. God speed in his endeavors, and I wish to congratulate the great-minded citizens of the First District of Texas.

[From the Texas Observer, Aug. 30, 1985]

EAST TEXANS THWART GRAMM PUTSCH

(By James Presley)

TEXARKANA.—For those in the First Congressional District who had grown used to having Wright Patman there in Washington from 1929 till 1976 to defend them against a variety of Republican mischief (he, after all, had not blown the whistle on Watergate), the tenure of his successor, Rep. Sam B. Hall, Jr., following Patman's death in 1976, must have come as a shock. When Ronald Reagan assumed the Presidency in 1981, Hall soon became one of the boll-weevil Southern Democrats who gave aid and comfort to the Republicans in the House.

Now comes 1985, with this scenario: Senator Phil Gramm, flushed with a November victory on Reagan's coat-tails, nominates Hall as federal judge, to create a vacancy. Hall passes the Republican litmus test on enough issues to make him acceptable, even desirable, for the beefed-up Republican judiciary. The plan then was to elect a bona fide Republican, no matter how much the cost, and use that result as evidence of realignment of the political parties. It would be a major publicity coup, particularly for Gramm.

The result was the most expensive race in First District history. The outcome would scarcely change the Democratic control of the House but would convey symbolic power wherever the news went.

To set things in motion, U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm pulled Edd Hargett from obscurity in tiny Linden, Texas, for an appearance in nearby Texarkana. Hargett, once a student of Gramm's, would make a fine Congressman, said Gramm, thereby telegraphing the next punch, which soon came when Hargett announced for the seat as a Republican.

In some ways, Hargett was the political packager's dream. Young (37) and handsome, a former Texas A&M quarterback who had played pro ball, he seemed to have a great many things going for him. The First District has traditionally been an incumbent's district. Wright Patman, known widely as a populist and a scourge of the banking industry, served here for more than 47 years, through all kinds of political permutations on the national scene. Undoubtedly Republican strategists realized that if Hargett got in, he'd probably stay in—maybe for 30 years.

The money gushed forth. Hargett attended the Republicans' candidates school. Top consultants like Roger Ailes, Lee Atwater, and Lance Tarrance were signed on.

In the first election on June 29, Hargett gained 42 percent of the vote, former DA Jim Chapman of Sulphur Springs, 30 percent, and State Rep. Sam Russell of Mt. Pleasant, 18 percent, with the other five candidates dividing the remainder.

Among the Democrats, Jim Chapman, 40, enjoyed an advantage—and in some ways, a disadvantage. Having run for state senator against state Sen. Ed Howard last year in virtually the same district except for one county, he was acquainted with the district, had some name recognition, and had supporters at the outset. The disadvantage he faced was that his race against Howard had also left him with political enemies. Howard had charged Chapman was backed by labor and liberals, and now the Republicans took up the same charges.

Chapman, however, had assets of his own. He was willing to put a great deal of his own money into the campaign, and he was able to use his highly-honed skills as a trial lawyer to distinct advantage, showing himself to be agile-witted and articulate in the forums, the one debate (held in Kilgore outside the district and viewed on Tyler TV), and speeches.

Chapman's early theme was that the Big Bad Ol' Republicans Are Gonna Try to Cut Social Security. He said he'd fight any cut, down to the last COLA. But Hargett said he, too, would fight any attempt to cut Social Security. Chapman matched Hargett's stand on so-called "family" issues such as abortion, school prayer, and gay rights. (The Texarkana Gazette chided Chapman for making such an issue over his championing of school prayer, which, the newspaper noted, was advocating something everyone had—the right to pray any time he or she wanted to.) On the other hand, Hargett embraced what might be seen as traditional Democratic values, such as support for Medicare (and Social Security), more jobs for depressed East Texas, and a simplified tax system. There was no calling attention to Hargett's party affiliation by name. His billboards identified him only as being "In the Tradition of East Texas."

All the thunder and lightning from the conservative heavens showered down upon Northeast Texas before the summer was over. About the only thing lacking, really, was a personal visit from The Great Communicator Himself, though that was accomplished electronically.

Jobs turned out to be the hot issue by early July. By then Texarkana plants had laid off 400 workers, AT&T had shut down its Shreveport plant, another Texarkana plant had announced layoffs, while Lone Star Steel's problems continued to fester with employment at only 60 percent of its full force. With this as background, Chapman took up the issue of a trade policy to help American exports and to keep American jobs from going overseas. At this point Hargett told a reporter, "I don't know what trade policies have to do with bringing jobs to East Texas." Chapman pounced upon the sentence. Hargett claimed he was misquoted. When a reporter disproved his claim, Hargett said it was taken out of context. In a July 24 editorial, the Texarkana Gazette had the final say: "Hargett has said that the statement was taken out of context and was a misquote. Neither claim is true. The context is accurate—a reporter asked a question about foreign trade policy and Hargett answered it very simply. The quote is the same quote that was videotaped by KTAL-TV and aired on the 6 p.m. news on July 9."

Jobs for the depressed First District, where the unemployment rate passed the national level, and protection of Social Security became the leading "solid" issues of the campaign. Senator Bentsen hammered away at the Reagan administration's having no trade policy. Whether East Texans are conservative or liberal or in between (which they probably are, for the most part), like people everywhere else, they like to have jobs.

In the beginning, much of Hargett's advertising and personal football career at Texas A&M and later professionally. The Aggie maroon color graced his signs, billboards, and campaign materials. (One wonders how many votes he lost from alumni of other Southwest Conference schools.) His television commercials featured football game excerpts. But weeks before the first election, the Texarkana Gazette in an editorial, "Hang up the cleats, Edd," chastised him for talking football instead of issues. The commercial was dropped.

The Republican tactic was to hang the image of "dirty campaigner" on Chapman. In the process of this effort, negative mailing and advertising went out until images of a "dirty campaign," ironically, began to form about the Hargett headquarters. In another irony, Chapman began to emerge from the dust of battle as something of a gentlemanly campaigner, though aggressive, but articulate and seemingly undisturbed by the stream of allegations his foes poured forth. At forums and radio interviews, Chapman responded vigorously, decisively, and with good manners. His confidence seemed to grow as the campaign aged.

The negative mailings by the Hargett campaign, from the early days to the last week, kept hammering away with the charge that Chapman was a liberal, that he had run a dirty campaign against Ed Howard (never documented), that he was running a dirty campaign now (never substantiated), and that he supported unpopular planks (gay rights, etc.) of the 1984 Democratic platform and would be controlled by Tip O'Neill and the Northern liberals (which he had denied).

One mailing, handwritten from "Mrs. Shirley Hargett," the candidate's wife, extolled her husband as "a good Christian man" and added: "It is unfortunate that Edd's opponent chose to lie. When he could not find a flaw to attack he resorted to lies . . . It makes me mad when Jim Chapman doesn't tell the truth, especially concerning Edd's views on Social Security." The letter then segued into how Hargett's parents died of cancer while on Social Security and Medicare and how that left the candidate a strong friend on the legislation. Then the scene shifted back to Chapman: "Edd says he understands why Chapman is always throwing mud. It's because Chapman is a Liberal whose support is from the Labor Unions, the Liberal Special Interests and the National Democrats like Tip O'Neill and Walter Mondale."

Though Chapman was "right"—to the conservative way of thinking—on the emotional, often contrived, "family issues," as were every one of the original candidates, being "right" wasn't enough. Moral Majority honcho Jerry Falwell signed a letter that charged:

"Jim Chapman, who supported the Mondale/Ferraro ticket in '84 and Mark White's tax increase has yet to disavow the National Democratic platform. That's the platform that calls for gay rights and the E.R.A.

"Jim Chapman remains silent on school prayer and a pro-life amendment. Jim Chapman's silence on these issues proves one point: he can't stand up to the liberal national Democrats."

Falwell either wasn't listening, didn't care, or knowingly misrepresented the facts. Anyone who ever attended any of the candidate's forums would have heard Chapman, who repeatedly called himself a conservative particularly in the early days of the campaign, state he was against affirmative action for gays, he was against abortion (except in the case of incest, rape, and danger to the mother), and he favored prayer in the schools.

A slick anti-abortion handbill, featuring photographs of Edd and Shirley Hargett and of a winsome small child ("This Little Gal Wants YOU to Vote Saturday, August 3"), was placed on automobiles parked at the Highland Park Baptist Church in Texarkana and, one might well presume, at other churches over the district, during services on the Sunday before election.

Mailboxes were filled by both sides. Senator Lloyd Bentsen sent a letter urging voters to "finish the job" and pushing Chapman's candidacy for its support of "old-fashioned family values," "a strong defense," defending "the sacred contract of social security," and protecting American jobs.

The biggest Republican gun came in a mailing during the last week before election, from Ronald Reagan—"we need Edd Hargett in Congress." He continued, "If Edd Hargett wins, it will be strong evidence that the principles of this Administration have the support of the American people—regardless of party label." (Seemingly an appeal for help, not realignment.) Then the postscript clincher: "I was proud to nominate Sam B. Hall, Jr., to be a Federal judge, but sorry to lose the advice and support of this able conservative Congressman. The election of Edd Hargett would mean East Texas continues its tradition of independent conservative representation in the U.S. House of Representatives." Like Wright Patman, one presumes.

By the time voters received Reagan's letter, the television channels had been saturated with his spot commercials pleading with East Texans to vote for "my friend Edd Hargett." Over and over and over. Though Reagan had not appeared in person, he had risked his prestige almost as much with the commercials.

In reviewing campaign ads and "literature" on both sides, it becomes clear that negative charges were a particularly strong thrust of the Hargett campaign.

What made the rampant negativism even more apparent was that, as the Republicans piled accusation upon innuendo, Chapman studiously grew more and more "clean." Hargett's campaign became so negative that in the final week the Texarkana Gazette specifically chided him for it. The newspaper never endorsed anyone in the election and, in fact, appeared to take an even-handed approach to the race. But three times it came down editorially on Hargett, for discussing football instead of issues, for denying a statement he had made on jobs and trade policies, and for heading up such a negative campaign.

Chapman ads countered claims that he was tied to the "Northern Liberals" by suggesting the Republicans were trying to buy the election. A large ad during election week headlined, WHO IS THE REAL INDEPENDENT?, focused upon Hargett's spending four times what Chapman had and that more than 40 percent of Hargett's money came from conservative political action committees, with only 12 percent identified as coming from within the district. On the other hand, the ad noted that 42 percent of Chapman's money came from within the district, not including his own $135,000 personal contribution, with only $10,450 coming from political action committees.

In an editorial the same day, the Gazette noted that of Hargett's $825,000 war chest, he had received approximately as much money from outside the district—$229,603—as the entire Chapman campaign had raised—$236,819.

The Gazette editorialized: "The lopsided total donations—$822,589 for Hargett and $333,042 for Chapman, including the First Committee—seem to lend some credibility to the charge that the election is being bought. . . . Can a Congressman really represent East Texas when he owes his political soul to a PAC, a party organization or a group of wealthy donors?"

Chapman won the runoff over Hargett, 52,665 to 50,741—a margin of 1,924 votes out of 103,406 votes cast, almost one-third of those registered. Chapman's margin was 50.9 percent to Hargett's 49.1 percent. The turnout was 30 percent of the registered voters, 10 percent more than for the first election, with a significant increase in black and older voters.

One of the major factors in Chapman's victory was a significant improvement in his showing in Bowie County (the most populous county, and the location of Texarkana) over his performance in June. An intensive organizational effort led to a jump in Chapman's vote totals from 20 percent in June to 44 percent in August in the city of Texarkana. He more than doubled his percentage of the absentee votes, resulting in the Democrat defeating the Republican at the absentee box by a margin of 3 to 2.

In the end, Hargett, with a million-dollar effort behind him (he spent none of his own money, according to his reports) probably gained more name recognition than his football playing had accomplished. Gramm experienced a deep disappointment, if not frustration. President Reagan, after appearing in TV ads over and over, failed to push Hargett over the goal line and probably suffered some tarnishing of his reputation as a winner. The Texarkana Gazette, often criticized over the years as either establishmentarian or as bland, came out of it as a vigorous, impartial recorder and referee. And Chapman, so frequently accused of "dirty" politics, came off a gentleman, if one will pardon the expression—and the winner.

It is too soon to report whether the flood tide of Reaganism has crested and is receding, based on the First District, but one thing is certain—a carefully engineered test case has backfired, despite everything that could be done. And the reason it did is that the Democrats by and large got together and got their votes out. In a post-election interview, Chapman said he would probably take his own path in Congress, different from either Sam Hall or Wright Patman, but from what he said and did in the special election, it is probable that his record will wind up closer to Wright Patman's than to Sam Hall's.

Gramm, the main loser, was quoted shortly before the election as saying, "Win or lose this race, this is only my first involvement. We're going to keep on building the party until we're hunting Democrats with dogs."

A memorable statement and something to think about by those putative Democrats who edged into Hargett's camp. Stay in line, boys, or here come the dogs! After a campaign like this one, many voters may start thinking, not of realignment, but of reassessment. The First District, of course, is a continuing story, Chapman, now the incumbent, will be up for reelection in 1986, and that campaign is not far off. Stay tuned.

SOME PEOPLE BELIEVE THAT THERE STILL IS SUCH A THING AS FREE TRADE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING] is recognized for 60 minutes.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the subject of my special order today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I took this time and caught a lot of my colleagues by surprise, and therefore this will be an ongoing process for days to come, I am sure. But I took this time to see whether we might be able to flush out just who those one, two or three people are in the United States who still believe in the tooth fairy, and still believe that there is such a thing as free trade.

Is it Mr. Regan? Is is Mr. Buchanan? I hope it is not the President of the United States. There is no such thing as free trade. We all advocate it; we all wish it were true, but we all know that the Japanese do not know what the word means. We also know that the Common Market nations do not know what the word means. Yet, when we try to get a little bit of relief, temporarily, for a shoe industry that employs so many rural people particularly, we find that the White House turns a deaf ear.

You know, there are two ends to Pennsylvania Avenue, and I would remind the President that when he calls here and asks our help, we expect a little consideration when we call in the other direction.

We are told that no action was taken, even though ITC, who 1 year ago ruled 5 to 0 that there was not enough serious damage to the industry for them to act or to recommend action, turned right around 1 year later and recommended, 5 to 0, as a matter of fact, that there is that kind of damage. They voted 4 to 1 to make the kind of recommendations that they did for the President to consider to give some kind of temporary relief to this shoe industry.

In spite of that effort, the President decided that we should not have or grant temporary relief to that industry at this time. He indicated or reports are that he made the decision because he was protecting the economy. Well, let me tell the American people something they already know and something the President already knows. There is nothing more damaging to the economy of the United States or any other country, but particularly the United States, than unemployment. So that better be the first consideration when we are thinking about the economy. What is going to happen to our economy because of the number who have been laid off in just this one industry, not to mention 6 or 8 or 9 or 10 others that I will tick off later. So, we better think about the damage we are doing to the economy by not considering the domestic shoe industry.

Then we heard those who said, "A great move, Mr. President, you protected the consumer." Who is the consumer, I might ask? The consumers, of course, are those people out there who are lucky enough to have jobs in the United States that can make purchases. But if I were those who have a job at the present time, I would not rest on this decision the President has made, because tomorrow it may be your business or your industry that goes under because of foreign invasion.

Not competition; we welcome competition. The Japanese do not know what that word means either. Neither does the Common Market when we try to get our agricultural products, particularly, into those nations. When you talk about protecting the consumer, you better think about protecting that consumer's job.

Then we hear that old word over and over and over, year after year after year, "retaliation." There are several million Cambodians who are no longer living because we use that word and that fear of retaliation over and over again. We were worried if we did what was right in Southeast Asia and tried to protect the freedom and give those people an opportunity to make their own decisions there would be retaliation from China or from the Soviet Union.

Hundreds of thousands of Vietnamese who are in "education camps"; that is another name for concentration camp. Or the hundreds of thousands who have fled because of course, rather than do what we had to do, we talked about retaliation.

The Laotians, who were looking for some help and got none because of the fear of retaliation. Then I was surprised to hear that this administration used, in defense of their decision, the word "depression." "That is how the Depression started." Well, you know, for 4½ years any time anybody talked about any significance between what is happening now and what happened in the thirties, we were told by the administration that, as a matter of fact, it is a totally different time we are operating in. As a matter of fact, the economy is different, the banking system is different. So do not relate to depression or the depression years. They chose to use that as an excuse or an alibi.

Then, of course, that thing we have heard from administration after administration: "We will take care of the situation with existing laws. We are going to be really forceful." I have heard Mr. Yeutter say that a dozen times. I also heard him say a heck of a lot of different things before the President made the decision than after the President made the decision. You know and I know no matter what enforcement we think about we are not going to protect some of our industrial base.

I would like to relate to a couple "Falwellian" statements I heard made. I do not know how you spell that. You take "Falwell" and you put "ian" on the end and you have a "Falwellian" statement. Well, I heard Secretary Brock, before the President made his decision, make one of those great "Falwellian" statements.

He said, as a matter of fact, or was quoted as having said, I did not hear him directly say it. He was quoted as having said that, "Well, he imagines the shoe industry does need some temporary relief." But he would recommend to those people in that industry that they find other jobs. If that is not a "Falwellian" statement, Mr. Secretary, I do not know what is.

Where do you suggest the people in the Northeast and the Midwest go? Should they go to the machine tool business to find those other jobs? Or to the bearing business, or to the coal business, or the steel business, or the garment business, or the printing press business? I could go on and on and on. Those are the businesses we had in our areas and we do not have any more. Therefore, I do not know where, Mr. Secretary, they should go.

The second "Falwellian" statement that I would refer to is one made, and this one I heard by Ambassador Yeutter, who, as I said, must wear different stripes on different occasions, because having met with him on two occasions prior to the decision that was made by the President, he did not sound very much like the same Ambassador who was making statements in defense of what the President did on television afterward.

He was asked by the young lady who was doing the interview, "Well, what happens to all of these unemployed? What are you going to do?" Well, he said, we will have to take our JTPA system, the Job Training Program, and we will have to retrain them, and then we will get them jobs." I understood the Labor Department really was not asking for any more money along those lines.

But even beyond that, Mr. Ambassador, you went on then in response to the young lady who said, "Well, will that take care of all of them?" and you said, "No, it probably will not, and some probably will not go to the Silicon Valley for jobs, will not leave their home areas."

I have news for you, Mr. Ambassador. I think I read since that statement you were going to visit that area, but everything I understand is, because of the pressures they are receiving from imports in the Silicon Valley, they are laying off people, they are reducing their pay, they are reducing their hours of work.

So I would hope for many reasons, Mr. Ambassador, that, no, they do not all leave the Northeast and the Midwest and go to the Silicon Valley.

I would also call to the attention of this administration, one who believes so strongly in the importance of our national defense effort, how do we have, I would ask the question, a national defense effort if we have no industrial base? I do not understand it. If we become a service economy, what do we service? In World War II, if we were only a service economy, we would never have gotten through that war on the victorious side because we not only had to service, we had to produce those things that were needed to put those who would destroy freedom in this world back where they belonged.

So a service economy will not do, Mr. President, and as our industrial base is eradicated day after day, and eroded day after day, I only ask, how do we protect our freedoms and how do we provide the protection that is needed to protect the free world?

I can only say, Mr. President, we are not asking to close markets, as they do in the Common Market countries, we are not asking to close markets, as the Japanese do with all cute things, and do not tell me that the Prime Minister has now come up with some new ideas which will really open up. I visited there not too long ago. That Prime Minister will not have a snowball's chance in Hades of doing anything about opening markets. Only the good old boys' network makes those decisions in Japan, and they are the leading industrialists.

So, Mr. President, we are not asking you to close markets; we are asking for some temporary relief. We are not saying do not allow shoes to come into this country; we are just saying, Mr. President, in the last 4 years the number has doubled. We are now up to 80 percent. We do not care if the Italians send all of theirs in. They are so expensive they will not harm our shoe industry.

But let me tell you, if you cannot help us get back to about 60 percent until we can make some of the changes, and until that dollar goes down, we are in very serious difficulty in this country.

Again, Mr. President, we need that industrial base. We need some temporary relief, and we are counting on you to find some way to bring that about, and not with smoke and mirrors, as was suggested that is the way we are going to do it.

Mr. McKERNAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODLING. I yield to the gentleman from Maine, who has problems very similar to mine in relationship to this very important issue.

Mr. McKERNAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding and commend him for taking this special order. As one of the two Representatives from the largest footwear producing State in this Nation, fully 12 percent of the shoes that are produced in this country, I wanted to come over and participate in this special order because the things the gentleman is saying are absolutely correct.

We sometimes have blinders on in this country when we realize some of the importance of our historical industries. We look at the shoe industry especially and realize in what terrible straits we now find ourselves, really oftentimes through no fault of our own.

As the gentleman has mentioned, we have had imports of shoes double over the last 4 years. That is 726 million pairs of shoes that came into this country in 1984. How many pairs of shoes do we export? Nine million pairs.

That is the problem. There is no equity in our international trade. What we ask for, representing the shoe industry, what the ITC recommended to the President, was to give the industry some time, give the industry some time to modernize, to retool, to be able to move into the technological age in order to compete internationally, and also, and I think as importantly, to give us time to open up some new markets.

We in this country can compete internationally, but we cannot compete if the countries that are flooding our markets with imports will not allow us to export into their countries, and that is what the ITC recommended, a 5-year program, a program for us to have the opportunity to work with our trading partners to say free trade is the answer, but free trade by only one trading partner is not the answer. That is not the way we have to go.

Maybe in this day and age a whiff of protectionism is necessary, especially here in this country, to demonstrate to our trading partners that protectionism is not the way of the future. We need to have more open trade, but it has to be a two-way street.

In Maine, we have had 32 footwear plants close since 1984. We have had over 6,400 people lose their jobs. We have to think about those issues in human terms, what that means to those people, to their families, to their ability to educate their children, and to feed their families.

We oftentimes do not think about it in terms of the people in places like Biddeford and Saco who lose their jobs. We think about it in general economic terms, about percentages of markets, about total numbers, the macroeconomics of the situation. We ought to bring it right home to those shoe plants in our districts and realize what the human result is of these policies, and realize that we need to be looking at ways to approach the trade issue in the 1980's and the 1990's. The rubrics of the past, free trade for example, are no longer a reality. We need to say, "Where do we go from here?" so we can have an equitable trade policy.

All we ask for, all the ITC recommended, was temporary relief, relief to allow the industry to work out its problems, to modernize, to be competitive. It is not as though the people in the shoe industry are receiving an exorbitant wage. You talk to people in shoe shops in Maine, and I can tell you that they have not only their hourly wage cut, but they have also had the number of hours they are working cut. In Freeport, ME, there is one shoe industry where people are working part time, they are working half days in order to keep the doors open.

That cannot continue. They need some temporary relief, and we are not asking, as I said, for relief for a number of years. We are asking for relief over a short period of time.

I just hope, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has indicated, that the President will approach this. If he is not going to give us the kind of relief we need on an industrywide basis, that he will take other steps that he can take under our trade laws to make sure that we get at the specific trading partners who are violating this breach of free trade and make sure that we try to approach this on a country-by-country basis if we cannot approach it on an industry basis.

I, for one, am not willing, at this point, to give up on the industrywide approach. I hope that my colleagues will continue to push for relief here in this Chamber to make sure that we take the steps that we can take as a legislature to make the difference for jobs in this country. We can do it by passing the right kinds of laws, by instituting those quotas that were in effect until 1981, by phasing them out over a period of time so we give that window of opportunity, if you will, to the industry to make sure that we have the kind of jobs that we can all be proud of and which, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has pointed out, could in fact make a difference to our national security at a time of crisis.

So I again just want to commend the gentleman, and associate myself with his remarks.

Mr. GOODLING. I thank the gentleman very much for participating.

I, too, am a freetrader, as I indicated earlier in my remarks, but we have to have both together, free trade and fair trade. At the present time we have nothing that resembles fair trade, and we only have one country participating in free trade.

Back to the whole issue of defense, when I spoke in Lafayette Park at the shoe industry rally, as soon as I was finished I had reporters from Brazil and Taiwan and Korea come charging forth saying, "Boy, do you know what that would do to our industry? Do you know what that would do to us?"

I said, "You know, if I were you and I were as dependent on this country for your defense, as you are, I sure would do everything I possibly could to make sure, as a matter of fact, we continue to have an industrial base. You should be doing this voluntarily. It should not have to be something that ITC had to recommend and the President had to do, because it is your defense that you should be concerned about."

If I lived in Japan, I sure as thunder would be very much concerned about who in the world it is who is going to protect my freedom, as a matter of fact, if either side makes a move, be it the Soviet Union or be it China. So they better be very, very concerned that we have an industrial base so that we can produce whatever it is to deter war, first of all, and if somebody insists on war, so that we can, as a matter of fact, be victorious.

Again, Mr. President, I only fear that you have now lost your opportunity to lead this trade battle. I now fear that there will be many of us who normally would not join in this movement in the Congress of the United States who will join, and as I heard a few Senators say, they will be introducing legislation in order to give the kind of relief ITC recommended, and many in the House who have said the same. I just fear that we will move too rapidly, but it is not our fault, Mr. President. They all waited until after you made that decision. You have now made that decision. My hope is that you can lead the way in this trade battle, but I fear that you have lost that opportunity.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to express my dismay at the President's decision to reject the ITC's recommendation to temporarily limit foreign shoe imports.

The economic damage caused by the penetration of imported nonrubber footwear is clearly evident in Missouri and is one of the most severe single blows felt by the Eighth Congressional District. Missouri alone has lost nearly half of its footwear manufacturing plants since 1968, causing a loss of almost 10,000 jobs. While seven plants ceased operation during 1978 to 1982, five factories were forced to close their doors just last year.

Footwear is the major manufacturing employer in 20 Missouri counties, each with a population under 50,000, and is a significant industry in 13 additional counties. Plant closings in 1984 left thousands without work. In small, rural communities, job opportunities are limited—and every employed person makes a difference. Such areas simply cannot withstand another year in which unrelenting imports control over three-fourths of the U.S. shoe market.

I am perhaps one of Congress' staunchest supporters of a general policy of free trade. Representing one of the Nation's most productive agricultural areas, I am well aware of the need to maintain and promote our own access to foreign markets—and equally aware of the risks to that access that can result from import restrictions. Nevertheless, I have watched too many small communities suffer too much at the hands of imported footwear, and have become increasingly convinced that this is an industry that needs—and deserves—temporary protection.

From my observations of the industry nationwide, as well as personal knowledge of the nonrubber footwear manufacturers in the Eighth District, I am confident that the industry has not brought this problem on itself. It has made every effort to compete with foreign imports, and done so despite serious obstacles presented by the overall economic conditions of recent years. In Missouri, as well as across the Nation, footwear employees earn wages far below average in comparison to other industries, and considerable resources have been devoted to modernization of facilities and research. Yet, the industry still finds itself unable to cope with the flood of imports—a flood that has reached over 75 percent of the U.S. market.

In short, the damage that has been done is so extensive that the industry cannot "get back on its feet", even with the admirable effort it is making to become fully competitive with foreign producers. Thus, I believe the nonrubber footwear industry's request for a temporary program of market share quotas is a reasonable one. Given short-term protection, the industry will have the opportunity it needs to regain a fair share of the market, and will be able to become fully competitive.

Mr. Speaker, the nonrubber footwear industry is vital to the interests of many of America's rural communities and to the Eighth District of Missouri. Import relief for our shoe industry must now become a major priority for congressional attention. I strongly encourage my colleagues in the House to support a legislative remedy to limiting footwear imports by cosponsoring the American Footwear Industry Recovery Act—and give this important industry, its employees, and small communities throughout rural America a chance to regain the ground they have lost to a relentless flood of imports.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, last week the President announced, as his Labor Day present to the American worker, a body blow to the domestic nonrubber footwear industry.

Imported shoes account for 80 percent of the domestic market, and that share is growing daily. Thousands upon thousands of American workers, including 2,000 in my own State of Arkansas since 1983, have lost their jobs. The 200,000 other workers still employed by American shoe manufacturers are economic hostages, each living in fear that his or her plant will be the next to close. Indeed, in Arkansas, footwear employment has not been so low since 1961. Across the Nation, countless communities have seen their economic bases destroyed when shoe plants have closed.

And yet the President blithely holds to an incredibly naive and simplistic view of international economics in which the market is allowed to work its will under any and all circumstances, no matter what the consequences are.

His trade policies, or lack thereof, are bringing the economic recovery he's so proud of to a screeching halt, but the President doesn't seem to realize it. As he has done so many times before, when the facts about footwear didn't support his view of the world, he didn't worry—he simply dismissed the facts as irrelevant.

What is the practical effect of the President's footwear decision?

For one thing, the President has made a mockery of section 201 of the Trade Act. When we passed the Trade Act in 1974, we included section 201 for a reason—and the reason was not pure protectionism. We simply wanted the President to have a mechanism he could use to provide temporary import relief to a severely impacted industry while the industry got back on its feet.

The footwear industry's case was a classic one under section 201. With import penetration nearing 80 percent, the industry came up with a 5-year plan of action for modernization and requested temporary, limited import relief in order to give the plan time to work.

But the industry couldn't even get that far. President Reagan apparently did not feel that footwear manufacturers and workers had suffered enough with imports holding only 80 percent of the market. What would it take to compel the President to act? Would he do nothing if imports rose to 90 percent? Would he do nothing if the American shoe industry were destroyed?

The President can not expect us to believe he is opposed to all section 201 actions on philosophical grounds. He's already granted 201 relief to both basic and specialty steelmakers, and in one case he granted 201 relief to just one firm—Harley-Davidson, the Nation's only motorcycle manufacturer. Why, then, would he not help the footwear industry?

Second, the President's decision was not a wise one in terms of national defense. Armies, after all, move on their feet. If the American shoe industry goes under, who will shoe our soldiers, sailors, and airmen? What happens if we become embroiled in a conventional conflict and our sources of footwear become hostile or lie behind overextended, easily interrupted supply lines? What do we do then?

Finally, however, the decision's major impact will of course be felt by footwear workers. The President, insulated by his prosperous advisors who don't understand the suffering of unemployment, is totally oblivious to the pleas of American workers who want their President to protect their jobs by using American law.

I wonder if the President has ever met a shoeworker? Indeed, I wonder if the President even owns a pair of American-made shoes?

I wish the President would come to Arkansas and meet with the shoe workers I represent. He'd find out how scared they are of losing their jobs and how much they want to continue to be productive members of the American economy.

Labor Secretary Brock did promise the other day to provide Job Training Partnership Act funds for job search, retraining, and relocation—I stress again, relocation—assistance for displaced footwear workers.

But these workers want to be footwear workers. They shouldn't have to endure the hardship of learning new trades, pulling up roots, and moving to remote locales. We oppose forced relocation in South Africa; why should we accept it here?

Through it all, the President remains hypnotized by his 18th century view of world trade. He is a firm believer in the theories of Adam Smith. His trade policy is not to have a trade policy. He carries laissez-faire doctrine to the extreme.

The problem is, the invisible hand has the American worker by the throat.

Some say America's trade problems are caused by unfair practices on the part of our trading partners. Certainly, these contribute to our problems. The President said in announcing his footwear decision that free trade should be fair trade, and I certainly agree with that. But the decision to do nothing for the American footwear industry does nothing for fair trade. Even worse, it is an open invitation for other nations to continue flooding our market with imports.

The sad irony is that the biggest cause of America's record trade deficit is Ronald Reagan's record budget deficit. The budget deficit lures foreign capital, drives up the dollar, makes imports cheaper, and costs Americans their jobs.

In other words, Ronald Reagan helped create the situation that threatened the footwear industry in the first place, and now he refuses to help it in its hour of need.

My colleagues, the President has forced our hand. The only solution left to us is legislative relief. We must swiftly pass H.R. 1973, the bill introduced by the gentlewoman from Maine [Ms. SNOWE]. I am proud to be a cosponsor of this important legislation.

It is up to us in Congress to save the American footwear industry.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my extreme disappointment at the President's denial last week of import relief for the American shoe industry. In one action, the administration shot down more than a year of efforts by the footwear industry to work through the established administrative relief process. The statistics of surging imports, massive plant closing, and severe worker dislocations made an overwhelmingly persuasive case for import relief, and in June the International Trade Commission voted for temporary quotas to give the industry the chance it has earned to get back on its feet. The existing relief process, however, provided discretion to the President on whether to implement the relief proposed by the ITC, which the President refused to do.

As the President's first major trade decision of the year, the callous and shortsighted action to deny import relief for the domestic shoe industry drives home two points. First is that the administration has forfeited its role in providing import relief for an industry whose very existence is threatened. We cannot leave this industry to die, as the administration has chosen to do. The footwear industry does not have another year to waste banging its head into the unyielding wall of the administrative relief process.

Congress must act swiftly to provide that relief, and the vehicle for that action already exists in legislation I introduced last March: H.R. 1973, the American Footwear Industry Recovery Act. This legislation, which now has more than 90 cosponsors, would temporarily restrict imported footwear to 50 percent of the U.S. market. This is the level of import penetration which existed just 4 years ago. Today, imports have captured more than 75 percent of the domestic market, and are continuing to increase at an appalling rate.

The second point is that no industry can put credence any longer in established import relief procedures. The administration has proven its blindness to trade problems in its refusal to implement relief for the footwear industry, which suffers from precisely the kind of import problems for which the administrative relif process was originally created. Clearly, something is fundamentally wrong with existing relief procedures, and Congress must now reassert its constitutional authority on trade.

In the short term, we must ourselves take action on serious trade cases, such as footwear, that cannot wait for the creation of a new administrative relief process that can work. At the same time, we must move to reform U.S. trade laws, so that the United States will cease to be the designated dumping ground of all the predatory trading nations of the world.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to extend thanks to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania for reserving this special order on the issue of import relief for the domestic footwear industry. I strongly believe that the President's decision not to place import restrictions on nonrubber footwear products is both wrong and unrealistic.

Clearly, there is ample justification for import relief. Shoe imports now account for approximately 72 percent of the U.S. market. The ramifications of this import level are substantial and far reaching. First, unemployment in the domestic footwear industry reached 17 percent last year. By any measure, this is a deplorable level of joblessness. Second, domestic footwear production fell almost 11 percent last year, reaching its lowest level since the Depression. Last, well over 100 shoe manufacturing plants have closed since 1979 with many more likely to follow in the wake of the President's decision. All of these statistics present a miserable picture not only for the shoewear industry but also for the dozens of other, associated industries which will doubtless be affected by continuing high levels of imports.

Mr. Speaker, from my cosponsorship of the American Footwear Industry Recovery Act, H.R. 1973, to my cosigning of a letter to the President urging the adoption of the USITC recommended import restrictions, I have been a solid supporter of relief for the footwear industry. I urge the President to reconsider his decision and begin to address the vital needs of American industry and American workers.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, as imports have grown, American jobs have decreased. This is a simple statistical fact that President Reagan somehow finds easy to ignore. In a decision that is nothing less than economic surrender, President Reagan has decided not to grant import relief to the nonrubber domestic footwear industry. In May of this year, the International Trade Commission found 5 to 0 that imports were seriously injuring the domestic industry and voted 4 to 1 to recommend to the President that he implement 5 years of quotas on imported shoes. The President could have either accepted this proposal, modified it, or rejected it. On August 28, President Reagan rejected the proposed industry relief, following his policy of not interfering in the free market. This is also consistent with his trade policy, which is nonexistent.

This is a clear example of an industry in need of import relief. In June of 1985, footwear imports increased 34.5 percent over June 1984. Also, June 1985 imports increased 19 percent over May 1985. Meanwhile, the domestic industry has taken great strides in order to become competitive with low-priced imports. They have reorganized and made commitments to put into place the technological and marketing improvements that are necessary. All that they asked for was the 5-year period of relief which would not only serve the domestic industry, but would save 200,000 American jobs.

The lack of any kind of trade policy is destructive to our Nation in many ways. According to research done by Data Resources, Inc., if import growth is not controlled, by 1990, joblessness will grow to 1.9 million, the trade deficit will increase by $21 billion, and $40 billion will be lost from the gross national product. Also, the incredible budget deficit that already threatens the economic security of the Nation will be increased an additional $24 billion.

President Reagan had an opportunity to stand up to the rising tide of imports but chose instead to support his "free trade" philosophy as opposed to the fair trade policies that temporary quotas would have provided. The lack of a coherent trading policy is but another example of the way that this administration has approached the economy. It has consistently chosen philosophy over people, free trade over fair trade, and symbolism over substance. In the face of fleeing American jobs and incredible budget and trade deficits, the President has made the wrong decision. He has, in effect, given domestic shoemakers the boot.

ASAT TESTING AND ARMS CONTROL

The SPEAKER pro tempore Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. BROWN] is recognized for 60 minutes.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks in connection with the subject which I propose to discuss this afternoon in my special order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There is no objection.

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, earlier today I called to the attention of the House the fact that the President has authorized the testing of an anti-satellite weapon, the F-15 launched miniature homing vehicle, against an object in space. In his haste to have such a test conducted prior to his summit meeting with the Soviet leader Gorbachev, thus presumably demonstrating our resolve and our refusal to be bamboozled by Gorbachev's offer of an Asat test moratorium and comprehensive treaty prohibiting the deployment of any weapons in space, the President has ordered the test conducted against a defunct Air Force satellite now in orbit. He did this rather than wait for the already-scheduled test against an instrumented satellite, which could provide for a more complete analysis of the test results, apparently because the test would not occur until after the summit meeting in November.

In order to comply with the law, the President was required to certify to the Congress that he is negotiating in good faith with the Soviet Union for an Asat arms control treaty, that the test is essential to the security of the United States, that it will not do irreparable harm to the prospects for an arms control treaty for space weapons, and that it does not violate the ABM or other arms control treaties. I include the full text of the language in question at this point:

Public Law 98-473—October 12, 1984—Joint Resolution making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1985, and for other purposes.

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 8100. (a) Nothwithstanding any other provision of law, none of the funds appropriated or made available in this or any other Act may be obligated or expended to test against an object in space the miniature homing vehicle (MHV) anti-satellite warhead launched from an F-15 aircraft unless the President determines and certifies to Congress—

(1) that the United States is endeavoring, in good faith, to negotiate with the Soviet Union a mutual and verifiable agreement with the strictest possible limitations on anti-satellite weapons consistent with the national security interest of the United States;

(2) that, pending agreement on such strict limitations, testing against objects in space of the F-15 launched miniature homing vehicle anti-satellite warhead by the United States is necessary to avert clear and irrevocable harm to the national security;

(3) that such testing would not constitute an irreversible step that would gravely impair prospects for negotiations on anti-satellite weapons; and

(4) that such testing is fully consistent with the rights and obligations of the United States under the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty of 1972 as those rights and obligations exist at the time of such testing.

(b) During fiscal year 1985, funds appropriated for the purpose of testing the F-15 launched miniature homing vehicle anti-satellite warhead may not be used to conduct more than three tests of that warhead against objects in space.

(c) The limitation on the expenditure of funds provided by subsection (a) of this section shall cease to apply fifteen calendar days after the date of the receipt by Congress of the certification referred to in subsection (a) or March 1, 1985, whichever occurs later.

The President made his certification on August 20, 1985, while the Congress was in recess. The required 15-day waiting period expires today, and the test may occur at any time thereafter. There is no provision in the law by which the Congress may reject the certification, but the timing could not have been better calculated to minimize congressional awareness and discussion of the President's action.

In these remarks today, I intend to discuss each of the required four certifications in some detail, and to elaborate on the implications of this action for the future of arms control with the Soviet Union with regard to any weapons system and under any circumstances. I do this because, for many of us in the House, Asat arms control represents a case study, a test of the proposition that arms control is a reasonable option for this country in its relations with the Soviets. If we cannot control the current generation of technologically immature Asats, the likelihood is that we cannot control any arms system, particularly nuclear weapons, and that we are launched upon an infinitely more expensive arms race in space. The result will be an increased military instability; decreased national security; continued budgetary pressure on the Nation's social programs; decreasingly available funds, as well as scientific and engineering manpower, for civilian purposes; continued decline in the civilian economy's capacity for innovation and productivity improvement; and the likely decline in our ability to meet world economic competition.

The language of the law, as set forth above, requires that the President make four separate certifications to the Congress at least 15 days before an Asat test against an object in space may be conducted. I would like to include the full text of the President's response of August 20 to the certification requirements at this point in my remarks as follows:

MV ASAT TESTING CERTIFICATION

[Par. 1]

On March 31, 1984 I submitted a Report to the Congress, in classified and unclassified forms, which detailed many of the considerations involved in analyzing possible limitations on anti-satellite weapons. As that report notes, any realistic and balanced consideration of this topic must take into account a number of problems. These problems include: the need for effective verification; the potential for breakout; the risks of space weapons; the vulnerability of satellite support systems; and Soviet military space activity. In particular, it should be noted that definitional and monitoring difficulties plus the need to counter such satellites as the space-based targeting elements of Soviet weapons systems contribute to the conclusion that a comprehensive ban that would seek to eliminate development, testing, deployment, and use of all means of countering satellites is not verifiable and not in our national security interest. Moreover, no arrangements or agreements beyond those already governing military activities in outer space have been found to date that are judged to be in the overall interest of the United States and its Allies and that meet the Congressionally-mandated requirement of verifiability and consistency with the national security.

[Par. 2]

The United States is presently involved in negotiations at Geneva on a whole range of nuclear and space issues. At these negotiations, Ambassador Kampelman is, among other things, seeking to explore with the Soviet Union the merits of a strategic relationship characterized by a greater reliance on defenses.

[Par. 3]

We have been unable, to date, to identify a specific ASAT proposal which meets the requirements identified by the Congress in 1984. We are seriously exploring with the USSR arms control arrangements intended to prevent an arms race in space while—we hope—easing a possible transition to a more reliable and effective deterrent posture for both sides. We will continue to study possible ASAT limitations in good faith to see whether such limitations are consistent with the national security interests of the United States. We are, therefore, acting on conformity with the first certification requirement.

[Par. 4]

The primary purposes of a United States ASAT capability are to deter threats to space systems of the United States and its Allies and, within such limits imposed by international law, to deny any adversary advantages arising from the offensive use of space-based systems which could undermine deterrence.

[Par. 5]

The USSR has the world's only operational ASAT system with an effective capability to seek and destroy critical U.S. space systems in near-earth orbit. In 1982, a test of this system was integrated into an exercise of Soviet strategic offensive and defensive forces. Moreover, the USSR maintains a very large directed energy research program, including ground based lasers assessed to be capable of performing some ASAT functions. This program could also result in the launch of the first prototype of a space-based laser ASAR in the late 1980s or very early 1990s. In addition, since space systems are vulnerable to a broad range of threats from direct attack to electronic warfare to nuclear effects, the Soviet Union could have developed—without our knowledge—a variety of other means to attack our satellites.

[Par. 6]

There is also a growing threat posed by present and prospective Soviet satellites which, while not weapons themselves, are designed to support directly the USSR's terrestrial forces in the event of conflict. These include ocean reconnaissance satellites which use radar and electronic intelligence in efforts to provide targeting data for use in attacking U.S. and allied surface fleets. They also include photographic and electronic intelligence satellites which provide targeting data and other information useful in supporting Soviet land forces. These Soviet space assets constitute a clear threat to our national security and that of our allies.

[Par. 7]

The United States must take the steps necessary to avert a situation in which the Soviet Union has full freedom to conduct effective attacks on our space systems knowing that their space objects, including those that provide targeting data, are not vulnerable to U.S. attack. The resultant instability from this asymmetry creates a risk of irrevocable harm to the United States. U.S. development of a credible anti-satellite system is a necessary, integral part of the steps needed to avert this situation. Therefore, testing of the MV against objects in space by the United States is necessary to avert clear and irrevocable harm to the national security of the United States and its allies.

[Par. 8]

The ASAT testing which we intend to undertake follows by twelve years the initiation by the USSR of its testing of a coorbital ASAT system which has for some time been the world's only operational ASAT system. The Soviets, moreover, as noted above, have tested and, in some cases deployed, systems which have inherent ASAT capabilities. The existence of such Soviet capabilities and their testing effectively preclude the possibility that testing by the United States of its MV ASAT will constitute an irreversible step.

[Par. 9]

In addition, we believe that testing can constitute an incentive to the Soviet Union to reach agreements on a wide range of issues and thus would not impair prospects for a successful conclusion to the negotiations now underway.

[Par. 10]

The testing against objects in space of the U.S. F-15 MV ASAT system will not give the system the capability to counter strategic ballistic missiles of their elements in flight trajectory and will not constitute a test in an ABM mode. Therefore, such testing is not prohibited by the ABM Treaty.

RONALD REAGAN.

The first of these certifications is; and I repeat it here:

(1) that the United States is endeavoring, in good faith, to negotiate with the Soviet Union a mutual and verifiable agreement with the strictest possible limitations on anti-satellite weapons consistent with the national security interests of the United States.

The President deals with this in paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 of his statement. In response to this first requirement of the law, the President restates his previous position, expressed over the last several years, that:

A comprehensive ban that would seek to eliminate development, testing, deployment, and use of all means of countering satellites is not verifiable and not in our national security interest. Moreover, no arrangements or agreements beyond those already governing military activities in outer space have been found to date that are judged to be in the overall interest of the United States.

The President goes on to restate his conclusion in slightly different words, as follows:

We have been unable, to date, to identify a specific ASAT proposal which meets the requirements identified by the Congress in 1984 . . . We will continue to study possible ASAT limitations in good faith to see whether such limitations are consistent with the national security interests of the United States. We are, therefore, acting in conformity with the first certification requirement.

Put in the simplest possible terms, the President's position is that no Asat arms control agreement is in the national interest, and therefore he is under no obligation to attempt to negotiate one, of whatever kind, regardless of the language of the law. However, to avoid undue affront to the Congress, he will "continue to study possible Asat limitations in good faith * * *."

It would be hard to imagine as more stark confrontation between the President and the Congress over a matter of high politicle principal vital to the security of this Nation than the confrontation represented by this certification.

The vital issue, however, is not the Asat, an overpriced and overrated military system of marginal strategic value. In fact, it may well be cancelld by the Pentagon in the near future, as was the similarly marginal Divad system.

The vital issue of high political principal is whether or not this administration, under even the most favorable of circumstances and conditions, will act to restrain the arms race with the Soviets by "* * * endeavoring, in good faith, to negotiate with the Soviet Union a mutual and verifiable agreement with the strictest possible limitations on antisatellite weapons consistent with the national security interest of the United States," as required by the clear language enacted by the Congress. The President's statement that "* * * we will continue to study possible Asat limitations in good faith * * *" is absolutely nonresponsive to the language of the law.

Past administrations, of both parties, have sought in good faith, and frequently achieved, satisfactory and mutually beneficial arms control agreements with the Soviets. This President has taken the view, and expressed it frequently, that arms control agreements of any kind with the Soviets are not in the national interest, that the ones we have should be abrogated, and that no new ones should be entered into.

In accordance with that view, the President's first certification is a pious fraud, a not-very-clever effort to avoid the intent of the Congress by deliberate obfuscation and manipulation of reality. It was probably written by Kenneth Adelman, the President's loyal and subservient Director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, [ACDA] whose attitude is well expressed in a speech he made before the Boston World Affairs Council—reported in the Boston Globe on June 5, 1985. Mr. Adelman is quoted as follows:

That [ASAT testing] certification is bull. Is Congress a bunch of Lilliputians trying to tie strings around the executive's hands?

Obviously at least this spokesman for the administration thinks the congressional certification requirement is bull, and that it can therefore be responded to with more bull, and that is what has been done.

It would have been far better, and much easier, for the President to have complied with the law by announcing that he would suspend further Asat testing, as the Soviets have done; or suspend testing after three tests and before the system could be declared operational; and table a proposal at Geneva to end all miniature homing vehicles tests if the Soviets would not further test their coorbital satellite interceptor. That minimum position would satisfy the first congressional certification requirement at no loss to the United States, and would save the taxpayers $4 billion if agreed to by the Soviets. We would not even probe into the issue of whether it was made in good faith.

Such a position would also be much more in our national security interests, which is the subject of the second certification, than would continue testing and deployment of the NHV Asat. It would allow both the United States and the Soviets to continue research on more advanced Asat systems, which we are both doing. This research, already far advanced, will undoubtedly give the United States the potential for a system far more superior to the Soviets than the MHV Asat would be. It would also release DOD funds for an even larger program of satellite survivability, a program on which we have spent billions, and which has already made all but a very small fraction of our military satellites invulnerable to the Soviet coorbital interceptor system. The remainder will be invulnerable to that system in the near future.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of California. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate my friend and colleague, the gentleman from California, for his leaderhip in the area of Asat testing. I could not agree with him more and I want to associate myself with the gentleman's remarks.

Just today I inserted into the RECORD an editorial from the Philadelphia Inquirer which suggested that certainly it does not make sense to engage in a testing of an Asat system at this time. This is our one real hope for a breakthrough in the area of arms control, because it is the first step toward an arms race in space that could be avoided and could be avoided in a way that is totally verifiable to the United States at no risk to our country because the Soviet antisatellite system, as the gentleman has pointed out, is a very primitive system and not a threat to our security.

Once we test an antisatellite system and have an operational system, heaven only knows where the process goes from there in terms of their wanting to have a system to equal ours and then our wanting to have a better system than theirs.

Here is a chance today. Now it is with us to stop the arms race in space right now by an absolutely verifiable process where we do not test and they do not test.

I just want to congratulate my colleague for his leadership in this for many years. I have appreciated the chance to work together with the gentleman.

Mr. BROWN of California. Well, I certainly want to thank my colleague for his kind remarks and I would be remiss if I did not point out that it is only through the gentleman's own very strong interest in this issue and the work that he has done that we have been able now for the last 2 years to convince the whole House of Representatives that an Asat moratorium and a negotiated Asat treaty is in the best interest of the United States. I hope that the gentleman and I can continue to work together to achieve that goal.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, if my colleague will yield further, I certainly look forward to doing that.

I understand that perhaps there has been another delay in the Asat testing. I hope there has, because I think that would enable us to at least keep that before the negotiations that are going on in Geneva and for the talks between the President and the leaders of the Soviet Union.

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman again. I think he might be interested in the next paragraph in my remarks, because our position is not an isolated and lonely position. It is in fact a position advanced in a report from this administration which they have disregarded. The position that Mr. Adelman expressed earlier that I mentioned is not the position represented by a report last December from the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

Oddly enough, despite the position taken by Mr. Adelman in support of the President's position on Asat arms control, the agency which he heads issued a report last December which supports an Asat treaty. The report states:

It is the conclusion of this study that arms control measures for anti-satellite weapons can support United States security interests. It must be emphasized that arms control measures are not panaceas and are no substitute for programs to enhance satellite survivability and to monitor Soviet activities with respect to space. Yet survivability measures backed up by an arms control regime will, other things being equal, afford better protection to U.S. satellites than the same measures taken in the context of an unconstrained weapons competition.

Clearly a proposal such as I have suggested, which conforms to congressional intent, and is supported by the ACDA study would likewise strengthen the prospect for further arms control agreements on space weapons, instead of fatally wounding such prospects, and would signal our renewed commitment to the ABM Treaty. Further testing, and eventual deployment, of the MHV Asat goes in the opposite direction, and clearly that is the direction the President has chosen.

Having made these assertions, let me criticize in more detail the language of the President's first certification. The President stated, as I quoted earlier, that:

. . . a comprehensive ban that would seek to eliminate development, testing, deployment and use of all means of countering satellites is not verifiable and not in our national security interest.

That statement is completely true. A ban on research and development in any field, military as well as civilian, is inherently impossible to verify, and not in the national interest of either the United States or the U.S.S.R. Rhetoric to the contrary is purely rhetoric and should not be considered seriously.

The statement is likewise irrelevant, since the Congress expressed no intent that the President seek a comprehensive ban on research and development. If it had attempted to, I would not have supported it. The President has therefore set up a strawman and demolished it. This may be considered clever by some, but is unbefitting a serious discussion of a vitally important issue.

What is verifiable and in our national security interest is a ban on testing of the current Asat systems on both sides, without which there is no credible possibility of deployment of an effective system. Such verification can be obtained by national technical means—reconnaissance satellites. Such capability for verification is attested to by every knowledgeable observer, and by the fact that we have observed every test of the Soviet coorbital satellite, and the results of each test. The last six tests, incidentally, were all failures, which may be one of the reasons the Soviets are eager to reach agreement banning such systems.

The deployment of the Soviet Asat system can also be verified by the United States through national technical means. We have photographed the missile which launches the system while on the launch pad. Constant observation of the launch pad, or launch pads, is not currently possible, but may be shortly. It is, however, not possible for the Soviets to verify the deployment of our F-15 system because of its small size, the large number of potential F-15 launchers, and the ease of concealing an F-15. If we were to seek a ban on deployment, as well as testing, it would be reasonable to propose onsite inspection in both countries. There is a good possibility the Soviets would accept such a proposal, since in this case they would benefit as much or more than we would. There would be no adverse results for us, and an important principal of onsite inspection and verification would be established, having benefits going far beyond an Asat test ban treaty.

A ban on the use of the current generation of Asat's is, of course, just as easily verifiable as a ban on tests. However, the use of an Asat which has not been thoroughly tested is inconceivable, an act without credible benefit to either side. Nor can an Asat be used if it is not deployed. A ban on testing would provide important advantage to both sides, and its purpose would be to prevent the credible deployment and use of the system. A ban on deployment and use, while somewhat redundant, could contribute to the overall effectiveness of a treaty, particularly if coupled with an onsite verification provision for deployment.

The President, having set up a strawman and demolished it, as a justification for not carrying out the expressed will of the Congress, goes on to the express the more fundamental reason for his failure to negotiate in good faith. He says:

Moreover, no arrangements or agreements beyond those already governing military activities in outer space have been found to date that are judged to be in the overall interest of the United States . . .

That is the consistent position of the President throughout his life in politics, not only relating to military activities in space, but to all military activities of the United States. His reasons are simple and easily understandable. He feels that arms control treaties hold back U.S. military progress more than the Soviets, that economically and technologically we are superior to them, and as a consequence we should seek to exploit that superiority without restraint. In addition, he feels that the Soviets will seek to cheat on arms control agreements, while we will observe their provisions. Such cheating therefore renders any agreement a nullity, and will give the United States a false sense of security. Within this framework of reality, his position is understandable, even though it may be considered tragically short sighted and mistaken within a different framework of reality.

Within his framework of reality, the President is likewise quite consistent in proceeding apace with the SDI, which if tested or deployed would violate the ABM Treaty. He has no hesitation in making clear that when the day comes that SDI shows signs of bearing fruit, he will give notice of U.S. abrogation of the treaty and proceed at full speed to deploy it in space. In the meantime, he will maintain in all seriousness that the SDI is only a research program. He will avoid the ABM Treaty ban on testing ABM components in space by calling such tests Asat tests, or tests of subcomponents, rather than what they really are.

The President is an able, dedicated, patriotic leader. He is convinced that he is right, and that he must wage a war for the understanding and support of the American people in opposition to those obstructionists in the scientific community, the press, and Congress who seek to thwart him.

Those of us in the Congress who have a different framework of reality must not underestimate the President or the views which he espouses. We must confront them rationally and effectively; and since we are all politicians, we must wage the fight, as he is, for the ultimate purpose of gaining the understanding and support of the American people. We cannot afford to equivocate, compromise or retreat in the face of this confrontation. The American people expect more of their elected leaders.

Thus, the struggle in Congress for a moratorium and then a ban on Asat testing, deployment and use is more than a minor debate over a new military technology. It is, instead, a major battle in a war to establish a new framework of reality for our relations with the Soviets, and a new approach to the problems of nuclear war and human survival on this planet.

The second certification required of the president is—

(2) that, pending agreement on such strict limitations, testing against objects in space of the F-15 launched miniature homing vehicle anti-satellite warhead by the United States is necessary to avert clear and irrevocable harm to the national security;

The President's response to this requirement is contained in paragraphs

4, 5, 6 and 7 of his statement, as set forth previously.

Prior to making a detailed analysis of this language, three general observations need to be made. First, the President has already said that no Asat agreement is in the interest of the United States and, therefore, he is not proposing one for negotiation with the Soviets. This obviously implies that the time pending before such an agreement with the Soviets could be reached stretches out to eternity, or at least to the end of his administration, which may seem like an eternity to some. The intent of the Congress was that the next Asat test would only be delayed until the President made a good faith effort to negotiate an Asat treaty with the Soviets, which could have occurred within weeks or months. If then no prospects for a treaty were in sight, and the national security would sustain clear and irrevocable harm, the testing could proceed. As a result of the President's position on the first certification we are dealing with two inconsistent timeframes in considering the question of testing. Obviously the congressional requirement that the President certify clear and irrevocable harm to the national security as a result of a relatively short pause in testing has been circumvented by the President's determination not to seek an agreement. His certification on the second point then deals generally with the need for the MHV Asat in the long run, not with harm to security of a short delay in testing, which the Congress sought. In this sense, the President's second certification is irrelevant to the mandate of the Congress, just as his first was.

The second general point is that the Asat test schedule has already been delayed over a year for technical reasons. Either the security of the country has been clearly and irrevocably harmed by this delay, in which case the President should have taken stronger action than he has, or the delay of another few months, or even another year, will be no more of a threat than the existing delay. The Soviets are obviously in no more threatening a position with regard to their co-orbital satellite interceptor than they were 3 years ago, since they have made no further tests in the last 3 years, and their last six tests were all failures.

The third general point has to do with the nature and timing of the next test. The MHV Asat will be tested against a defunct Air Force scientific satellite, not against the instrumented target satellite carefully designed over a period of years, and at a cost of tens of million of dollars, to provide the fullest possible data on the performance of the Asat warhead. The test will obviously be degraded and will provide considerably less than optimum data. A test against the instrumented target, which would provide optimum data, is already scheduled for November, probably after the President's summit meeting with Gorbachev. I would not be able to assert that the timing of the test was planned for its impact on the summit meeting, since I am not privy to the President's inner council. Nor could I say that the intended effect of the test was to further the President's longstanding position that we should reach no agreements on space arms, or any arms, with the Soviets. Conceivably, the President feels that for us to test, in spite of the Soviet's invitation to join in their unilateral test moratorium, will further the cause of arms control. Reasonable people might doubt that this will be the result. However, I think that I can assert that the test makes no major or essential contribution to the success of the Asat program, and certainly is not required to prevent clear and irrevocable harm to the national security.

Now with regard to the specifics of the President's certification that the United States will suffer clear and irrevocable harm to its national security unless the test is conducted: as I said earlier, the President does not even deal with the case that testing today, or next week, is necessary, but with the general need for the MHV Asat. And the first reason we need it is to "deter threats to space systems of the United States * * *." So we reasonably ask, does the Soviet co-orbital satellite interceptor pose a threat to our space systems?

This requires some description of the Soviet system. The first version of the Soviet Asat was equipped with a radar homing device and was tested extensively in space. It achieved no more than 60 percent success in its tests. Gen. Lew Allen, the Air Force Chief of Staff, testified that the system has "a very questionable operational capability." He further stated that "they have not had a test program that would cause us to believe it is a very credible threat." After General Allen's testimony, the Soviets conducted four more tests of the radar-equipped system. Three of the tests were failures, the fourth a partial success. Because even an effective radar guidance system can be frustrated by relatively simple electronic countermeasures, the Soviets then switched to an infrared [IR] homing device, which they tested six times up until 1982. All six of those tests were failures. Leslie Dirks, a former high-ranking CIA official, said "* * * It doesn't work. Anyone who has followed it closely would have to agree." Even absent the incorporation of effective countermeasures in our own satellites, which we are rapidly establishing, it is dubious that the Soviet Union could successfully attack one of our low-orbit reconnaissance satellites, and incur the risk of nuclear war, with such an unproven weapons system. That does not constitute a serious threat to U.S. security interests.

At the time that the Soviets began the development and testing of their Asat, in 1968, the United States had already tested an Asat system in the Pacific, using Thor rockets with nuclear warheads. That system was subsequently deployed and was in place until 1975. The most likely explanation of the Soviet efforts to develop a system is that they were trying to match the effort which we had already made. Our system was, of course, dismantled after we learned that a nuclear explosion in space would knock out our own satellites, as well as the Soviets, and after we signed a treaty prohibiting any nuclear weapons in space. The Soviets continued with testing of their system, using nonnuclear warheads, hoping to get as good a system as we had in 1975.

There are relatively few Members of Congress who were here in the 1960's and 1970's when we had an operating Asat, and even fewer who knew about our Asat system. That system was, incidentally, the fourth system we had tested, but the first that was actually deployed. Today's MHV Asat is the fifth generation of Asat's which the United States has tested over the past 25 years, but the sixth and seventh generation and possibly more, are undergoing laboratory development today and will soon be ready for testing.

You will hear from the Pentagon, or the President, about the 25 years of Asat research, development, testing, and deployment in which the United States has engaged. Nor will you hear about the next two generations of Asat's which are currently in R&D, when DOD officials come to Congress for the $4 to $5 billion they need for the MHV Asat. Instead, they tell you how far ahead the Soviets are, what a great threat their system poses to our space assets, how we must deter them from using theirs by having a better one, et cetera, et cetera. And they will tell you how vital to the national security the system is, right up to the day they cancel it, as was the case with Divad. The next day, of course, they will come in for $8 billion or $10 billion for the next generation system, and will give you the identical story over again.

The reason, quite simply, why we have such a bloated military budget is that the President and the Secretary of Defense feel quite free to use terms like "avert clear and irrevocable harm to the national security," and then define the meaning of that term in any way they see fit. Gullible Congressmen, who have a real and serious concern for the national security, generally will accept the administration's line without serious analysis of their own. We must learn to do better.

The laughable aspect of the President's use of the deterrence argument in his certification is that the Soviets probably have given up on making a workable system out of their present generation Asat, and have seriously offered a treaty to ban Asat's because they know we are so far ahead of them in sophisticated space technology. That is self-serving and devious on their part, as we might expect, but it is also very much in our interest to accept such a proposal as long as it doesn't constrain further research and development on our part. We are on the verge of perfecting highly accurate and extremely powerful laser and other beam weapons and electromagnetic rail guns, to name two promising technologies which would have infinitely superior Asat capability compared to the MHV Asat.

We believe we can, within the next few years, develop a liquid-hydrogen-fueled hypersonic plane with the capability of flying from Earth into space, departing and landing from almost any airport, and having an efficiency which will reduce the cost of transporting cargo into space to 1 percent of present costs. Such a vehicle has great implications for the deployment of in-orbit Asat's. Our scarce budget dollars should go to the perfection of these multiuse technologies, to giving us world leadership in every promising research area which can contribute both to our economic and military security. To spend huge sums on deploying interim technologies that provide security only to the defense contractors who manufacture them is a waste of money and weakens, rather than strengthens, the United States. Yet that has been the general course we have followed in defense procurement.

The very concept of deterring an attack on one of our satellites by being able to knock one of theirs is a fiction, incapable of rational substantiation. There is no plausible scenarios under which an isolated attack on one of our reconnaisance satellites could take place, except as an integral part of a nuclear exchange with the Soviets. Destroying a reconnaisance satellite vital to maintaining military stability on both sides—but much more important to us—is an act of war, only justified in the event one side is planning to launch a nuclear war. A scenario in which each side destroys the other's reconnaissance satellites, one by one, in a "tit-for-tat" manner is so ridiculous as not to merit serious discussion. This is best evidenced by the fact that we would end up the loser in the exchange. Assuming perfect Asat's on both side's that could, one-by-one, knock out all the other sides satellites, our loss is far grater than the Soviet's because of our greater dependence on satellites. Why play a game you can only lose?

Perhaps it would be useful to elaborate on this point by describing the nature of the Asat-vulnerable satellites on both sides. The most important of such satellites are the photo-reconnaissance and electronic intelligence-gathering satellites. Both sides have them, but ours are at least two generations ahead of the Soviets. Weather satellites in low-polar orbits and a few others are also vulnerable, but none of our nuclear-burst detection, missile-firing detection or communication satellites are vulnerable.

The photo-reconnaissance satellites can take extremely accurate pictures of such important military targets as missile silos, air bases, seaports, communications centers, et cetera. Elint satellites, depending on their sophistication, can identify and collect data from radar emitters, and other electronic signals, including telephone conversations from automobile telephones. The United States earlier generation photo-reconnaissance satellites depend on physical recovery of the exposed film, which would be periodically parachuted to Earth. The Soviets only recently achieved that capability. Previously they had to return the satellite to Earth in order to retrieve the film. As the U.S. satellite exhausted all of its film spools, it would be necessary to send up another satellite, and the one in orbit would be commanded to destruct. We lost a lot of good satellites and cameras that way.

We assume that by now the Soviets have carefully targeted every significant military installation in the United States, just as we have in the U.S.S.R. The most significant difference between the current capabilities of our two systems is that we can now return the satellite photo and electronic data in real time by electronic means using relay satellites in geosynchronous orbit. We do not have to wait for physical recovery of film a week or a month after an event has occurred, as we believe the Soviets do. Nor do we even have to wait for the satellite to come in range of a U.S. ground station. Our station is in geostationary orbit. We do know that the Soviets understand our capabilities, since the manual for the KH-11 satellite was one of the items which they bought from an entrepreneurial U.S. citizen. Only U.S. citizens are deprived of this highly classified information about our satellite capabilities.

Our photo-reconnaissance satellites can sense earth data in a wide range of visible and invisible portions of the spectrum, including infrared and ultraviolet. We can thus determine in real time the existence of tank and troop movements, evacuation of cities, movement of air and naval forces. It has been said by some intelligence sources that we can identify Dolly Parton or Jimmy Durante among a crowd in Red Square. Infrared sensors can detect, by day or night, if factories are operating, barracks are occupied, equipment is moving. The results of such observations can be transmitted within minutes to command centers for evaluation and response.

Obviously this capability, concerning which I have only scratched the surface in this description, gives the United States vitally important, up-to-the-minute intelligence regarding Soviet military activities, and to some degree their intentions, as reflected in both military actions and communications. U.S. command authority has every reason to feel that the Nation is more secure as a result of our technical intelligence collection capabilities, and that the possibility of a sudden, preemptive Soviet military attack is minimal.

The Soviets, as I have mentioned, have no capability of comparable sophistication, but they do not really need it. U.S. newspapers provide the Soviets with the kind of information which we only obtain by technical means or by stealth and subterfuge in the U.S.S.R. Our technical and scientific publications provide the kind of data—pictures and operating characteristics of the MHV Asat, for example—not available about similar Soviet systems. We cannot keep secret even the existence of a small-scale military operation in our neighborhood, such as Cuba or Nicaragua. It would be impossible for us to initiate in secret the activities required for any major military activity on a global scale, and this should provide the kind of security to the Soviets which we get from our superior satellite reconnaissance capability.

Under these circumstances, as I have said before, a successful Soviet attack on our low-orbit reconnaissance satellites would be a serious blow to our national security. A similarly successful attack by the United States on their system would be a minor inconvenience to the Soviets. This turns upside down the conventional concept of deterrence, which demands that we be able to retaliate against any level of attack in such a way as to accomplish unacceptable damage to the aggressor. To achieve a level of damage substantially less than that accomplished by the aggressor provides no deterrence. The Soviet Union would consider it a great victory if they could trade all of their satellites for just a small part of ours. It would be like trading New York City or Washington, DC, for Minsk or Pinsk. How can military planners in good conscience suggest a strategy, such as that represented by the MHV Asat, in which we claim that we might deter the Soviet destruction of a key element in our national security by threatening the Soviets with a minor inconvenience?

The answer, of course, is that military planners are not that stupid. They, or more probably, some less well-informed Presidential speechwriter will put these kinds of arguments into the President's statement, hoping to influence a few gullible Members of Congress. But the real strategy of the military is better disclosed by their plans for insuring the survivability of our satellites, despite any presently conceivable threat from the Soviets. These plans—most of them already being implemented—provide for making our satellites safe from electromagnetic pulse [EMP], lasers, and other radiation; maneuverable so as to avoid kinetic weapons; equipped with threat-warning sensors; capable of being replaced quickly with on-orbit spares, or by immediate launch of replacements from Earth, and other similar survivability programs, including a fight-back capability. Military expenditures on these vitally important measures exceed by a factor of 10 what we have spent on Asat's, and are a rough indication of military priorities. If deterrence is really desirable and important, it will come not from our Asat, but from our ability to destroy their Asat launch centers, or Asat command, control, and communication centers, in the event our satellites are attacked.

This is not to say that some elements of the military do not have a great desire for the MHV Asat. That desire is fundamentally premised on the theory that the United States will ultimately require a war-fighting capability in space, and some kind of Asat is essential to that war-fighting capability. The Navy's desire to knock out the Soviet Rorsat, which I will discuss shortly, is one of the first examples of the military desire to extend into space all of the capabilities they have, or would like to have, on Earth, such as the ability to knock out forward observation posts or warning radars, which are Earth-based counterparts of a Rorsat. This military desire for a war-fighting capability in space will not go away and must ultimately be faced. The Asat fight is a rather trivial side show, but to the military it is the entering wedge for their larger and infinitely more expensive goal.

If one is interested in playing war games, as the deterrence argument would seem to suggest, then we should discuss the most effective way to destroy all at once all the Soviet satellites, including their nuclear blast detection, missile firing detection and communications satellites. This feat is impossible with either of the two Asat systems in existence, but not beyond the reach of current technology. The most effective way would be to launch two shuttles, one in a polar orbit, the other in an equatorial orbit. Each shuttle would be loaded with the necessary number of small nuclear space mines, each space mine equipped with suitable guidance and propulsion systems, much as a communication satellite has today, and with a radio-activated detonator, such as the Soviets probably use on their co-orbital satellite. Each space mine would be launched toward the general vicinity of the target Soviet satellite, those aimed at geostationary and intermediate orbit targets being launched first, since they have the farthest to go. It is not necessary that they hit the target, or even come close, since a nuclear explosion within a few hundred miles will probably disable the satellite.

When all of the mines are in position they could then be exploded simultaneously by radio command from Earth. The two shuttles should be brought back to Earth before the explosions or we lose them also, and our own satellites should be maneuvered to orbits remote from Soviet satellites, or we should be prepared to launch replacements as soon as possible. As soon as all the Soviet's satellites are destroyed, we should plan to launch all of our ground-based missiles at their Soviet targets, and deploy all of our air and sea forces, away from their bases so that they will not be destroyed by the Soviet retaliatory attack. If the Soviets wait for 30 minutes after we knock out all their satellites and launch our missiles, we can then destroy most of their ground-based missiles in their silos, as well as many of their other vital military targets.

To achieve this minimum half-hour wait, we should probably have the President call Gorbachev on the hotline and tell him that the satellite strike was a mistake, and we will replace them all for free. If that ploy is successful, and if we destroy their command, control, and communication modes, they may not be able to order their submarine-based missiles and ground-based mobile missiles that survive to fire. On the other hand, they may not be able to order them not to fire either, and individual commanders, in accordance with previous orders, will automatically target every major population center in the United States. Or they may, of course, fire all their ground-based missiles upon warning of attack, which they would assume an attack on their satellites to be. In which case, we hope to God the SDI works perfectly, because Washington, DC, will be the first target.

Now this is a very plausible scenario, at least compared to a scenario in which each side knocks out the other's satellites one at a time. It is also probably being played over and over again at the Pentagon and at SAC headquarters in Omaha. It is likewise probably being played in Moscow, since they have the same technological capability that we do to make this scenario work. They would be somewhat more restrained than we would, because a larger percentage of our nuclear missiles are on submarines and invulnerable to preemptive attack. However, development and testing of space mine systems to accomplish this scenario can probably take place under a cover of peaceful satellite activity. In the event of an Asat arms race, it is relatively certain that space mines would be next on the agenda for development.

So much for our discussion of the deterrence theory as it relates to the MHV Asat.

The President next discusses the progress of the Soviet laser program and other programs and their potential application as Asat weapons. This is interesting, but irrelevant to the question of how our national security is threatened by not testing the MHV Asat. We have the same research programs, and are at least equal to and probably far ahead of the Soviets. We should continue with our programs, and they undoubtedly will continue with theirs. As I indicated previously, it is probably because they understand the potential of advanced technologies to the Asat mission, and our superiority in developing them, that they have quit testing their co-orbital satellite and are seeking a treaty to ban deployment of all space weapons. We have surpassed the Soviets in every aspect of high technology military uses of space. It is only natural that they would want to restrain the most expensive elements of the race, the deployment of successive generations of space hardware. But our own interests should be identical. We have demonstrated repeatedly our capability to far outpace the Soviets in research and development of advanced systems. We should devote our resources to continuing that lead, rather than wasting resources on unnecessary deployment of intermediate stages of hardware, which are made obsolete in a few years by new R&D.

The underlying fact which should cause us to refrain from making a battlefield out of space is the inherent fragility of all human infrastructures in space. The huge investments we are making, or planning to make, in peaceful civilian development, as well as the vitally important military systems now used to provide stability and enhance peacekeeping, can all be destroyed in an instant by either side. Right now the Soviets would obtain a very one sided benefit from that destruction. Our best strategy would be to encourage and assist them to commit the same level of resources to peaceful space development as we have, so that our losses would at least be equal in space war. But more importantly, we should both insist on preserving space from becoming a battleground, keep the Asat's, the space mines, the laser battle stations in the science fiction magazines where they belong. And having set that example in space, try to apply it on Earth. We are moving in the opposite direction.

The next reason given by the President in justification of the MHV Asat, if not for the need for immediate testing, really gets down to the meat and potatoes of the issue. The Pentagon is not really worried about deterrence, and I have discussed above some of the reasons. If we can't deter the Soviets with our nuclear missile arsenal, then certainly a minor Asat superiority won't deter them, when we lose if we play the game.

But like all good warriors, the Navy wants to be able to take out the Soviet radar-equipped, nuclear-powered, ocean-observing satellites, Rorsats, which some Navy admirals believe threaten our carrier task forces at sea with their targeting capability. Many other naval experts, in and out of service, discount this argument, for good reasons.

Soviet Rorsats are in position to observe and target U.S. fleets only intermittently. Other location and targeting means are available to the Soviets, such as aircraft, submarines, trawlers, and over-the-horizon radars on land. Satellite radar capability is unreliable and can be seriously degraded by a variety of electronic countermeasures. If systems like the Soviet Rorsat were really useful, the U.S. Navy would have included similar capabilities in their own arsenal, and they have not done so, even though we have technology to do so equal or better than the Soviets. Vice Adm. Gordon Nagler, Director of Command and Control, Office of the Chief of Naval Operations, expressed a common view before the House Appropriations Committee in March 1983, when he said:

> I do not agree with the statement that it is very, very easy to target an aircraft carrier by Rorsat or Elint * * *. We can avoid that. We can really avoid that.

What it boils down to is that the Navy wants anything it can get in the way of marginally useful new technology, just as the Army wanted Divad, and considerations of cost, effectiveness, or strategic necessity and priority are not all that important. The Navy also probably worries a little bit about the high cost and marginal utility of carrier task forces in a central nuclear exchange and thinks that Asat's could play a small role in their survivability. We will probably have more important things to think about when nuclear war finally comes.

I repeat what I said earlier. The Navy, as well as the Air Force and the Army, and probably the Marines before long, want a warfighting capability in space. Navy force can now detect, attack, and destroy enemy submarine and surface forces, aircraft, and land radar installation that can track and locate them. They do not describe these Navy forces as deterrents, but as what they really are, superior warfighting capability, to be used only in case of war. The capability to make an Asat attack on the Soviet Rorsat is precisely the same, and has nothing to do with deterrence. And when war comes the Rorsat will be an absolutely useless piece of junk, either knocked out by nuclear explosions in space, or made useless by the destruction of its ground terminals in the U.S.S.R.

The President does not seem to be really worried with regard to the third certification, that our Asat test and deployment would not gravely impair prospects for negotiations, which he discusses in paragraphs eight and nine of his certification. Since he has already said that he didn't intend to negotiate, his optimism is understandable. Obviously, testing and deployment of our Asat is not going to interfere with negotiations nearly as much as a Presidential refusal to negotiate. He again justifies the testing by reference to the Soviet test of their co-orbital system. Yet, nowhere in his certification does he mention that the Soviets began the development and testing of their system only after the United States had developed and tested its own Asat system, and then had that system fully deployed for a number of years.

This one-sided view taken by the President is, of course, what fuels the never-ending spiral of the arms race. We point to what the other side is doing, yet never acknowledge that the other side justifies its action by pointing to what we have already done. This spiral must end. The President is not contributing to that goal by asserting, as he does, that "we believe that testing can constitute an incentive to the Soviet Union to reach agreement on a wide range of issues and would not impair prospects for a successful conclusion to the negotiations now underway." Such touching faith is admirable if sincere. But such an approach has never worked with the Soviets in the past, and probably will not in the future. And, of course, it does not work when the Soviets try similar tactics on us. We will know for sure when we see the results of the summit meeting in November.

We should comment briefly here on the relevance and purpose of the strategic arms limitation talks [SALT] process over the past generation, for it was aimed at curtailing this senseless spiral. Both sides recognized the difficulties of this process and the results might be marginal. Both sides felt that the primary value of the process was in the opportunities it presented to test the good faith of the other and to move incrementally and by stages toward a stable arms regime which protected the security of each side. Since neither side trusted the other's sincerity completely, and always recognized that some on the other side would never give up the goal of achieving decisive military superiority and eventual military victory over the other, such caution is both understandable and desirable.

Mechanisms, probably inadequate, but certainly capable of improvements, were included to resolve ambiguities and misunderstandings. Some understandings were reached as to certain key sensitivities on each side, such as the onsite inspection sensitivity of the Soviets. SALT was a noble experiment in attempting to achieve bilateral security arrangements, just as the League of Nations and the United Nations were noble experiments in trying to achieve multilateral political and security arrangements. All of these required that, on both sides, there be statesmen with a vision of a future peaceful world, who could help maintain the vigor and the momentum of the institutional processes.

What we have seen is the opposite. Those of little vision have usurped the processes and seek to use them for the old and discredited goals of achieving national military superiority, rather than joint or collective security. The minimum levels of confidence required to make the processes work are being steadily eroded. The goals on both sides are now more how to appear to support the goals of negotiations toward mutual security, rather than to support them in reality. Neither side wishes to forgo the political support of the masses in their own country and around the globe who desire peace and fear the nuclear holocaust to come.

Asat tests and deployment, negotiations in Geneva on nuclear and space arms, the SDI and the November summit must all be seen in this framework. The perceptual engineers on both sides are working diligently to win a war of illusions.

The last certification required of the President is that the test will not violate the ABM Treaty. The President responds in the two sentences of paragraph 10 of his certification.

> The testing against objects in space of the U.S. F-15 MHV Asat system will not give the system the capability to counter strategic ballistic missiles or their elements in flight trajectory and will not constitute a test in an ABM mode. Therefore, such testing is not prohibited by the ABM Treaty.

His statement is partially true, but neglects the real impact of the test. Development of the MHV was initiated many years ago as a part of research on ABM systems. It was magically transformed into an antisatellite weapon and mated with the F-15 as a launch vehicle as Asat research and development funding became more generous and ABM funding languished after the ABM Treaty. In the eyes of those supporting a space-based ABM system, which is the anticipated end result of SDI, the MHV is a key ingredient in at least one tier of a four-tiered space and ground-based ABM system. In its new ABM resurrection, the MHV would be modified to be launched from a satellite, and thousands would be stationed aboard a fleet of satellites, to be launched during the midcourse trajectory of incoming enemy missiles. Perfection of the MHV through testing in an Asat mode serves perfectly the goal of the President to seek prompt deployment of a space-based ABM system. Assertions to the contrary merely indicate the cleverness of the administration in circumventing the well-known position of the Congress to maintain and strengthen the ABM Treaty.

We have now discussed the President's certification with regard to Asat tests in some detail, but by no means exhaustively. The underlying issue remains, should we negotiate with the Soviets on issues of arms control?

The subject of arms control agreements with the Soviets will always be complex and difficult. There are many Members of Congress who agree with the President that no Asat arms control agreement is in the national interest. Many of these members also agree with the President that SALT I, SALT II, the ABM Treaty, and all other arms control agreements with the Soviets do not serve the national interest.

There is a strong and legitimate case to be made for this position. As a practical, fact past and present arms control treaties have not constrained the arms race or increased national security. The most that can be said for them is that they may have temporarily restrained certain categories of arms expenditures, ABM systems for example, while other more mature systems proceeded at an accelerated pace. Arms control negotiations in the past, and today, take up enormous amounts of the resources and skilled manpower of our country, and presumably of the Soviets, for reasons not really related to a desire for arms control. Many in both nations, unfortunately, look upon arms control negotiations and arms control agreements, when reached, as merely another aspect of the mortal struggle in which they are engaged. Their purpose is to gain relative advantage over the other. There is little concept of mutual benefit, benefit to the community of nations, or benefit to future generations of mankind. Or rather, perhaps I should say that the view of many on each side is that the community of mankind and future generations will benefit most if the right side—their side—prevails completely over the other.

Then why do we engage in this charade? Probably because on both sides it is recognized that there is a great hunger among the masses of its citizens for a world free from war. That hunger runs through all of humanity as it contemplates the tragedy of past wars, the wastefulness of the preparation for war, and the potential destruction of the human race in a future war. The political power of this great hunger can be seen and measured in every society. The leaders of the superpowers must make obeisance to this hunger, even as they maneuver to undermine, subvert and defeat the other. The success of our leaders in coopting the desire of the masses for peace into support for the military posture of each country becomes an element in the struggle for global superiority.

Mutually beneficial arms control agreements under these circumstances are highly unlikely. Even the process of attempting such agreements may lead to bitterness, cynicism, and a feeling of hopelessness among the idealists in Congress and throughout the world; a rejection of politics and politicians; possibly a retreat into mysticism or quietism; or, for some, a decision to engage in terrorism and senseless destruction to compensate for the failure of hope.

I venture briefly into the complexities of this discussion of arms control in general because the posture of the President on Asat arms control presents the problem in all of its starkness. If we cannot face it here, then arms control as a means to security and peace is doomed, and the Congress must face that fact. The gradual development of a climate of mutual trust and confidence, a major goal of the supporters of the SALT process, becomes an illusion.

Those who have supported arms control over the years are not all naive idealists. Some are quite pragmatic politicians and, on occasion, even statesmen. They have not sought arms control as a way to gain military superiority or to maneuver the peaceful sentiments of humanity for their own ends. They believe with all their hearts that unrestrained arms competition will, as it has throughout history, result in war. In today's world that war may be our last.

Nor do these supporters of arms control see these agreements as panaceas or an end to superpower rivalry and competition, or an acceptance of the superiority or even the desirability of the other side's political, economic, or social system. Most expect the competition to continue, and believe firmly in the superiority of their own system, and that that superiority will result in the continued strengthening of their systems and the eventual elimination or radical transformation of all competing systems. They believe so strongly in the superiority of their own systems that they are willing to compete in every arena of human activity, not merely in the arena of war. The reason is simple. Of all the arenas of competition, military confrontation and war hold the least promise for the survival of our system or for humanity.

From a pragmatic standpoint of national security, engaging in an arms race, or a military confrontation with the Soviets plays to their strength and to our weakness. As a totalitarian society under military threat, they are more able to devote the best of their limited economic resources to the continued development of their military power. As a democratic nation with noncredible aggressors on our boundaries, or even in our hemisphere, we have greater difficulty in maintaining the posture of a beleaguered nation under threat—a posture essential to the continued public sacrifice required in a militarized nation. We are experiencing these difficulties now, in connection with the fiscal year 1986 military budget. The Soviets experience no similar difficulties.

We are a technologically complex, highly specialized and highly centralized society. We have sacrificed simplicity and survivability for the presumed advantages of complexity. As a comparatively less developed and more dispersed society, the Soviets have an advantage in survivability and recuperation in the event of an all-out nuclear war. A totalitarian political and economic system would be required for the regeneration of all societies after a nuclear exchange. They have it. We do not.

As a self-contained and relatively self-sufficient continental land mass with interior lines of transportation and communication, they have an advantage in defense in depth which they have used effectively for centuries. For the United States to maintain a credible offensive military posture, it must control the global oceans and be able to move troops and supplies over global distances. U.S. command, control, and communication require satellite capability to a far greater extent than does the Soviet situation.

Our strength is in our ability to appeal to the highest aspirations of humanity, as it has been for centuries, and to contribute to the achievement of those aspirations throughout the world. Those who would attempt to defeat the Soviets by emulating them in their crude strategies of repression, secrecy, brutality, subversions, deception, control of political and social ideologies, and restrictions on scientific and technological exchange, are betraying the promise of American democracy and are doomed to failure. Our example of individual freedom, opportunity, respect for human rights, concern for the welfare of all citizens and commitment to growth and change, constitute our greatest weapon in humanity's perpetual struggle against tyranny and injustice. Instead of using that weapon to the fullest, we are presumptuous enough to think that we can fight evil with evil, destruction with destruction. As a consequence, more and more of the world's population are rejecting both of the superpowers, seeing only tragedy and futility from becoming aligned with either.

In conclusion, we in the Congress must deal with both the broad question of how we reverse the deterioration in the SALT process, and with the erosion of the principles of collective security, and how we deal with the narrow question of the flagrant and insulting confrontation of the Congress by the President, as represented by his response to the certification requirement for an Asat test. I will leave the broad question for later discussion by those better qualified than I am, and deal here only with the congressional response to the President's Asat certification.

There are two actions that we could take that probably would be fruitless. A minimum-level response would be a joint resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that the President's certification was a fraud and nullity, nonresponsive to the congressional mandate. Even if passed, it would be of no legal effect and the President would disregard it. It might be a vehicle for some impassioned speeches in both the House and the Senate, but little else.

At the opposite end of the spectrum, articles of impeachment could be introduced in the House, and acted on by the Judiciary Committee. These articles would recite the failure of the President to well and faithfully execute the law, as required by his oath of office. Specific citations are numerous, going well beyond the Asat certification and including failure to prosecute violations of the Neutrality Act, the Boland amendment, the U.N. Charter, and the Charter of the Organization of American States [OAS]. The successful prosecution of an impeachment proceeding is highly unlikely at the present time, but the possibility must not be neglected.

More practical alternatives exist. The first of these would be to reject the conference report on the defense authorization bill, sending it back to conference with a demand that the position of the House on Asat tests be upheld. The House provided for a 1-year moratorium on tests if the Soviets refrained from testing. It was the Senate language which contained the now-discredited certification requirement. Since such language is an obvious nullity, it is mandatory that it be removed.

A second alternative is to use the vehicle of the military appropriations bill to work the will of the Congress on the executive branch. This can be done in either of two ways. First, repeat the House language calling for a moratorium on Asat testing. Second, strike all funds for the MHV Asat and cancel the program. A more reasonable use of the funds, if desired, would be to enhance R&D funds for next-generation Asat's and for satellite survivability options.

I would personally recommend that we do all of the above. That is, reject the conference report on defense authorizations; include Asat test moratorium language in the appropriations bill, or continuing resolution if that should develop; and kill the Asat Program. I invite my colleagues to give their serious consideration to all of these alternatives, so that in the days ahead, we may evolve a workable strategy for responding to the President, as he continues to flaunt the will of Congress.

A FACTFINDING MISSION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, I've just returned from a factfinding mission during the August recess, at taxpayers expense, in the 21 counties of my congressional district in Georgia.

The Third Congressional District has 4 percent of its population engaged in agriculture and the production of food. This compares to 1.4 percent of the total population nationwide.

I held a series of sessions with the beef and dairy cattle farmers and with those who are engaged in general farming.

I'm very concerned with the dispirited and discouraging frame of mind that I found among these groups. Their average age, nationwide, is 50 years old and many are not encouraging the younger generation to enter into an agricultural career.

I was unable to offer them assurance that things would be greatly improved upon the passage of the 4-year farm bill which is now being considered by the House and Senate Agriculture Committees.

However, Mr. Speaker, I do support the Glickman amendment to the farm bill. This amendment would establish a national commission on agricutural policy to review and examine the current farm situation in this country and make recommendations for consistent, long-term farm policy.

This is an idea which I have advocated many times in speeches before this House. In fact, I introduced House Concurrent Resolution 131 urging that a national commission be established, and 91 of my colleagues have joined me in cosponsoring this resolution. This resolution is still bottled up in the Agriculture Committee and Congressman GLICKMAN is a cosponsor.

I am genuinely concerned that American agriculture as we know it is rapidly deteriorating and the vigorous farm economy that we once enjoyed is disappearing. To handle this growing crisis, I believe that a united effort is needed.

I believe that agricultural experts from around the country should be called together to address the long-range concerns of the American agricultural industry.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I support Congressman GLICKMAN's proposal for a National Agriculture Commission and urge my colleagues to support it, too, because we must give our farmers as much hope as is possible.

Another serious concern in the Third Congressional District is the textile industry.

Until recently, this industry which founded the "industrial revolution" was the largest producer of manufactured goods in my district.

For the last 3 years, basic textile manufacturing plants, as well as apparel plants, have been closing their doors at an alarming rate. I'm told that nationwide, we have lost 50 percent of our manufacturing capacity which endangers national security.

The small community of Manchester, GA, just a short distance from Roosevelt's little white house at Warm Springs, lost its major textile plant several months ago, wiping out 750 jobs. The plant had opened in 1910.

During the August recess, while I was at home, one of the remaining plants in operation for 30 years, announced that it was closing its doors because of foreign imports of foundation wearing apparel and garments.

I'm told that many of the workers, mostly women, who had spent the majority of their lives in this plant were openly weeping.

Mr. Speaker, it grieves me to see these two vital American industries—agriculture, and the textile industry, going down the drain.

I would submit that countries such as Japan, France and Germany Denmark, Sweden and others would act to save themselves, and this Congress and this administration seems to simply fiddle while Rome burns.

As serious as these concerns are, there is a situation which is of more concern to my constituents and I would believe that it applies nationwide.

I refer to the ever increasing Federal debt and the deficit.

This matter seems to be on every groups mind, and they were extremely frustrated with the inability of the Congress to address this issue in the last budget resolution passed August 1.

There were accusations from my constituents that the Congress is not serious about cutting Federal spending.

That Congress is accepting deficit financing as a way of life.

Questions, such as: When is the Congress going to take action?

And just tell me, Congressman, why you and your colleagues can't get your act together on this serious matter?

One of my constituents told me that he thought I was doing a good job, but that unfortunately, in his opinion, I would have to be put out of office along with all of the rest of the rascals, in order to send a message to Congress. The rascals being Member's of Congress.

Several weeks ago, I mailed a questionnaire to 204,000 households in my district.

I want to share a representative sampling of the results. As follows—those who wanted to: Protect senior citizens were 5 percent, reduce unemployment were 5 percent, strengthen our defense were 8 percent, reduce the Federal deficit were 77 percent.

I think this points out the mood of the people, which the national polls also confirm.

Mr. Speaker, I recently cosponsored the Leath, MacKay, Slattery amendment, which I thought clearly addressed the deficit more seriously than the recent House/Senate Budget Committee resolution did.

I want to make the following observations.

This amendment would have cut the 1986 deficit by more than $70 billion, instead of the $55 billion, which the House/Senate conferees have cut. Some smoke and mirrors were allegedly used in the process, as some see it.

In my opinion, the 1986 budget resolution is merely better than no budget at all—but it is not a good budget.

It does not take advantage of the supportive mood of America which shouts out in no uncertain terms—"Congress, get our house in order."

It will not make a deep impact on the deficit and unfortunately, it means that for 1986, we will continue the policy of spending $5 for each $4 of revenue.

An extremely disturbing paragraph in the budget document predicts that the Congress will once again raise the debt limit from its already record breaking limit of $1.8 trillion to $2.5 trillion by 1988. Mr. Speaker, I will find it difficult to vote for this measure along with many of my colleagues.

The American people are bound to be frustrated and at their wits end, at the seeming inability of Congress to cope with this disastrous situation which is feeding the trade deficit, mortgaging the future of generations and developing a new entitlement program in the interest due on the national debt which will soon consume 20 cents of each tax payers dollar.

What is the problem? Why can't we cope with this serious concern—when we examine the attitudes of the administration and the Congress we find that the President wants to curb Federal spending and blames the Speaker of the House, Mr. O'NEILL and the Democratic Congress for runaway spending.

The Speaker of the House points out that the national debt has doubled under President Reagan from $925 billion to a debt limit of $1 trillion, $800 billion.

The liberals, are pointing fingers at conservatives and saying, "Its all your fault."

The conservatives are pointing fingers at the liberals and saying, "Its all your fault."

As near as I can tell, all 535 Members of the House and Senate, me included, want the budget balanced. So what is the trouble?

I believe that we can get a hint at the problem when we examine the results of the Leath, Slattery, MacKay amendment.

It would have stopped the indiscriminate growth of the Pentagon budget, yet, it would not have harmed an adequate defense.

It would have addressed the entitlement trap that we find ourselves in, but it would not have violated the basic commitments that we have to Social Security, veterans benefits, and civilian retirees.

It would have protected the poor and would have supported education in an appropriate manner.

It would have closed the loopholes on companies and people who make millions and billions and pay no taxes.

It would have probably prevented increasing the debt limit to $2½ trillion in 1988 because it would have cut the deficit by $350 billion in 3 years.

Finally, among other things, it would have addressed head-on forthrightly, and fairly, the real problem—our massive Federal deficit!

The amendment gave the Congress what we say we've been looking for—an opportunity to stand up and to be counted—to tighten our belts and to do what the people of America are demanding that we do—to slow down this irresponsible deficit and bring it to a halt.

It had every reason to be considered—it was well thought out and double checked by the Budget Committee and the Congressional Budget Office. Yet, it received only 56 votes—(41 Democrats and 15 Republicans) with a total of 372 voting against the amendment.

Now why didn't we support the amendment?

Perhaps a lack of intestinal fortitude, or——

Did it cut too deep into national defense, for some?

Were some concerned because it temporarily froze the cost of living for retirees?

Did the references to revenue enhancement or a tax increase scare some away?

No doubt, some Members voted with the majority, believing that you can't go wrong politically, voting for a lopsided measure.

The answer is—all of the above.

And also perhaps many faced up to the real problem: It might be politically risky.

Well, I'm proud to say that I voted for it, because in the words of Congressman MARVIN LEATH in the final debate of the amendment, he said, "the number one problem is so big, so dangerous, so threatening, that we, as a Congress are going to have to take some risks.

He went on to say that "I have never found an ounce of risk in being responsible."

My friends, there is another group to blame—"the American people" and their special interest groups who are in favor of a balanced budget and fiscal responsibility, and tax reform, as long as we do not cut into their special interest.

Its my opinion that as long as we look to the next election, and try to walk the narrow lines of pleasing and voting to suit these various groups—we will not make progress in our desires to return our country to a sound fiscal and trade policy.

I sense that the voters of America are getting fed up! That they don't care whose fault it is—they just want Congress to carry out our responsibilities and to solve the problem.

I believe that the checks and balance system built into our Constitution by our Founding Fathers, does work and will eventually work in this case.

I firmly believe also, that eventually there will be such an uprising and outcry by the American people against the fiscal policy we are practicing, that the Congress will respond.

It is possible that many of us will be replaced by the voters in the process, and its true that some of us who are "voices crying in the wilderness" will be carried out with the flood!

But until the pendulum begins to swing the other way, we should, as a body, resolve to vote in a consistent manner and to carry out a commonsense policy against fiscal irresponsibility, ignoring partisan policies when necessary.

We should never forget the freedom and advantages which we have as Americans and that is now being undermined and threatened by a massive debt that has now forced America into the category of a debtor nation. Nevertheless, we must be upbeat and proud to stand up for our country.

America, right or wrong, is our country, with the freedom to say what we believe, the freedom to condemn the government, the freedom to make these comments on the floor of the House of Representatives which we could never do in the Soviet Union and other Eastern bloc countries, and the freedom to put into or out of office, elected officials that we do not agree with, which is a tool that our constituents may choose to use, if we don't address the deficit problem.

We have a right to be a proud Nation and we do indeed have a lot to be proud of. So let us as Members of Congress decide now to put our shoulders to the wheel, as we know Americans can do, and resolve these troubling problems.

Mr. Speaker, this concludes my report on my August factfinding trip.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

WASHINGTON, DC,
August 20, 1985.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: On July 25, 1985, I informed you that I had been served with a subpoena issued by the United States District Court for the District of Columbia.

In consultation with my General Counsel, I have determined that compliance with the subpoena is consistent with the privileges and precedents of the House.

Sincerely,

BENJAMIN J. GUTHRIE,
Clerk, House of Representatives.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to:

Mr. JONES of North Carolina (at the request of Mr. WRIGHT), for this week, on account of official business.

Mr. BEVILL (at the request of Mr. WRIGHT), for this week, on account of medical reasons.

Mrs. BOGGS (at the request of Mr. WRIGHT), for this week, on account of serving as a delegate to the meeting of the Inter-Parliamentary Union.

Mr. HYDE (at the request of Mr. MICHEL), for today and balance of week, on account of serving as a delegate to the meeting of the Inter-Parliamentary Union.

Mr. HUNTER (at the request of Mr. MICHEL), for today and the balance of the week, on account of illness in the family.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. KOLBE) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:)

Mr. GOODLING, for 60 minutes, today.

Mr. GILMAN, for 60 minutes, on October 16.

Mr. CRAIG, for 60 minutes, on September 10.

Mr. CRAIG, for 60 minutes, on September 11.

Mr. CRAIG, for 60 minutes, on September 12.

Mr. MOLINARI, for 60 minutes, on September 11.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. ANNUNZIO, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker pro tempore:

H.R. 2068. An act to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for the Department of State, the U.S. Information Agency, the Board for International Broadcasting, and for other purposes;

H.R. 2370. An act to amend the Public Health Service Act to extend the programs of assistance for nurse education;

H.R. 2577. An act making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes;

H.R. 2908. An act to amend title XI of the Education Amendments of 1978, relating to Indian education programs; and

H.J. Res. 251. 187. Also, petition of the city council, Jacksonville, FL, relative to the Fair Labor Standards Act; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

188. Also, petition of American Coalition of Citizens with Disabilities Inc., Washington, DC, relative to apartheid in South Africa; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

189, Also, petition of the city of Denton, TX, relative to revenue sharing; to the Committee on Government Operations.

190. Also, petition of the Central Southeast Ohio Association, United Church of Christ, Columbus, OH, relative to Central America; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

191. Also, petition of Glen H. Harris, Albany, NY, relative to lumber trade; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

192. Also, petition of the city of Arvada, CO, relative to Social Security; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

193. Also, petition of the Democrat Party of Thailand, Bangkok, Thailand, relative to textile and apparel trade; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

194. Also, petition of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, Bangkok, Thailand, relative to textiles; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

195. Also, petition of the Dutchess County Legislature, New York, relative to taxes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

WHAT'S YOUR DEGREE WORTH? WHOM DO YOU OWE? THE COMMENCEMENT ADDRESS OF DR. GEORGE R. FIELD

HON. STEVE GUNDERSON

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, after 17 years of distinguished service as chancellor of the University of Wisconsin-River Falls, one of five University of Wisconsin campuses in my district, Dr. George R. Field is retiring.

On May 25, 1985, Dr. Field delivered his final commencement address as chancellor. I am pleased to include that address entitled "What's Your Degree Worth? Whom Do You Owe?" in the Record for the benefit of my colleagues and their constituents.

COMMENCEMENT ADDRESS SPRING, 1985

At this point in the program, I usually introduce our commencement speaker. But since this is my last year as Chancellor, the Public Relations Committee asked me to give the commencement address. I also heard by the grapevine that they knew it wouldn't cost the university a cent, so I get to introduce myself. I have been President or Chancellor of this University since 1968, 17 years. I have attended 32 out of 34 graduations during this time. I missed one due to illness and one to attend my son's graduation at the University of Colorado. But instead of telling you more about me, let me tell you about this University.

My talk may be more sentimental and emotional than "world wise" because this University means much to those of us who work here. My mother and father were graduated from the University of Wisconsin-River Falls in 1923. I had uncles who graduated before 1920. I have aunts and cousins who attended here. My three sons and two daughters have been at this university and my wife received her degree a few years back. Many faculty and staff can take the podium and say much the same thing. This place is more than a University to most of us, it's family. Now as a family, like all families, we have our good points and bad. We're not perfect but we try to be human. We work within a large system of higher education and we work for the State of Wisconsin. We are not an island to do what we want. We have system rules and state and federal regulations. But within this bureaucracy we try to be flexible and responsive. I've listened to 31 commencement addresses. It will be 32 if I listen to this one. Most were good, especially those at the fall graduation exercises when the faculty member who has been selected as the distinguished teacher gives the address. Most commencement speeches have a theme, a message and, of course, a charge to you as you leave. I will do that too.

WHAT'S YOUR DEGREE WORTH?

All research indicates that you will make more money than those who don't obtain a college degree. And I'm sure you know that the odds for your making more money and being more economically independent are in your favor. But I want to talk about more than just money. You might be interested to know that during this graduation season, starting a few weeks ago and ending mid-June, there will be approximately one million BA degrees conferred, 300,000 MAs and 35,000 PhDs throughout the United States. There will be 15,000 degrees conferred throughout the University of Wisconsin System, and we will confer approximately 550 at UW-River Falls. There will be at least 2,000 four-year public or private universities granting degrees during this period. Approximately 600 are public, state supported universities. Around 75 of these public state supported state universities are very well known. The balance are relatively unknown. A book was written in 1962 called "Colleges of the Forgotten America." We were the colleges of the forgotten America. Almost a quarter of a century later, since that book was written, we no longer are in that category, forgotten, but we are gaining prestige, distinction, and we do have academic quality.

An interesting question might be, "How does your degree stack up against the one million or, for those of you receiving the Masters Degree, the 300,000? Is the degree you're receiving as good as those from Harvard, the University of Michigan, the University of Wisconsin-Madison, the University of California-Berkeley, Stanford, etc.? Is it better or worse? My answer is that it may be worse for a year or two and then equal for a lifetime. Why worse? Many people lcok upon the prestigious as being better. Consciously or unconsciously employers will look at vitae, resumes, and say, "Oh, someone from Harvard—must be good." Comparing Harvard to the University of Wisconsin-River Falls, one might ask, "Where is the University of Wisconsin-River Falls?" Until you get that first job, you may have to be more patient and a better fighter to get your foot in the door. Initially, you may be at a disadvantage, but after that first job, everything is equal.

Now you will be compared to another individual, not to where he or she received a degree and where you received your degree. In five and certainly by ten years, no one will ask, "Where did you get your degree?" They will ask what kind of person you are, how you work, how you think, how you communicate and what you've accomplished so far in your particular assignment. Lee Iacocca, in his autobiography, made a statement that formal learning can teach you a great deal, but many of the essential skills in life are the ones you develop on your own. This university has given you the basics, the start. Now it's up to you.

Let me prove my point that your degree is as good as any in the United States by mentioning a few of our graduates. Look at the wall as you walk into the Student Center Ballroom. You will see pictures of men and women. These are our distinguished alumni. You will find doctors, lawyers, professors, vice chancellors, businessmen, an astronaut, researchers, distinguished politicians and, of course, today you've just met Verne Palmburg, Vice President of sales for a large agribusiness corporation and Neal Jorgensen, a distinguished professor at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. There have even been a couple of university presidents among our graduates but, somehow, they have not been selected as distinguished alumni. Our graduates have achieved success and recognition in all walks of life, just like those graduates from the East, the West and the South. Cardinal Newman once said, "No one was ever honored for what they received, honor has been a reward for what one gave." Those pictures on the wall are of men and women from this University who have given much to their profession and to the communities in which they live.

Let me give you some examples from institutions like the University of Wisconsin-River Falls—institutions that aren't in the upper elite, colleges of the forgotten America. In fact, institutions like us but with different names, perhaps some names you've never heard. Former President Lyndon Johnson was graduated from Southwest Texas State University; Julian Goodman, President of the National Broadcasting Company, Western Kentucky University; James A. Michener, author and Pulitzer prize winner, University of Northern Colorado; the honorable Val Peterson, former governor of Nebraska and former Ambassador to Denmark and Finland, Wayne State College in Nebraska; Marvin Stone, editor of U.S. News and World Report, Marshall University in West Virginia; Val Fitch, a physicist, winner of the 1980 Nobel Prize for Science, Chadron State College in Nebraska; Barbara Jordan, former congresswoman from Texas, holder of the LBJ Centennial Chair on National Policy at the University of Texas, is an alumna of Texas Southern University in Houston, a black college; Mike Mansfield, former Senator and U.S. Ambassador to Japan, Montana College of Mineral Science and Technology; Dan Rather, you've all heard of him, the CBS anchorman, from Sam Houston State University in Texas; Thurgood Marshall, Justice of the United States Supreme Court, from Lincoln University in Pennsylvania; Leontyne Price, the famous opera singer, from Central University in Ohio; and Robert Dole, United States Senator from Kansas, Washburn University in Topeka, Kansas. I mention these names to make my point, that the degree you are receiving today is as good as any degree conferred in the United States. You can go far with the basics that you've obtained during your time at this University. So the good news and my theme—you can be proud of the degree that you will receive today. The bad news or good news depending upon your perspective, is that now you have to prove it. It's not where you get your degree but what you do with it.

WHY WERE OUR KIND OF UNIVERSITIES ESTABLISHED?

Gunnar Myrdal, the Swedish Nobel prize winner in economics, stated that, "Education has in America's whole history been the major hope for improving the individual and society." This University was a Normal School, a teachers' college, a state college, and now it's a University. We were established for the people, for those not able to go to Harvard or to travel far from home—for those, not affluent, who needed a chance to better themselves and to improve society. Many of our forefathers, especially Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln, believed that to have a strong democracy you need to educate the masses. So we're in existence to educate ordinary people. And all of the schools that I mentioned previously were established for the same reason. We're to give you, the individual, the opportunity to improve, to improve society, and to strengthen democracy. There is no question but that the hopes and dreams of the human race still lie in the power of educated men and women. State colleges and universities like UW-River Falls educate about one-quarter of all the people attending institutions of higher education in the United States and most of our clientele are from small towns (we are fortunate to have reciprocity and our friends from the Twin Cities enrolled at this University), not wealthy, who need a chance to improve their lot in life and to contribute to society. Back to our distinguished alumni for a moment—Neal Jorgensen is from Luck and LaVerne Palmberg is from Clayton. Those are small towns and there aren't many millionaires in Luck or Clayton—just ordinary, hard working Americans!

WHAT DO WE DO WITH OUR DEGREES?

You remember I said that we were established to improve the individual and to improve society. But often what we do with our degrees tends to emphasize only the first part of that purpose. We want to get a job and, of course, it is natural for us to start thinking about how we can have the better things in life—get rid of that klunker car and get a new one, buy our first house, plan for that vacation that might take us to Canada fishing. After we've achieved the basics we want to buy the bigger car, the VCR, the self focusing camera and the list goes on and on. We become consumers, credit card carriers and, of course, the new trend in the United States is that we strive to be Yuppies, those urban professionals that make money and spend money. Now I'm not knocking "improve thyself" but it becomes such a habit that we forget the other part—to improve society. As we strive to make more money, we tend to take on the attitude, let someone else do it. Our zealous pursuit of material comforts leaves us little time to get involved. But the question is "If you don't get involved, who will?" It's my feeling that you have and that I have and everyone in this audience has a moral obligation to think about the purpose—to improve society and strengthen democracy. "A cynic," said Oscar Wilde, "is a person who knows the price of everything and the value of nothing." All of us are at fault because most of us know the price of everything and we tend to forget other values. If we are to have a life that is fulfilled, we need to know more than price. We need to know the value of what's important.

WHOM DO YOU OWE?

George Peabody said, "Education is a debt owed from present to future generations." Yes, you owe your family, taxpayers, government and yourself, since many of you are taxpayers. You owe past generations who fought the battles to keep a University at River Falls, for the first residence hall, for a new Centennial Science building, a new Food Science addition and so on. We owe many. If, as I hand you your diploma today, I were to hand you a bill for the full cost of instruction of your education, I would hand you your diploma and a bill for $20,000 and that's a fairly conservative estimate. If I include the cost of depreciation of buildings, it would be $40,000 and that's certainly a rough guess. And if I add the cost of land, it would be $50,000. So you owe plenty. What should you do about this debt? Well, for the first few years, you better not complain about taxes. Then, after you take that first job and you save and struggle for economic security, and you become reasonably comfortable, it's time for you to take on the other jobs that we all shy away from—jobs with no glory and many headaches. For example, run for the school board or the police commission, volunteer to be on the park and recreation board or seek election to the city council or the county board. It's interesting to note that even in River Falls, most people say, "I hope they solve this problem". Very few of us are willing to take on the responsibilities of local government. Why? Very little glory and lots of grief and responsibility. It's kind of a no-win situation so we all fall into the habit of saying there's a problem and I hope they do something about it. We're always saying I hope they, they do something about it. To pay off your debt, it seems to me that you have to be part of the "they." Whether it's running for the school board, coaching Saturday morning soccer, being a part of the Big Brother program, helping out with senior citizens, anything to make your community a little better. Some of you may even want to be politicians and isn't that a tarnished profession? The only problem is, it's one of the most important jobs that needs to be done in this country. We need to have honest, hardworking, and dedicated people willing to sacrifice for our society. But if you don't take on these tasks, who will? I have often thought that we should all tithe our time. If all of us gave just ten per cent to politics, to community affairs, to children, to youth, to our high schools, to senior citizens, to our churches, or our synagogue, how much better this country would be.

The Kennedy family said, "We have so much more, we have to give more." Well, we're not the Kennedys but, as we live in this country with its freedoms and its wealth of goods and services, we must realize that we too have much more and that we need to give more. Only 12 per cent of Americans have college degrees. So, although ours is not an elitist institution, you are an elite and have an obligation to serve.

Dr. Charles Kao, professor of economics here, gave our commencement address about ten years ago. As a Chinese, he naturally had to quote Confucius. He said, "Confucius told us 2000 years ago, a hundred mile journey begins with a single step."

While you may not feel that you have asnwers to some of our major problems, you can take the first step by giving part of your time to service, to improve society and the lot of your fellow human beings.

Abe Lincoln said, "You cannot escape the responsibility of tomorrow by evading it today." If not you, who?

CONCLUSION

I mentioned I would have a theme, a message and a charge. My theme was that this is a good university—a very good university. You can be proud of having made this choice and of having been successful. My message is that we were established to benefit you and society. My charge is for you to serve. Don't be a Yuppie. Serve your community, give back some of your time and effort to activities where you live. Let me end by giving you a few quotes—quotes that I've heard over the years and that I cannot improve upon. Woodrow Wilson before he was President of the United States was President of Princeton University, and he said to students, "Don't forget as you walk these classic places, that you are here to enrich the world and you impoverish yourselves if you forget the errands." You too will have a less satisfying life if you forget the errand. Another one, Dr. Jonas Salk on the recent 30th anniversary of the development of polio vaccine, when asked what his greatest reward was, did not stress the elimination of the disease along with the misery and hurt that accompanies the disease. Rather, he quoted Ralph Waldo Emerson who said, "The greatest reward is the opportunity to do something more." You will short change yourself if you don't do something more. Beverly Sills, who retired from a highly successful career as an opera singer five years ago to become director of the New York City Opera, said, "Instead of expecting everything to come to you, there comes a moment when you have to give. I found that the gain is in giving. I think that is one of the greatest privileges, to be able to give."

I don't want to be morbid at a happy time like this but let me give you two other quotes. When Ernest Boyer, our visiting professor, was on campus last month he made a speech in which he said, "I think it is not sentimental to suggest that students should understand that the tragedy of life is not death, the tragedy is to die with commitments undefined and with convictions undeclared and with service unfulfilled." There is satisfaction in knowing what William James called the greatest use of one's life. To spend it for something that outlasts us. Woody Allen, of course, had another view. He said, "I don't want to be immortal through my works. I want to be immortal through not dying." One can be sympathetic with that goal, too. But those people that I mentioned earlier who are distinguished alumni and who are distinguished alumni from other universities like ours, have spent part of their lives doing work that will outlast them. So I urge you to remember our purpose. We're here to improve the individual and society. And you can have a fulfilled life in contributing a small portion of your time to serving others. We do have more; we need to give. I hope that you undertake tasks and seize opportunities and gain achievements that will outlast you.

I'm proud to confer upon you today the appropriate degree. It's been an honor for me to have been President and Chancellor for these 17 years and it is a special privilege that I will have today to shake your hand. I will end by saying, "Yes, you can make a difference and you will short-change yourself if you don't serve your community and neighbor." Thank you.

GEORGE R. FIELD,
Chancellor, UW-River Falls.

LET US TALK BEFORE WE LEAP

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, to preface my statement, let me say that I firmly believe that the administration should be employing all the pressures that can be brought to bear to insure that the Japanese are abiding by the trading agreements to which they are party. I also support U.S. negotiations to gain greater and easier access to Japanese markets. On the other hand, punitive measures against the Japanese for reasons other than current trade law violations would not only be unjustified, but would also be unwise since it would almost assuredly invite retaliation. Based solely on the $37 billion trade deficit with Japan, one might conclude that sanctions against the Japanese would prove more harmful to them than to us. Nothing could be farther from the truth.

From an analytical standpoint, studies have repeatedly shown that protectionism is inevitably self-defeating. The studies reveal that protectionism invites retaliation, increases prices worldwide, inhibits growth and investment by heightening uncertainty, and prevents debtor countries from earning their way back to solvency. Further, there is little evidence that protected industries can or do use the breathing space provided to restructure. Thus, while domestic industries are hiding behind protectionism, foreign producers are increasing their competitive edge.

In addition to disrupting global trade through protectionism, many people either do not realize or discount the fact that Japan is second only to Canada as an overseas importer of American goods. Exports of U.S. manufactured goods to Japan have steadily increased since 1982, while our exports to the remainder of the world have stagnated. There has even been a 4-year surge of high-technology sales to Japan—including an export rise of 48 percent in computers, 38 percent in telecommunications gear, 51 percent in analytical instruments, 41 percent in pharmaceuticals, and 63 percent in electronic parts. Japan is also by far the largest importer of U.S food products, buying some $6 billion worth of American corn, soybeans, fruit, and beef last year. Finally, Japan's direct investment in the United States has more than doubled since 1980. By the end of 1983, this direct investment totaled $11.1 billion and accounted for 90,000 American jobs.

Before we take punitive steps against the Japanese, I think we have to review our own trading practices to determine if they are consistent with a free market philosophy. For example, in testimony before the Trade Subcommittee earlier this year, it came out that we have the highest import duties on trucks of any industrialized country in the world. In talking with a bakers association, they informed me that it costs them 22 cents a pound for imported sugar here in the United States, whereas their competitors in Canada pay only 5 to 6 cents per pound for the same sugar. The list of examples goes on and on. Thus, when talking about comparative advantage, it should be clear that the United States is not playing entirely by the free market rules either.

The U.S. trade deficit is much more likely a direct result of the U.S. recovery and the strong dollar overseas. A massive Federal deficit drives up interests rates and increases the value of the dollar, making our products less competitive and foreign goods much more attractive to American consumers. The dollar's real value in comparison to other currencies has risen more than 70 percent since 1980. And with American prices up 70 percent in comparison to our overseas competition, it's not surprising that our trade deficit has exploded. For this reason, it is the responsibility of the Congress to take immediate action to reduce the budget deficit and bring interest rates down. Only then will the high level of the dollar come down and the trade imbalance cease to exist.

The following article by James J. Kilpatrick points out the danger in overreacting to the current trade situation. As Mr. Kilpatrick suggests, before we take punitive steps against the Japanese, perhaps it would be in the best interest of the United States to carefully consider all the possible consequences. The article follows.

[From Nation's Business, May 1985]

LET US TALK BEFORE WE LEAP

(By James J. Kilpatrick)

On a Thursday afternoon late in March, the U.S. Senate did an unusual thing: It gave vent to honest emotion. On Capitol Hill, honest emotion is not unknown—it is like rain in Phoenix in May—but this display was something special. The Senate was genuinely angry. Before the afternoon ended, that anger exploded in an astonishing vote of 92-0 for a resolution denouncing Japan for its trade barriers and demanding that the President take "all appropriate and feasible action" to obtain the elimination of the objectionable practices.

Resolutions, to be sure, are toothless tigers; they have none of the bite of statutory law. Nevertheless, the Senate's resolution of March 28 is a portent of legislation yet to come. Congress has played bluffing games before with the Japanese, but unless I am sorely mistaken, this time the Hill means business.

Most controversial stories have at least two sides, and this story is no exception. This is the case for the prosecution:

In the 40 years since World War II ended, Japan has become an economic power second only to the United States. By some estimates, Japan's gross national product soon will exceed that of the Soviet Union. Relieved of the need to spend any significant sums on national defense, Japan has been free to devote its resources to domestic development.

Japan is a giant—but it is a tightfisted giant. It loves to export its own goods, but it erects almost insuperable barriers to imports. Some of these barriers are overt: Japan's tariff on imported beef amounts to 35 cents a pound, compared with our 2 cents a pound; Japan's tariff on oranges ranges from 8½ to 17 cents a pound, compared with our 1 cent a pound.

The most serious obstacles are more subtle. Japan's bureaucracy is even more infuriating than our own. An American exporter can expect nothing but delay, frustration, duplicative paper work, costly "inspections" and mysterious and varying interpretations of the thousands of regulations by which imports ostensibly are permitted but actually are discouraged.

These practices are not new. Japan's unwillingness to follow a Golden Rule as to automobiles led to the domestic content bill that passed the House back in November, 1983.

That bill was a bad bill; it would have reversed the feeble currents of free trade and swept us back toward protectionism, yet it roared to passage on a vote of 219-199. Then the bill went to the Senate, where Oregon's Bob Packwood bottled it up in committee. There the bill died.

It provides a measure of change in sentiment to note that Packwood, flushed with anger, was among the 19 senators who spoke in favor of the March resolution.

"I have reached the limits of my patience," he said. "As chairman of the Finance Committee, I am going to do everything I can to retaliate in kind to any of their products that come to this country."

Very well. To these charges the defense responds in this fashion:

The 1984 trade balance of $37 billion cannot be blamed entirely upon Japan's barriers to international trade. At least half of that sum is a consequence of the strong American dollar. The dollar would not be as strong against the yen if it were not for the inability of the U.S. government to get its own fiscal house in order. Japan has in fact been reducing both its official and its subtle obstacles to U.S. imports. The problem is that many American products are not of the high quality that Japanese consumers have grown to expect. American manufacturers have failed to market their products aggressively. How many American companies have sales directors who speak Japanese? Even with the best of products, it takes time to change purchasing patterns.

The Yanks, in brief, should practice patience and try harder.

The Reagan administration is a free trade administration. President Reagan demonstrated that conviction in his refusal to renew quotas on Japanese cars. The Japanese gave him no quid for that quo, but the President remains committed, to quote the Republican platform of 1984, "to a free and open international trading system." Reagan's patience, unlike the Senate's, is not quite yet exhausted.

The Hill's exploding animosity is understandable. The Japanese have indeed behaved selfishly, even arrogantly; their bland insouciance is insufferable. Yet we ought to remember Congreve's maxim that those who act in haste will repent at leisure. Debate on the Senate's March resolution consumed 63 minutes. Before we enact retaliatory laws, let us talk a little longer.

MEMORIES OF CAMP KAUFMAN

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to the attention of my colleagues the end of a Calvert County, MD, institution: Camp Kaufman. Established in 1953 by Cecil and Joel Kaufman, the camp provided a generation of Washington area youngsters with a welcome respite from life in the big city.

Since shortly after its inception, Camp Kaufman had the good fortune of being run by the late Phil Cox and his wife, Sis.

Phil and Sis were truly devoted to their 9- to 14-year-old charges, blending just the right mix of compassion and discipline.

Earlier this month, Anne Groer, a proud alumnus of Camp Kaufman who is now a White House correspondent, wrote of her summer sojourns to this peaceful spot along the Chesapeake Bay. Anne artfully recalls pleasures as diverse as roaming the beach between Breezy Point and Scientists Cliff in search of sharks' teeth and mastering lanyardmaking in a trice.

With the closing of Camp Kaufman, there is of course a sense of sadness, but also fond memories for the dedicated group of former counselors and campers who gave special meaning to being a Kaufmannite. I believe I speak for many of my fellow Marylanders in offering these few words of praise to those who contributed to making Camp Kaufman a wellspring of growth and knowledge for so many.

QUESTIONS ON U.S. NICARAGUA POLICY

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, as the debate continues on the expanding American role in the war against the Government and people of Nicaragua, I suggest that we consider some of its implications, as explored by the editors of the New Yorker in the issue of June 17, 1985.

[From the New Yorker, June 17, 1985]

On Tuesday of last week, in the first of two articles on American military policy in Nicaragua, the Times quoted "an intelligence official whose opinions have been solicited by members of the National Security Council" as saying that an American invasion of Nicaragua would be as easy as "falling off a log." The story described a new airfield at Palmerola, in the Honduran highlands west of Tegucigalpa, which was dedicated in February. The field, one of eight in the country, has an eight-thousand-foot, lighted, all-weather runway, which "shimmers like a mirage in the midst of a sprawling military town of wood huts, camouflaged anti-aircraft emplacements and repair shops." The story also noted that this year the United States Army's Southern Command is scheduled to receive a detachment of C-7 Caribou planes, which are capable of "landing troops or matériel" on any of nine hundred "tiny, undeveloped airstrips" in the region. According to the Times, "United States intelligence sources in the region have told their superiors in Washington that major Nicaraguan installations are lightly defended"—that thirteen potential targets in the Managua area are guarded only by 57-millimetre and 37-millimetre anti-aircraft guns—and therefore, one intelligence officer has said, "if proper tatics and proper ordnance were applied to those sites, they'd never know what hit them." Another "political military officer in the region" outlined for the Times the most plausible scenario in the event of a full-scale conflict: "The U.S. would come in heavily for a month or so, mostly with air strikes against major facilities. Then a new government would be put into place, and it would come with its own army."

According to "several military analysts," the new government would have to deal with the Sandinistas, who might retreat to the hills and keep fighting, but this new government would probably benefit from "a program like El Salvador, advisers and assistance." The Sandinistas might not be much of a problem anyway, because, "one United States military officer who has briefed members of the National Security Council" said, the people who live in the mountains in Nicaragua don't like the Sandinistas and would chop their heads off. Military analysts said that another problem for the Sandinistas was that "Nicaragua has no counterpart to Vietnam's Ho Chi Minh Trail."

In the second article, the Times concentrated on the political, not the military, aspects of an American invasion, stating that "interviews with almost fifty" government experts in Washington, Panama, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, and Honduras "indicate that discussion of the issue has become commonplace in official circles," and that in the United States "the mood on Capitol Hill in the last few weeks appears to have shifted sharply against the Sandinista government." General Paul F. Gorman told Congress this winter that even if military aid for the Contras fighting the Sandinistas were renewed the rebels could not be expected to change the Nicaraguan government "in the foreseeable future." Therefore, the next step the Administration is most likely to take, said "several officials," is to end diplomatic relations. Senator Richard Lugar, the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, told the Times that he thought this would happen soon, and "then we might recognize a government in exile." As for how the war to install that government might begin, "American officials say they have not dropped the threat to destroy" any MIG jets that the Nicaraguans might get from the Soviet Union; in fact, "they have broadened it to include Czech-built L-39 jet training planes." The Times explained, "The idea is that American warplanes would destroy the new planes and try not to hit anything else. Then in theory the attack would end.

But a senior Administration official said: 'I've never been able to see how that kind of phased operation stops because it sets off an action-reaction. If we hit the airport and maybe kill eighty or ninety people, they could come at the embassy,'" If they didn't come at the embassy, the official added, they might do something else to provoke an attack. "It is difficult to find anyone, friend or foe of the Nicaraguan government, who is confident the Sandinistas will not make a miscalculation that could lead to a military confrontation with the United States," the Times reported. "Many American military and diplomatic officials" have told their "superiors in Washington" that when a confrontation comes neighboring countries would welcome it. If the United States invaded Nicaragua, a Costa Rican official said, his government would issue a statement "saying something like 'it is unfortunate that the Cuban and Soviet advisers were invited in, and that the Sandinistas provoked it.'" An American intelligence officer who has interviewed dozens of people in Nicaragua and has been called upon to "brief numerous senior Administration officials on his views—including Mr. Weinberger, Mr. McFarlane, and Gen. John W. Vessey Jr., the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff" said, "What the people tells me is, 'we'd get out of your way and let you take care of the Sandinistas" if the Americans landed. The biggest problem that United States Forces would face, he added, would be preventing "severe retribution" against Sandinista officers.

Now that the invitations have gone out and the notice has appeared in the newspapers, it's probably too late to break off the engagement. Far be it from us to stand up in the back of the church and voice objections. But we do have a few questions. Real questions, not rhetorical ones. The answers to them are not, we think obvious, and that is the point. What, exactly, is a Czech-built L-39 jet training plane? Have we as a nation finally decided the debate about our right to topple governments we don't like? Do we really dislike the Nicarguan government so much more than, say, the government of Guatemala? (If so, what, exactly, does the phrase "human rights" refer to?) What about those eighty or ninety people who are going to be killed when we bomb the Czech L-39 jet trainers? What if a lot more people are killed—say, eight thousand, or maybe nine thousand? Once we have fallen off the log, what, exactly, are we thinking of doing in Nicaragua? That is, are we going to insure a democratic, non-repressive government? Or will we be satisfied as long as the government is anti-Communist? Are we completely convinced that the agent who did the man-in-the-street interviews was a good reporter, and that other Latin-American countries will welcome this invasion? What if some of them get angry and repudiate their debts to American banks? What about the difficulties in distinguishing between farmer and figher which led to, say, the trouble at My Lai—have we figured out how to prevent them? Will our allies in the free world support us, and should we care? Maybe some Americans—college students and such—will get angry and alienated: how much damage will that do to our country? Is there any way, short of our removing its government, for us to live in peace with Nicaragua? How much money will all this cost, and are there better things to spend that money on?

How much should we rely on experts and officials in this matter? Is there anyone else to rely on? Will falling off the log involve defoliating parts of Nicaragua, and, if so, will there be food shortages and the like? The ex-Somocistas in the Contra camps—what will their role be in the new Nicaragua? If the Russians are so deeply involved in Nicaragua, is there any danger that an American invasion of Nicaragua will escalate into something larger? Will an invasion hamper efforts to, say, reach arms-control agreements? Will the land that that has been given to peasants under the Sandinistas be returned to its former owners? Will an invasion undercut international law? Is international law a useful idea? What, exactly, will we feel when we watch the bodies of soldiers being returned to the United States—will our determination waver or will it increase? Have we citizens of the United States collectively given this whole business as much study as any one of us would give, say, the purchase of a new car?

HAPPY HAROLD THAXTON

HON. WILLIAM LEHMAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, my friend, Happy Harold Thaxton, is gone. His loss, for all of his literally thousands of friends in south Florida, will make our world a less joyous place. Our community, without Happy, will no longer have so zestful a personality.

Happy was not known by that name solely because of his own buoyant personality. He was called "Happy" because that is the way that he made others feel.

He had a great gift and a rare quality. No one encountered Harold Thaxton without feeling better. His calling in life was to make others happy, and this he accomplished with such success that never did a nickname fit a man better.

I would like to share the following article about this outstanding man with my colleagues.

[From the Miami Herald, Aug. 16, 1985]

HAROLD THAXTON, CABLEVISION EXECUTIVE

(By Belinda Brockman)

The nameplate on the Dynamic Cablevision executive's desk read "Happy" Harold Thaxton. It was more than just a nickname, it was a way of life.

"That's Happy in quotes," said Ken Fuchs, general manager of Dynamic, "because that's the kind of person he was."

Mr. Thaxton, a former local radio and television country music performer and vice president of Dynamic, died Wednesday of cancer in Griffin, Ga., where he had a second home. He was 66.

He was known as "Happy Harold" to all.

"A lot of people thought Mrs. Harold was my last name," his wife, Anna said.

Country music disk jockey "Uncle Martin" Whales gave Mr. Thaxton the title.

"I knew Uncle Whales when I worked in radio," Mr. Thaxton said in a 1980 interview. "He called me that name because I was always happy. And I am still that way."

A Miami area resident since 1946, Mr. Thaxton ran unsuccessfully for the Hialeah City Council in 1961. Before the election, he was considered a shoe-in for the seat. But the ballot read James H. Thaxton, his legal name. He always claimed he lost the election because no one recognized his name without the "Happy."

He never entered city politics again.

Mr. Thaxton came to Miami to play professional baseball, which he did, for four years. Then, "he ended up in country music," Anna said.

But country music was nothing new to him. Raised in Georgia, Mr. Thaxton was surrounded by the musical style since childhood. He learned to play the bass fiddle at the age of 15.

In 1951, Mr. Thaxton made his television debut on Channel 4's "Uncle Martin Show" with Whales and Molly Turner. The half-hour program aired Saturday afternoons.

Dressed in a porkpie hat and suspenders, with freckles painted on his face and a tooth blackened out, Mr. Thaxton provided the show's comic relief, as well as being the band leader.

"I thought we were Hee Haw before its time," said Turner, who is now Channel 10's consumer reporter. "He helped me get started in television, so I owe him a lot."

The show's first on-screen sponsor was "Alabama Bill" Lehman, a used car salesman who is now a congressman.

The program later moved to Channel 17 and the name was changed to "Sunset Ranch." Still later, it aired on Channel 10.

With his engaging grin and gravelly voice, Mr. Thaxton continued to charm radio and TV audiences until 1965.

But he was never totally absent from the small screen. From 1969 to 1978, he hosted public television station WPBT's yearly auctions, and was the local host for the Cerebral Palsy telethons from 1972 to 1978.

In 1972, Mr. Thaxton joined Dynamic because he saw cable television "as the coming thing," he said five years ago. He remained with the company until his death.

"He was the kind of person who had a real impact on you when you met," Fuchs said. "He was the epitome of life."

In a semi-conscious state the day before he died, Mr. Thaxton's wife asked him "to give me that "Happy Harold" smile," she said. "And he gave it to me."

In addition to his wife, survivors include his mother, Susie; four sisters, Annetta Eubanks, Sara Proctor, Joyce Thaxton and Mabel Peters, and a brother, A.L.

Visitation will be from 5 to 9 p.m. today at the Lowe-Hanks Palm Avenue Chapel, with services at 1 p.m. Saturday.

Memorial donations may be made to the American Cancer Society.

CONTRIBUTING TO DEVELOPMENT IN PARAGUAY

HON. NICHOLAS MAVROULES

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Speaker, I want to call my colleagues' attention to the generous donation of two Massachusetts organizations toward promoting education in Paraguay.

Through the Peace Corps Partnership Program, the Bilingual Club of Haverhill High School and the Boston Area Returned Peace Corps Volunteers have funded the expansion of a local primary school in a small community in Paraguay to accommodate secondary students as well.

The Peace Corps Partnership Program ought to be applauded for providing the channel for private sector donations to developing nations. In the last 20 years, the Partnership Program has helped the American private sector provide more than $3 million for 2,000 self-help projects in 90 developing nations. I would like to especially commend the Bilingual Club of Haverhill High School for being a partner of such a worthwhile endeavor.

OWING 1 CENT TO THE IRS

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with you a letter I recently received from a constituent about the penalty he had to pay for miscalculating his income tax liability. While I understand the importance the Internal Revenue Service places on ensuring that everyone pays his or her fair share of taxes in order to reduce the deficit, this letter illustrates what incredible lengths the IRS has gone to in carrying out its task. Should we really be squeezing pennies out of taxpayers to reduce the deficit?

U.S. Representative PHIL CRANE,

Crystal Lake, IL.

DEAR PHIL: I thought that you would be interested in how efficient "The" Internal Revenue System is. As you will note the bill had to be made out and sent, costing a minimum of 23 cents (postage alone). This of course is 2,300 percent of the unpaid amount, 1 cent. The 1 cent is 1/23,866th of the total bill presumably owed.

The penalty is supposed to be 50 percent of the unpaid balance and the interest is supposed to be 13 percent per annum compounded daily. Now it is possible that 1 cent compounded daily could reach $1.33 in 100 days, but this seems quite unlikely since 13 percent of 1 cent is $0.00136 per year or $0.00000356 per day. Of course compounding does have a great effect but even after 100 days the normal interests only comes up to $0.000356 which would then be a total debt of $0.010356 to which we then add the penalty of 5 percent on the unpaid tax, plus 50 percent of the interest charges which then totals:

Interest	$0.010356
Penalty	.000500
Penalty on interest	.0605178
Total payment due	.0113738

As you can see there is a very large discrepancy between these two.

Maybe you should turn over the problem of the National Debt to the IRS. They would bankrupt the country in nothing flat.—No business.

Sincerely yours,

HERBERT W. FRITZSCHE,
President.

ELEVEN HEADS OF STATE SUPPORT PUERTO RICO'S PLAN FOR DEVELOPMENT OF THE CARIBBEAN BASIN INITIATIVE

HON. JAIME B. FUSTER

OF PUERTO RICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. FUSTER. Mr. Speaker, the July 31, 1985, edition of Caribbean Business reported the contents of a joint letter which 11 heads of state from Caribbean nations recently sent to President Reagan. In general the letter expressed their concern about the future of the CBI.

One of the points highlighted in the letter was the heads of state backing of Puerto Rico's plan to finance economic development of the Caribbean region with funds generated under section 936 of the U.S. Internal Revenue Code. I feel it is important for the Congress to learn how these leaders feel about this important issue and thus I quote from their letter to President Reagan:

As you are aware, consultations have also been taking place between several of our countries and the government of Puerto Rico concerning the use of funds available to Puerto Rico under the provisions of Section 936 of the Internal Revenue Code to finance a number of projects.

These projects could have a positive effect on developmental efforts jointly in Puerto Rico and in the countries of Caricom. We clearly perceive these as being not only to the mutual benefit of Puerto Rico and our countries but also very much in line with the objectives of the CBI.

In a few days the Ways and Means Committee will be dealing with the fate of section 936 of the IRS Code. That section is not only vital to Puerto Rico's economic development but to the Caribbean Basin Initiative as well.

I trust you will take these important considerations and the views of the following heads of state into account when you participate in the approaching deliberations:

Vere C. Bird, Prime Minister, Antigua and Barbuda; Bernard St. John, Prime Minister, Barbados; Lynden Pindling, Prime Minister, Bahamas; Manuel Esquivel, Prime Minister, Belize; Herbert Blaize, Prime Minister, Grenada; Edward Seaga, Prime Minister, Jamaica; John Osborne, Chief Minister; Montserrat; Kennedy Simmonds, Prime Minister, St. Kitts-Nevis; William George Mallet, Deputy Prime Minister, and Minister of Trade Industry and Tourism, St. Lucia; James Mitchell, Prime Minister, St. Vincent and the Grenadines; Erol Mahabir, Minister of External Affairs, Trinidad and Tobago.

TRIBUTE OF CONGRESSWOMAN BARBARA BOXER TO THE CALIFORNIA VETERANS HOME AT YOUNTVILLE

HON. BARBARA BOXER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay special tribute to the California Veterans Home at Yountville, which is celebrating its 101st anniversary this year.

This historic home at Yountville is the largest of its kind in the country. It houses more than 1,400 men and women who served the United States with courage during the First and Second World Wars and our Wars in Korea and Vietnam. The home provides these veterans with medical care to meet their needs, the opportunity to work and to relax as they please, and an environment where they may live with the dignity and respect they have earned many times over.

What makes the home so special is that it is based on caring—the caring of staff members and volunteers, and of the veterans for one another. Sometimes this care can blossom into love as it did for one couple in their eighties who met and married at the home. There are presently 18 married couples residing at the home. The California Veterans Home at Yountville indeed deserves the highest tribute, for it has been much more than a place to live over the last 101 years. It has been a home.

PAY EQUITY STUDY LEGISLATION—LAUDABLE

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, prior to the August recess, the House of Representatives debated H.R. 3008, the Federal Equitable Pay Practices Act of 1985. In light of the fact that this important legislation will be returning to the House floor this month, I wanted to express my wholehearted support of this measure to study the Federal Government's job classification and pay systems.

H.R. 3008 was reported out of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, with bipartisan support, on July 24, and since that time a barrage of information has flooded our offices opposing the intent of this legislation and the study. These red flags of caution and warning I contend are unwarranted. Are those in opposition to a study of the Federal work force afraid of what may be discovered?

Pay equity concept is evolving into an important issue of the 1980's. As an issue of this decade, pay equity is not a new or innovative idea of our times. At an International Labor Organization Conference held in Rome in 1951, 80 nations passed a resolution supporting comparable worth. Additionally, more than 100 comparable worth/pay equity initiatives now exist at various governmental levels around the country. Six States have implemented comparable worth/pay equity policies, and other States are in the process of studying their State's pay classification and compensation systems. I contend now is the appropriate time for the Federal Government to review it's classification and wage systems to determine if ethnic origin, gender, or race are elements used in setting pay scales in the Federal work force.

H.R. 3008 establishes a bipartisan "Commission on Equitable Pay Practices" to oversee a study conducted by an independent, private consultant on the Federal classification and wages. The study will take into consideration positions of classified employees of the Federal Government, it will not affect local or State public sector employees or the private sector work force.

H.R. 3008 offers important technical revisions that were not included in H.R. 5680, which was passed by the House last year. The revisions include a March 1985 GAO recommendation on how to conduct a pay equity study by expanding the study to determine if economic variables such as education, locality, merit, productivity, seniority, veterans status, and work experience are associated with occupational pay differentials. Economic analysis joined with job content analysis will provide for a well rounded approach to the study.

The questions asked by this legislation, and determined by a careful study are legitimate. An undertaking of this nature will essentially provide the administration and Congress with information and recommendations to determine if Federal pay practices are consistent with section 6(d) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 and title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

The Federal classification and pay systems were established by the Classification Act of 1923, and since that time there has not been a general review of the system. I believe now is an appropriate time to address this matter. It would be rather naive to think that some Federal positions have not become institutionalized, over the years, by a particular gender or race. Let's not push aside a fact finding study of the classification and wage systems and an opportunity to improve the Federal Government as a responsible and fair employer.

The Federal Equitable Pay Practices Act of 1985 is a laudable piece of legislation to assist the administration and Congress in identifying, and if need be address, any forms of discrimination that may exist within the Federal pay system. I strongly urge my colleagues to seriously consider favorably H.R. 3008.

PROMOTING DEMOCRACY

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Foreign Affairs Newsletter for August 1985 into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

PROMOTING DEMOCRACY

The American people believe the U.S. should promote the growth of democracy. That belief is shaped by the nation's history and is reinforced by a confrontation with modern ideologies that reject the principles and practices of democracy.

Today democracy is challenged as rarely before. Social and economic ills are its enemies. Indeed, some argue democracy is suitable only for wealthy post-industrial nations and not for improverished societies with severe socio-economic imbalances. Democracy's foremost political challenge comes from the Soviet Union, which regards its system as an international model of government and vigorously promotes its cause worldwide through the communist party and the force of arms.

Despite the challenge, democracy's position is not hopeless. Freedom House, a private group that monitors political and civil liberties around the world, found ten years ago that one person in five lived in full freedom under a democratic government. Today, the figure is one in three. Of the present 167 nations and 52 dependent territories, 53 nations and 32 territories are fully free, and 55 nations and 3 territories are without any freedom at all.

The status of democracy varies. The most encouraging trends have been in Europe and Latin America. Spain, Portugal, and Greece reestablished democratic governments in the mid 1970's. In Latin America, Brazil, Argentina, and Uruguay recently joined the democratic fold. The situation remains poorest in the Middle East and Africa. Israel is considered the only true democracy in the Middle East, and Freedom House finds only two democracies in Africa, Mauritius and Botswana.

Democracy's survival depends on its ability to overcome economic, social, and political challenges. Because of these challenges, President Reagan in 1982 told the British Parliament that a "global campaign" was necessary for democracy's survival and growth. He urged a coordinated effort by the major Western democracies, not only to foster democracy elsewhere but to rejuvenate the commitment to democracy within Western societies.

The promotion of democracy poses risks. Democracy reflects a specific historical experience and no one should expect all democracies to develop the same way. The promotion of democracy may look to some like interference in another country's domestic affairs. Also, proponents of democracy sometimes attempt to establish democratic institutions in countries that lack the social and economic structure to support them. Democracies function best where there is a pluralistc structure of private enterprise, educational institutions, labor unions, and other professional and interest groups. Furthermore, there is need for caution in supporting individuals who claim to back democracy. Sometimes these same leaders later adopt anti-democratic methods.

The U.S. already has taken significant steps to promote the spread of democratic values. In 1983, Congress established the National Endowment for Democracy, which seeks to promote and support initiatives from the two major U.S. political parties, labor organizations, business groups, and university foundations. It also assists the work of other government-supported offices like the U.S. Information Agency, the Voice of America, and Radio Free Europe.

Political party foundations in several Western countries have also assisted the growth of democracy through their support of counterpart political parties in southern Europe and Latin America. U.S. political parties are not as ideological as their European counterparts, but they are also beginning to promote and assist the development of political parties in countries struggling to strengthen their democratic systems. Coordinated policies supported by several countries will have a greater chance of success, and can give support to all democratic parties in a nation rather than just one.

U.S. development assistance can also help strengthen democratic institutions. Many democracies now face serious debt problems and their survival will depend in part on how we can help them through this period. Several other democratic countries have significant development assistance programs. These programs help address social and economic deprivation and help nurture political and cultural institutions that enhance democracy. To realize these goals, the U.S. needs to reassess the present imbalance in its aid program favoring military assistance, which does little to foster the emergence of domestic conditions favoring democracy.

Another step the U.S. and its sister democracies can take is to respect the political independence and territorial integrity of sovereign states. Promoting the overthrow of governments because their principles and system do not conform to democratic ideals will not aid the cause of democracy. Democratic governments will help their cause most by following accepted international rules and using the tools of diplomacy.

Finally, the most important step we can take to assist democracy is to live up to our own ideals. Democratic societies are on trial before the world as they address equal opportunity in education and employment, and such issues as drugs, crime and other less attractive aspects of free and individualistic societies. They are rightly judged not just by the freedoms and opportunities they provide for the most capable, but also by the compassion they show to those least able. Each step taken by democracies to make their societies a better place to live will serve as proof of the value of democratic government.

THE SHOE TAX BECKONS

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, by September 1, President Reagan has to make a decision in regards to the International Trade Commission's [ITC] recommendation to impose quotas on imported footwear. I recently cosigned a bipartisan congressional letter to President Reagan urging him to take into consideration the interests of the American public as a whole and reject the footwear quotas.

The effect that the quotas would have on American families, especially the elderly and the low-income consumers, must be weighed into this decision. Quotas would slap a hidden tax on consumers that would drive up shoe prices, costing consumers billions of extra dollars and they would restrict the freedom that Americans enjoy of purchasing whatever shoes they want and can afford. Over half the shoes sold in America retail for under $15 and they are virtually all imported. Quotas cost money—and the people who would pay the price of protectionism would be those least able to afford it.

The ITC estimates that the shoe quota would cost the U.S. consumer $50,000 per year for each $14,000 a year job that is saved. In terms of overall dollars, it would result in at least a $1.5 billion per year extra burden on the American consumer. Mr. Speaker, in this case, the cost of restraints is too high and the benefits to the domestic shoe manufacturing industry too negligible to warrant any such action.

I am submitting the following article from the New York Times, appropriately titled, "The Shoe Tax Beckons." Although the quotas would be aimed at protecting the domestic shoe industry, they would be doing so by in effect adding an extra tax to the current price of shoes. The article follows.

THE SHOE TAX BECKONS

The U.S. International Trade Commission, yielding to pressure, recommends quotas that would reduce imports of shoes sharply and drive up their price. President Reagan must now decide whether consumers should finance this remedy, saving American jobs at an annual cost of $50,000 each.

Shoes offer a model study in what's wrong with protectionism, and why it's so hard to stop.

Manufacturing inexpensive shoes requires only simple machinery and abundant low-cost labor. That is why Brazil, South Korea, Taiwan and other low-wage countries produce most of the shoes sold in the United States. Their competition has forced American manufacturers to retrench, closing two-thirds of their plants in the last 15 years. Many of the remaining plants are profitable only because they produce high-quality shoes, whose style is more important than price and whose main competition comes from high-cost factories in Europe.

Competition ought to determine the future of the industry, allowing smarter, more flexible domestic producers to find their niche in a market dominated by low-cost third-world producers. Indeed, the growth of the American economy depends on its gradual shift from low-wage, labor-intensive to high-wage, high productivity industries that can sustain rising living standards.

What's good for most Americans, of course, isn't necessarily good for those who own or work in shoe factories. Of the remaining U.S. producers, the most marginal couldn't possibly survive open world competition. Even the most productive would benefit from protection. From the Carter Administration they got temporary quotas on imports from Taiwan and Korea, briefly halting the industry's decline. To the shoe makers' dismay, President Reagan chose to interpret "temporary" to mean just that; quotas were allowed to lapse in 1981.

Last year the International Trade Commission, an independent Federal agency, denied the shoe makers' petition for import relief, citing the high profitability of the more modern shoe companies. So the industry went back to work the new-fashioned way: lobbying Congress. That changed the commission's mind, and for an obvious reason. The shoe makers speak with a single voice and can point to job losses in 48 states. Thus their influence in politics far exceeds their importance to the economy. The Senate Finance Committee insisted that the Trade Commission reconsider.

This time around the commissioners voted 4 to 1 for a plan that would limit imports to 60 percent of the market saving an estimated 26,000 jobs. By the reckoning of the one dissenting commissioner, that would cost consumers $1.28 billion a year, three times the wages of those 26,000 workers.

To resist, President Reagan may need more than arguments. Though plainly devoted to free trade, he has already yielded expensive import relief to the clothing, steel and motorcycle industries. A nation benefiting from open trade needs to offer something better than protectionism to workers and communities caught in the tides of industrial change. But that is a policy problem that Washington has never taken seriously.

LET'S IMPROVE OUR COUNTERINTELLIGENCE CAPABILITY

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, our Government must do more to expand and professionalize our Nation's counterintelligence programs. Congress has been supportive of this effort and has made additional resources available. Given the dramatic rise in espionage directed against our Government and the private sector, much more needs to be done to counter this growing threat to America's security. I want to share some views on this important issue from the Washington Post with my colleagues in the House.

While all Americans are both worried and disturbed about the recent Walker spy case, it is important to realize that our Government can do more to limit the spying activities of foreign intelligence services in this country. It is incredulous that the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the agency responsible for counterintelligence operations in the United States, is undermanned in the counterintelligence area. I understand that the counterespionage capabilities of other agencies in our Government could be upgraded with the introduction of more resources to include additional personnel specializing in this important area.

A key element of this question is limiting the number of foreign intelligence operatives in the United States. While it is possible for the FBI to monitor the movements of some Soviet intelligence personnel assigned to their Embassy in Washington, hundreds of Soviet personnel assigned to the United Nation's Secretariat in New York have free access to all States and cities in the United States. Among United Nations employees, the large Soviet delegation has the reputation of not doing much official United Nations work. They apparently spend a lot of time, however, traveling around the United States literally siphoning up valuable intelligence information. It is understood that the Soviets collect so much information that they have real difficulties in sorting, processing and collating much of it. Fortunately, Congress is moving ahead and passing legislation designed to limit the number of Soviets who are assigned to their Embassy and to their U.N. delegation.

With those concerns in mind, I commend the following article to my colleagues in the House. Obviously, we cannot do enough to protect America's security. The time for action is now.

CONGRESS, AGENCIES CLASH OVER COUNTERINTELLIGENCE

LAWMAKERS CALL ADMINISTRATION EFFORTS WEAK

(By Charles R. Babcock)

In the spring of 1984, Sen. Malcolm Wallop (R-Wyo.) received a certificate naming him an "honorary counterintelligence specialist" in the Central Intelligence Agency. The award was said to be in recognition of his efforts to establish a semiautonomous core of career counterintelligence (CI) specialists in the agency.

Wallop, then chairman of the Senate Intelligence budget subcommittee, was neither honored nor amused.

"The CIA ridiculed the career specialist by giving me the award," he said in an interview. "It was designed in total cynicism, with little boys laughing behind doors."

So he wrote, and Congress approved, language in the classified intelligence agencies' authorization bill report for fiscal 1985 requiring the CIA to reestablish CI as a career service. It still has not been done, he and other intelligence sources say.

Doing something about counterintelligence has been a hot topic since accusations in May that alleged spy John A. Walker, Jr. and others for years had passed U.S. Navy secrets to the Soviets. To Wallop and other critics, the Reagan administration's inaction on the "CI specialist" mandate reflects a broader lack of commitment to improving the nation's ability to protect secrets from foreign agents.

"This country," Wallop said, "has virtually zero counterintelligence capability."

He argued that the CIA's counterintelligence system is inadequate because the officers now working in it will someday rotate out to work for other officers whom they may have investigated or whose operations they may have challenged. The result, Wallop said, is a too casual effort, in which the tough questions are not asked about the credibility of agents, operations or even technical systems.

Although few others are so critical, interviews with current and former intelligence officials suggest that the Reagan administration's strong words about counterintelligence have often been matched only by half-steps.

President Reagan said in a radio speech in June that "we've developed a list of things to be accomplished in the counterintelligence and security areas." He has signed two secret directives to study and act on the counterintelligence problem, but little of substance has been accomplished because of bureaucratic resistance, several sources said. A separate directive to revamp personnel security policies has been languishing without action for more than a year.

Funding for more FBI counterintelligence agents—who are responsible for counterespionage operations in the United States—has been added to recent budgets, but only over the objections of administration budget officers. There are now about 1,200 CI agents in the FBI, sources said. But they are still outnumbered, and squads of inexperienced clerks have been used for years to help keep track of potential foreign agents in at least four major cities.

Administration spokesmen declined to speak on the record about the counterintelligence issue. But several members of Congress did. Rep. Lee Hamilton (D-Ind.), chairman of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, said "sometimes it takes a strong blow across the snout," such as the Walker case, to get the administration and Congress to focus on a problem. "Politicians, including myself, are responding to it," he said.

The broad definition of counterintelligence means protecting the nation's documents, communications and secret facilities from penetration. To most people, however, counterintelligence means the stuff of spy novels, the American agent trying to stop the KGB from recruiting a U.S. spy or catching a spy in place.

The main responsibility is split between the CIA, which keeps track of foreign intelligence agents overseas, and the FBI, which does the same in the United States.

Hamilton and Sen. Patrick J. Leahy (D-Vt.), vice chairman of the Select Committee on Intelligence, said long-term solutions are required, in addition to the increased use of polygraphs and imposing the death penalty on military personnel for peacetime espionage, the two measures passed by Congress so far.

Hamilton said the least expensive and most important step to protect national secrets would be enforcing the "need to know" policy. "A security clearance shouldn't entitle anyone to see anything. Someone should have access only if he needs it for his job."

A theme in much of the criticism is that counterintelligence is not viewed as a path to career promotion at the CIA or FBI, or the State Department, where security has long been a low priority.

Rep. Dave McCurdy (D-Okla.), chairman of the House intelligence oversight subcommittee that has been holding closed hearings on counterintelligence, said he feels the biggest security problem is at the State Department. He said CIA Director William J. Casey had accepted a recommendation by an internal CIA commission to give more independence to the CI staff there. "It's fine-tuning at CIA," McCurdy said. "It's trying to stop a flood at State."

He cited recent reports of bugged typewriters in the U.S. Embassy in Moscow and the hiring of foreign personnel in the embassy. "The Soviets [employes] have the run of the first five floors of our embassy in Moscow," he said. "It's ridiculous."

Hamilton said, "The Soviets do have extraordinary technical skills to penetrate our embassies and secure buildings and a Pinkerton guard from the local plant just isn't aware of what he's up against. Training and skills are critical. People have to be schooled in the techniques of modern espionage."

The Senate intelligence committee, for example, reported earlier this year that a Soviet facility at Glen Cove, N.Y., is believed to be intercepting so many U.S. telephone and telex messages that it requires the shipment of tons of material to Moscow each year. The National Security Agency has embarked on a major program to provide more scrambler phones for the nation's military and intelligence communications systems.

Rep. Andy Ireland (R-Fla.), also a member of the House committee, blamed the lack of concerted action on "bureaucratic inertia. Sometimes there are so many facets of a problem people are mesmerized into doing nothing."

The administration's uneven record on counterintelligence seems, at least in part, the result of longstanding and deeply felt differences about the best way to counter foreign spying here and abroad.

Melvin Beck, a CIA agent who shadowed KGB agents in Havana and Mexico City in the 1960s and has written a book about it, said he thought the experience was unglamorous and silly. Installing a microphone in a KGB officer's apartment resulted only in hours of tapes about his family life, not his spying, he said. "It's all a big game for both sides."

Counterintelligence is also an emotional issue because it amounts at times to spying on colleagues in a secret world where relationships must be based on trust. Mention of the name James J. Angleton, deposed a decade ago as chief of the CIA's counterintelligence staff, still generates controversy because of accusations that he unfairly wrecked the careers of some CIA officers he suspected of being Soviet moles.

In 1980, then-Director Stansfield Turner convinced Congress to approve a special fund to compensate CIA officers considered victimized by Angleton. Angleton supporters argue that any steps he recommended were approved by his superiors.

Wallop and others say an environment must be created in which intelligence information can be challenged and all potential security risks assessed. "There's an inherent dislike on the part of intelligence professionals to be second-guessed," Wallop said, adding that the CIA needs "the skeptical guy on the block."

Wallop said his ideas for changing counterintelligence at the CIA weren't easy to sell to the Senate intelligence committee because of the Angleton legacy. "It was so easy for [Deputy CIA Director] John McMahon to talk Bill Casey out of my idea of multidisciplinary analysis on the basis of Jim Angleton, which was totally irrelevant. To Bill's credit he later came around to the argument I was making. But when it was first presented Angleton was thrown up."

The first Reagan presidential directive to take action on the CI front was drafted by the National Security Council staff in 1981. But some senior career intelligence officials lobbied to change the order to a study, sources said.

NSA, which intercepts foreign communications and attempts to break the coded messages of other nations, opposed suggestions that it had not rigorously addressed the possibility the Soviets were passing false information through its technical collection systems. NSA's reluctance may come about because billions of dollars and careers are invested in U.S. technical systems, Wallop said.

When the study was completed, a new action order was drafted. As a result, a new national intelligence officer for deception was created in late 1983. A former head of the CIA's overhead photo interpretation center, R.P. (Hap) Hazzard, was picked for the job. But executive branch and congressional sources said that little else was done.

When the directives failed to get much action, Wallop led the fight to write part of the counterintelligence agenda into the fiscal 1985 intelligence authorization bill. Besides the CIA career specialty, he got the votes to order the agencies to set up units to conduct "multidisciplinary counterintelligence analysis."

Usually in intelligence work, an intercepted communication or agent report that tends to confirm something in satellite photography would be taken as corroboration and, the more varied the sources, the more credence the conclusion would be given. The multidisciplinary counterintelligence approach would look at the same material for signs that it had been intentionally planted.

One intelligence official familiar with the idea said the CIA does make a good-faith effort to look for deception but often can't find the evidence. "Some things you just have to believe or you will put a caveat on everything you say and then you might as well go out of business," he said.

Wallop said, "The two things in the '85 budget, the career slot and the multidisciplinary analysis are still not effective creations . . . To date the effort has been accommodation rather than commitment. It simply cannot succeed as an accommodation."

Wallop added that recent congressional attempts to strengthen counterintelligence "are literally cosmetic, absent a more serious effort. The death penalty is not a counterintelligence policy. It can clearly be useful as a deterrent and it satisfies the national mood to be outraged . . . But it still isn't at the core of the problem."

The best way to aid the FBI is not simply to increase the number of counterintelligence agents, several experts agreed, but to try to shrink the problem by cutting the number of Soviets in this country or putting greater restrictions on their travel.

An amendment sponsored by Leahy and Sen. William S. Cohen (R-Maine) to make Soviet and U.S. diplomatic missions more equal in size was passed by Congress late last week. So was a proposal by Sen. William V. Roth Jr. (R-Del.) to limit the travel of Soviet nationals who work for the U.N. secretariat in New York.

Roth, a member of the intelligence committee, said that with 4.3 million Americans with security clearances "the best choke point is on the other side—better control of those on the Soviet side." He noted that the committee issued a report in May charging that 200 of the 800 Soviet U.N. employees were intelligence officers.

"The good news," Leahy said, "is that as a result of the Walker case and others, people are actually focusing on this and the administration and Congress will look for long-term solutions."

IT COULD COST, NOT PAY

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, the following article appeared in the News American on Monday, July 29, 1985. I feel it is worth repeating.

At first blush the Senate's proposal to impose a $5 per barrel tax on imported oil sounds like a great revenue raiser—and a way to reduce the national deficit. It's estimated that the fee and the resultant increased costs on refined products would yield about $20 billion over the next three years.

Right away there is a problem with the White House, because President Reagan still is insisting that the way to cut the deficits is not to raise taxes but to reduce federal spending. The president hasn't reacted to the Senate's proposal so far, but a senior White House official said it would take "a big horse pill to get him to swallow this."

But the Senate's proposal has a number of economists concerned about the overall negative impact on the economy.

For one thing, some economists claim, the higher tax on energy would affect industry as well as motorists and homeowners, and there would be a resultant slower growth in the gross national product, offsetting much of the gain from the increased taxes. Also, oil prices have come down, and if they come down further inflation likely would fall and real economic growth would increase. Faster growth would in turn increase Federal revenues.

There is a further concern that with the $5 fee increasing the price of crude oil and natural gas in the United States but not in other countries the domestic oil industry would be placed in an unfavorable competitive position with other parts of the world.

Other economists have found these arguments, debatable, but the point is that the Senate, in what appeared to be an easy way to raise revenues, has opened an economic Pandora's Box.

It may be President Reagan will reject the proposal outright. But if he doesn't it would behoove the Senate to take a far deeper look into the possible results before going ahead.

HIGH TECHNOLOGY ACTIVE BUSINESS ACT OF 1985

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, July 31, 1985, I introduced the High Technology Active Business Act of 1985, which was designed to eliminate problems associated with the imposition of personal holding company tax on small software companies. Because of the interest that this legislation has generated, I am printing in the RECORD a detailed description of that legislation.

DETAILED DESCRIPTION OF THE "HIGH TECHNOLOGY ACTIVE BUSINESS ACT OF 1985"

I. Treatment for Personal Holding Company Tax Purposes of Computer Software Royalties Derived by Active Businesses (Sec. 2 of the Act).

A. Basic Problem: Imposition of the Personal Holding Company Penalty Tax on Closely-Held Software Companies.

The basic problem is that small software development companies often possess the characteristics that can trigger application of the personal holding company penalty tax provisions:

(i) The stock of the company is generally held by relatively few shareholders who participate directly in the software development; and

(ii) Once developed, the corporation's software product is transferred to others by means of a license to a particular computer manufacturer or other customer or via a so-called "box-top" license to the public (under which the retail customer agrees to the license merely by opening the wrapper of the software package). The use of a license is necessary to protect the developer's proprietary interest in the software. This form of transfer has been viewed by the I.R.S. as giving rise, at least in many cases, to passive royalty income deemed to be personal holding company income. See Private Letter Ruling 8450025 (September 7, 1984). However, these companies clearly are engaging in active, ongoing business activities, including the development of new and improved software and maintenance activities with respect to existing software products.

The personal holding company penalty tax provisions were adopted to prevent the incorporation of passive investment activities at a time when corporate tax rates were significantly lower than the top individual rates. Accordingly, the application of the personal holding company provisions to software development companies conducting substantial active, ongoing business operations produces an unintended and extremely harsh result.

B. Exclusion for Computer Software Royalties Derived by an Active Business.

The Act adds a new exclusion from the definition of personal holding company income for computer software royalties that are derived by the corporation from the active conduct of a trade or business.

C. Standard for Computer Software Royalties from an Active Business.

For purposes of the new exclusion, computer software royalties will be treated as derived from the active conduct of a trade or business if the corporation satisfied the following objective tests:

(1) The royalties must be attributable to computer software that has been:

(a) Developed, manufactured, or produced (in whole or substantial part) by the corporation in connection with a trade or business; or

"Developed, manufactured, or produced" is intended to include software that has been created by the corporation and software that has been purchased from another person for inclusion in a software or combined hardware-software product of the corporation.

"In connection with a trade or business" is intended to mean software that the corporation has developed or acquired for use in a present or future business, so as to include software that has been developed during the corporation's start-up phase.

"Corporation (or its predecessor)" is intended to reach the case in which the software is developed by a partnership that converts into a corporation once development has been completed and marketing is to begin or by one or more individuals who transfer the software to the corporation in a transaction qualifying under Code section 351.

(b) Distributed by the corporation in carrying on a trade or business, but only if the corporation otherwise is carrying on the trade or business of developing, manufacturing, or producing computer software.

This provision is intended to extend the exclusion to a software company that, as part of its active, ongoing business operations of developing, manufacturing, or producing software, also distributes software that has been produced by others.

(2) The computer software royalties must constitute 50 percent or more of the ordinary gross income of the corporation.

This requirement ensures that the computer software royalties arise from the primary business activities of the corporation.

(3) The sum of expenses properly allocable to the same trade or business as the computer software royalty income and (i) deductible as ordinary and necessary business expenses (Code section 162), (ii) deductible as research and development costs (Code section 174), and (iii) which would be deductible as ordinary and necessary business expenses if the corporation had been beyond the start-up phase must equal or exceed 25 percent of the corporation's ordinary gross income. Qualifying expenses for purposes of this test are defined to exclude compensation for personal services of major shareholders.

By requiring that R&D and ordinary business expenses be significant as a percentage of the corporation's income, this test distinguishes active business operations from the passive investment repository of the "incorporated pocketbook" situation. In the "incorporated pocketbook" situation, it is unlikely that the corporation could generate significant amounts of proper business expenses other than compensation of the major shareholder(s). Such compensation is not treated as a qualifying expense for purposes of this test.

In addition, by so excluding the compensation of major shareholders, the test addresses the "incorporated talent" concern by in effect requiring that the corporation's operations extend beyond merely the efforts of such major shareholders.

For purposes of the test, any software development costs that are not properly treated as R&D costs under Code section 174 are treated as ordinary and necessary business expenses under Code section 162 (or as amounts that would be deductible under section 162 if the corporation were beyond its start-up phase).

The major shareholders whose salaries are excluded from the category of qualified expenses are defined as the fewest number of shareholders (among those 5 or fewer individuals holding more than 50 percent of the stock for purposes of the personal holding company stock ownership test) whose combined ownership interest exceeds 50 percent in value of the outstanding stock of the corporation.

In essence, this definition of major shareholder results in exclusion of the compensation of those shareholders, beginning with the largest holders, who cause the corporation to exceed the 50 percent stock ownership ceiling for personal holding company characterization purposes.

Solely for purposes of this exclusion of major shareholder compensation from the category of qualifying business expenses, the determination as to who is a major shareholder is to be made without regard to stock that is deemed to be owned by the shareholder solely by reason of attribution from a partner. This provision is intended to address the situation in which an employee with a relatively small stock interest also is a partner in a venture capital fund owning shares in the corporation. If the partnership rules were to be applicable here, this small shareholder-employee would be treated as owning all of the stock held by the venture capital fund when such employee was not truly a major shareholder of the corporation. Accordingly, the partnership attribution rules are made inapplicable for this very limited purpose of determining excluded major shareholder compensation.

A special rule is included to address the situation in which a software company develops a product that proves extremely successful in the market, generating a very substantial amount of cash that the company is reluctant to wholly reinvest in expansion of business operations because of prudent growth concerns. In such a case in which growth income outstrips growth in business expenses, difficulty may arise in meeting the 25-percent-of-income threshold for business expenses, even though the company clearly is engaged in active, ongoing business operations. Accordingly, the special rule permits a company to apply the 25 percent test on the basis of the annual average (in dollars) of business expenses and income over a period consisting of the taxable year in question and the immediately preceding 4 taxable years (or, in the case of a company that has been in existence for less than 4 years, the period consisting of the taxable year, any of the 4 prior years during which the corporation has been in existence, and any immediately succeeding taxable years that are necessary to complete the 5-year computation period).

(4) The corporation must not have other types of personal holding company income that total more than 10 percent of its ordinary gross income.

This requirement is included to prevent a corporation receiving the benefit of the computer software royalties exclusion from sheltering significant amounts of other types of personal holding company income.

Computer software royalties, interest earned on working capital balances during the corporation's start-up phase, and dividends from a (50 percent or more) subsidiary that qualifies as an active software business are not considered to be personal holding company income for this purpose.

Rents and mineral, oil and gas royalties are considered to be personal holding company income for this purpose.

The corporation may avoid running afoul of the 10 percent ceiling on other forms of personal holding company income by paying, to the extent of the excess over the 10 percent ceiling, a dividend during the taxable year, a dividend that is considered to be paid on the last day of the taxable year under Code Section 563, or a consent dividend. A similar provision is included in the present law exclusion of rents (under Code section 543(a)(2)) from personal holding company income.

D. Miscellaneous.

A U.S. software developer's foreign subsidiary that licenses software directly to customers abroad is subject to personal holding company characterization under the foreign personal holding company provisions for the same reasons as its U.S. parent. To address this problem, an exclusion is added to the definition of foreign personal holding company income for computer software royalties that are received by a foreign subsidiary that otherwise satisfies the requirements of the computer software royalties exception as applied for domestic personal holding company purposes, except that the foreign subsidiary need not "develop, manufacture, or produce" the software giving rise to the royalties so long as the U.S. parent or other member of the same affiliated group satisfies the "develop, manufacture, or produce" test with respect to the software. This provision effects no change in the Subpart F rules.

E. Effective Date.

The new computer software royalties exclusion is applicable to all taxable years ending after date of enactment. However, the Act is intended to clarify the proper treatment of computer software royalties under present law for purposes of the personal holding company provisions.

II. Elimination of R&D Expenditures as a Minimum Tax Preference Item for Personal Holding Companies (Sec. 3).

A. Basic Problem: Application of the Minimum Tax to Start-Up High Technology Companies.

Although R&D expenditures are not treated as a preference item for minimum tax purposes for corporations generally under present law, such costs are made a preference item (under Code section 57(a)(6)) for personal holding companies. During the typical start-up phase, the high technology company will incur substantial R&D expenditures which greatly exceed the company's income, thereby generating net operating losses which may be carried forward to offset profits in future years. The company's only source of income during this start-up phase often will be the interest earned on its working capital balances. If the high technology company constitutes a personal holding company because of this passive interest income, its loss carryforwards will be "tainted" such that, in future years when loss carryforwards are offset against operating profits, the company will be subject to a minimum tax liability on 90 percent of the R&D that had been expensed in the taxable years in which the loss carryforwards were generated.

B. Elimination of R&D Expenses as a Preference Item for Personal Holding Companies.

The Act would eliminate Code section 174 R&D expenses as a preference item for minimum tax purposes for personal holding companies (as well as corporations generally, as under present law).

This is a technical correction of an unintended result. Section 174 R&D expenses were added as a preference item by the 1982 Tax Act essentially in response to the emergence of the R&D limited partnership device, which passes through R&D deductions to individual investors to shelter their unrelated income. By contrast, since a personal holding company is a corporation and not a pass-through entity, no potential exists for using R&D deductions to shelter unrelated income directly received by the individual. In addition, it is difficult to envision a personal holding company undertaking research activities merely to shelter unrelated income of the corporation.

C. Effective Date.

This provision of the Act would be effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1982.

AGRICULTURE 1985

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, August 28, 1985, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

AGRICULTURE 1985

American farmers will probably have huge harvests this year, prompting fears of further distress in rural areas. Congress is seeking new approaches to increasing farm problems. The dilemma is how to improve farm income and provide sufficient credit while reducing government spending for agriculture. Legislation now before Congress could have greater impact on farmers than in any recent year.

CREDIT

Congress is studying options for reforming the financially troubled Farm Credit System (FCS). The system of 37 banks is federally sponsored, privately owned, and cooperatively organized. It is regulated by a quasi-federal agency, but is financed independently through the sale of farm credit bonds. For generations it has been a reliable source of funds for farmers, and its bonds have been highly rated.

Problems in the system raise concern about its long-term survival. Bad loans and fleeing borrowers, the need to rescue the Spokane district, and trouble in the Omaha district—all caused by current farm problems—show that changes are needed to improve the system's effectiveness. The FCS's unique funding sources and lending practices also cause borrowers problems. Interest rates at FCS banks are not linked to those at commercial banks; they usually change more slowly than commercial rates. Hoosier farmers were dismayed recently to see FLB and PCA interest rates go up while the prime rate fell at commerical banks.

Proposals addressing these financial problems include more credit, debt restructuring, interest buy-down, and purchase of farm assets. Some have proposed more centralized control of the FCS to help it move reserves more quickly to troubled districts. Others have suggested direct federal aid. Most of these proposals require substantial federal funds. Lawmakers will insist that the system use its own considerable resources to deal with problems, but a system providing over $80 billion in loans must remain a major component in agricultural lending.

TAX REFORM

Tax reform could have greater long-term impact on agriculture than farm programs. Agriculture has been a tax haven for many investors. Current policies encourage excessive land and equipment investment, and add to productive capacity, causing overproduction and lower farm prices. Federal revenue lost from agricultural shelters is estimated to be double the taxes paid by farmers.

The President's tax plan tries to discourage nonfarm investors from getting involved in tax loss farming by removing various tax preferences. The plan eliminates income averaging and the investment tax credit. It slows down the depreciation of most farm equipment from 5 to 7 years, and restricts cash accounting. It ends capital gains treatment for timber, livestock, and unharvested crops. It removes the deductibility of preproduction and development costs for some livestock producers, and orchard and vineyard farms. Write-offs for fertilizer and soil reconditioning, soil and water conservation, and some reforestation credits are also eliminated.

Many family farmers have benefited from these procedures. The Department of Agriculture claims, however, that for most farmers lower tax rates and the increase in the personal exemption will offset the loss of these provisions. According to them, 75% of farmers will fall into the lowest—15%—tax bracket, and their overall taxable income will drop by 17%. Farmers will have to follow tax reform as it progresses through Congress to see how different changes will affect them. Several proposals under consideration could increase the current tax burden on farmers.

FARM BILL

The omnibus farm bill, authorized every four years, provides for many agricultural programs: commodity price and income supports; export and trade; domestic and foreign food assistance; research and extension; conservation and credit; and others. Congress faces hard choices this year. Members are aware of the depressed farm economy, declining farm income, and the poor farm export record. But proposed farm subsidies will cost more than budget restraints allow. Members are having trouble developing programs that restore our export competitiveness, assure a decent income for farmers, and meet the overriding need to cut the budget deficit.

Since the House and Senate Agriculture Committees have not completed drafts of the farm bill, it is difficult to guess what the final bill will contain. Some judgments can be made. A move toward market orientation in farm commodity programs, probably in the form of loan rates based on a moving average of market prices in recent years, is likely, although this change will be weakened by eliminating the extreme years, by setting minimum loan levels, or by high target prices. Deficiency payments and a freeze on target prices will probably be approved, as a trade-off for lower loan rates. Payment limits to producers are not likely to change much from the current level of $50,000. Production controls through acreage set-asides and payments to farmers to divert land from production, a long-term conservation reserve, penalties on "sodbuster" farmers who cultivate highly erodible land, and research programs are likely to be approved. Mandatory acreage controls, which would require farmer referendums, seem to be losing support. Export credits and promotions will be bolstered. Few changes are likely in farm credit programs.

Each time Congress writes a new farm bill we are told that American agriculture is at a crossroads. The year is no different. Times are hard in agriculture, with farm assets declining, exports slumping, and farm income stagnating at unacceptably low levels. Congress is wrestling with the farm bill at a time when the governmental role in agriculture is in question and as agriculture reacts to changed international conditions. Under such circumstances, Congress must make every effort to help, but expectations of what it can accomplish should not be exaggerated.

UNITED STATES-ISRAELI STRATEGIC COOPERATION

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, while it is true that each year we give large amounts of economic and military assistance to the State of Israel, I happen to believe that it is in the best interests of the United States to continue this assistance to Israel. In addition to Israel's important geostrategic position in the world and its political stability, there is also another very important reason for fostering good relations with Israel, one that is often ignored. Israel has been an excellent, indeed unparalleled, testing ground for U.S. weapons and technologies. No other country in the world has been more helpful to the United States in analyzing the efficacy of its weapon systems as well as the deficiencies of Soviet weapons systems.

Take, for example, the 1981 Israeli operation known as Peace for Galilee. In the space of several days, the Israelis destroyed more than 90 Syrian Mig's, more than 20 SAM sites, and more than 500 Soviet-made tanks, including the new T-72. New U.S. technology, relatively untested in combat conditions prior to Operation Peace for Galilee, was literally baptised by fire, and came through with flying colors. Not only did this enhance the U.S. position as an exporter of arms, it also provided much needed intelligence as to the relative capabilities of our systems vis a vis those of the Soviets.

Mr. Emanual A. Winston, a board member of the Jaffee Center for Strategic Studies at Tel Aviv University, details some of these positive aspects of our strategic relationship with Israel in his article entitled: "Theatre for American Technology." I highly recommend his article to my colleagues.

JINSA—THEATRE FOR AMERICAN TECHNOLOGY

(By Emanual A. Winston)

(Ed Note: Mr. Winston is a Chicago businessman, Board Member of the Jaffee Center for Strategic Studies at Tel Aviv University, and contributing Editor to Israel Today)

The importance of American and Israeli strategic cooperation cannot be overstated in terms of national security interests. Yet, there is nother aspect of the allied relationship that is often overlooked; the micro-economics of Israel as a theatre for American technology.

America's armament industry has immensely benefited from the successful utilization by the Israel Defense Forces of sophisticated weaponry. The magnificent fighting skill and showcasing of American equipment increased the export sales potential of that weaponry by billions of dollars in the world market. The effect of Israel's military reputation established by 35 years of combat experience serves as the best testament to the selection and capability of weapon systems, most of which are of American design. In a highly competitive export market, being able to refer to the Israeli example is a very strong advantage over other merchants. Since foreign military sales are almost 2.5 times as profitable as military sales to the U.S. government, this "selling" factor reaps big dividends. The capital accumulated from these sales in turn reduces research and development costs for our government, hence the American taxpayer. The economic ramifications are evident in that each billion dollars worth of foreign arms sales translates into jobs for American industry, (the claim often made is approx. 42,000-52,000 jobs). Based on 1980 data, defense firms such as General Dynamics, Northrop, Raytheon, FMC and Harsco had 25 percent of their contracts in foreign sales. (Defense & Foreign Affairs, March 1983). Thus, the employment benefit of defense and export sales are substantial and the reduced costs to the American government by extending production runs and spreading development outlays has strong positive economic ramifications.

The direct effect of Israeli battle perfomance for American sales was best evidenced by the Operation Peace For Galilee. In a span of a short time, the Israelis demolished more than 20 SAM missiles sites, over 90 Syrian MIGs were shot down (including MIG-23s) and over 500 enemy tanks were destroyed (including the new T-72, backbone of the Soviet arsenal). American-made planes played a vital role in the Israeli effort. Most notably, the F15 and F16 saw extensive action. One Israeli F15 was claimed to have shot down more than 20 Soviet-made MIGs in Lebanon.

In addition, the Hughs 5000MD Defender combat helicopter proved a great asset for the Israelis in mountain warfare, destroying large numbers of Syrian tanks, as did a second anti-tank helicopter, the Bell AH-1S Huey Cobra. After the Israelis purchased advanced helicopter gunships, several other countries immediately followed suit (the Jordanians, South Koreans, Kenyans decided to go with the American gunship rather than the British, French and German models). This trend was also evidenced with the Japanese purchase of the Gruman E2C Hawkeye early warning plane which followed Israels suit. Moreover, after the Israeli display of EC mastery in the skies, several other countries have placed orders with the American manufacturer.

James Philbin, the E-2C program director at Gruman Aerospace corporation said Israeli air victories generated prospects from China, Korea, Singapore, Spain, Australia and others. He commented in the September 20, 1982 Business Week that because of the Israelis, "The foreign sales potential looks like 30 to 40 airplanes over the next five years." The Chairman of Loral Corporation also confirmed the importance for American manufacturers of Israeli "combat provern" technology when he stated that: "The fact that Israel has selected our Rapport III (EW protection system) for their F-16s is probably the best sales tool we have." The showcase of the F16 in combat no doubt will also prove highly beneficial in selling the plane to foreign countries over the French Mirage 2000. It should be noted that tour powers, the United States, Great Britain, France and the Soviet Union account for approximately 80% of total arms sales.

The failure of Russian weaponry to thwart the IDF disappointed several Soviet arms clients. Since arms sales are a means of promoting political influence and provide a steady flow of hard currency, the implications of American weapons superiority may have a direct impact on American power projection capabilities, ergo national security interests. The Israeli contribution to this aspect of American active defense is perhaps the most important and overlooked development of bilateral strategic cooperation. Israeli destruction of Soviet-built anti-aircraft missiles, their ease in destroying the Soviet T-72 tank and the downing of a MIG-25 Foxbat has caused the Soviets and the entire Warsaw Pact to question the viability of their own military hardware, tactics and strategy.

The Israelis not only confronted Soviet weaponry, but were forced to engage Western technologies; the lessons of their successful combat will provide invaluable intelligence data to U.S. defense planners and save billions research and development costs, a major advantage for the U.S. that her Soviet adversary cannot claim. Professor Steven L. Spiegel sums up the Israeli asset in real terms: "The facts speak for themselves. Israel is a unique and impressive ally. It influences political developments in its own area, causes the Soviets embarrassment and military lessons which can be learned only from combat experience, provides intelligence in the region, and saves U.S. defense costs through innovations and modifications of U.S. weaponary . . . if Israeli experiences were worth only 2 percent of the annual U.S. defense budget, that would amount to over $4 billion." (Commentary, June 1983)

The relationship between the American and Israeli defense industries is becoming increasingly developed in almost every area. Almost every Israeli corporation utilizes parts and equipment that were manufactured in the United States. Moreover, Israel has made extensive renovations on American technologies by adapting the lessons of combat experience. Thus, millions are saved in testing time and the development of armaments are galvanized through Israeli innovation passed on to America. Many of the licenses for weapon features are in turn sold to American corporations for mass production. The bottom line is that Israeli modifications coupled with cedible experience in destroying the best in Soviet technologies has enhanced the performance of American weaponry, reduced development time and taxpayer costs, thereby contributing to the readiness of U.S. Armed Forces in a period when budget cuts have severely reduced their functional capabilities.

For military planners, Israeli intervention in Lebanon conveyed that the American ally has approached mastering the overall electronic battlefield capability that will dictate the strategem for all future conflicts. The prospects of future American-Israeli strategic cooperation will significantly strengthen the defense industrial base of both nations. Joint development projects employing Israeli battlefield innovation and American production capabilities should be the trend of the future. Teamwork between trusted allies will serve as a catalyst for upgrading the Western world's power projection ability reducing the intimidation factor of the Soviet threat. Indeed, Israel has been a theatre for American weapons technology and defense industrial growth. The microeconomic elements of the relationship, should not be treated lightly. No other ally has contributed so greatly to American defense in so many different modes: intelligence, research and development, combat readiness, expansion of defense industrial base, export competitiveness and strategic deterrence.

A reliable democratic partner is more than an asset in a Western alliance plagued often by apathy, isolationism and laziness. America should be thankful for the "Israel advantage."

A TRIBUTE TO WADE H. INSLEY, JR.

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the memory of a fellow Marylander, Wade H. Insley, Jr. A native of Wicomico County, Wade greatly contributed to the quality of life in his community.

I knew Wade to be a good and kind man whose involvement in community affairs was both broad and deep. A graduate of the University of Maryland at College Park, Wade was owner of Eastern Food Distributors, Inc., in Salisbury which he operated for about 24 years. He was on the Wicomico County Council for 24 years and president for 12. In addition, Wade was city treasurer for 8 years, a former president of the Maryland State County Commissioners Association, and was instrumental in establishing Pine Bluff Village, serving as its first chairman and for several years as director. As a member of the Bethesda Church he had formerly served on the administrative board and was chairman of the finance committee, as well as a member of the Democratic Club of Wicomico County.

For his untiring and unselfish service to the people of his community, Wade received three distinguished awards. In 1965 he received the Wicomico County Teachers' Association Award in recognition of "inspired and unselfish support to education in Wicomico County," and in 1974 was presented a special Certificate of Recognition from the National Conference of Christians and Jews for "outstanding contributions promoting the cause of goodwill and understanding among all people of our Nation." Wade also received a Certificate of Distinguished Citizenship from Maryland Gov. Marvin Mandel for his "distinguished contribution to the cause of strong efficient county government in Maryland."

It is an honor to pay tribute to a man who did so much to strengthen our democratic traditions. And it is with pride that I share Wade's many accomplishments with you today.

PITTSBURGH SOCCER CHAMP RECOGNIZED

HON. DOUG WALGREN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, a constituent of mine, Peter J. Smith III, is the first western Pennsylvania soccer player to be invited to the National Sports Festival by the U.S. Olympic Committee. The National Sports Festival, a pre-Olympic event, was held in Baton Rouge, LA, from July 22 through August 4.

Peter Smith is an outstanding young man with a promising future in soccer. In the fall he will be a senior at the University of Tampa, where he has just received an achievement award for academics for the fourth consecutive year.

I would like to share with my colleagues an article about Peter which was published in the Pittsburgh Post Gazette South on July 25, 1985.

The article follows:

[From the Pittsburgh Post Gazette South, July 25, 1985]

USC's SMITH AIMS FOR PRO SOCCER JOB

[By Paul Dangelo]

The only thing that Pete Smith has ever wanted is a chance to prove himself on the soccer field. Next month at the National Sports Festival, he'll get that chance.

Smith, a graduate of Upper St. Clair High School, was recently selected to play for the South Region soccer squad at the Sports Festival, an American mini-Olympics pitting the top American athletes against each other in Olympic events.

For Smith, it's an opportunity to prove that he belongs on the field with this country's top soccer players.

"I felt it was really important for me to make this team if I want to continue to pursue a career in soccer," said Smith. "There will be a lot of important people at the Sports Festival, coaches and scouts from professional teams and the national federation, evaluating players. The Sports Festival is like a stepping stone to the next level, to playing for the national team or with a professional team. Just being there and being seen by these people will help me."

Smith was drafted by the Spirit of the Major Indoor Soccer League when he was a senior in high school, but was not ready as a 17 year old to step into the play-for-pay grade. The Spirit advised Smith to enroll in a top-notch college program and work at improving his skills.

So Smith headed for the University of Tampa, one of the top soccer programs in the country. At Upper St. Clair, Smith had always been an attacking player, a playmaker and a goal scorer. But Tampa Coach Jay Miller changed Smith's position, moving him to defensive midfielder. Smith will be entering his senior season this fall, the third season that he will be a fixture in Tampa's starting line-up.

"We're looking for all of the things from Pete that we always look for from a senior player," said Miller. "He's been in the big battles, the crucial games; we want him to be a leader, to demonstrate coolness and determination on the field. He made the transition to playing with more defensive responsibilities without any problems. Last year, we used him to mark the opponent's top playmaker and he handled the job very well."

Miller is the coach of Smith's South squad in the National Sports Festival and agrees that the games can help make—or break—a career in professional soccer.

"The idea of the games is to get the best athletes together and compete under Olympic conditions," said Miller. "In soccer, the United States Soccer Federation oversees the soccer competition and uses the games as part of the selection process for the national team.

"I know that Pete wants to play pro soccer and playing at the Sports Festival will give him the opportunity to prove that he can play at such a high level of competition. He tried out for the games two years ago but didn't make it, though he was one of the last cuts. Now is his chance. I think he certainly merits a look. He's been around the game a lot and he has good instincts for the game instead of just reacting to a situation in a game. He's always thinking on the field. And he's one of the hardest working players I've ever seen. He's a 90-minute player."

Smith didn't think he had any special advantage in making the Sports Festival because Miller is the South coach.

"He may have known me better than some of the other players, but there were as many disadvantages as there were advantages," Smith said. "It's kind of like playing for your father. He didn't cut me any breaks just because he knew me. I think I made the team because I deserved to. I've worked hard to accomplish this sort of thing in soccer."

Smith has not only set lofty goals for himself, but for his team as well.

"This is my last year at Tampa, and the last year for the school as a Division II school. Next year we'll move up to Division I, which is fine because Tampa has been playing a Division I kind of schedule all along. But I'd really like to win the Division II national championship this season. It would be nice to go out as the champs."

And when that's over, Smith will have the MISL draft to look forward to. One team that will not be drafting Smith is the Spirit, because they failed to sign him after drafting him out of high school. MISL rules state that the Spirit may only sign Smith now if he passes through the draft unclaimed.

"I really want to play for the Spirit but that may be difficult to do now," said Smith. "But as long as I get a chance to play with someone, I'll be satisfied. I'll have to prove this year that I deserve to be drafted, that I'm one of the top players in the country. And I'm ready to do the work that it will take to prove exactly that.

"Maybe down the road something could be worked out that I could come back here and play for the Spirit. Right now there's a lot of talk that the Spirit will move to another city. I hope not. The Pittsburgh soccer community needs the Spirit. Having a professional team in town gives young players a goal to aim for. Plus, the Spirit has reached out and touched the community in a very unique way and I think that would be missed if they were to leave."

"We've watched Pete carefully over the last few years and his development is really coming along," said Spirit General Manager Chris Wright. "We're very pleased that he was selected to participate in the Sports Festival. He's on the right track to accomplish his goal. This is one event where all of the coaches and scouts get to. It's the showcase of young soccer talent in this country."

And it's an opportunity for Pete Smith to guarantee that soccer will be in his future.

HIROSHIMA AND NAGASAKI: TRAGIC BUT NECESSARY

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, while many in recent weeks have criticized the decision to drop nuclear weapons on Japan, it was, in fact, the right thing to do.

We in a peaceful and secure America find it easy to play Monday morning quarterback by denouncing the decisions of the brave Americans who guided our country through some of the darkest hours of World War II.

In recent days, the media has been filled with an orgy of stories about the bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki and the ensuing loss of so many lives. Surviving Japanese Government officials have recounted the gruesome details of the nuclear attacks and have questioned the U.S. Government decision to use those weapons of mass destruction.

The general impression created by the media was that America was the villain and that Japan was, in those days, a peace-loving little island nation that was attacked for no reason. Let's be honest, however, and talk about why the bombs were dropped.

As part of a massive effort to project its power into the Pacific, Japan invaded many of the countries in that area and quickly established a brutal reputation for itself among those who suffered under Japanese occupation. While talking peace with the United States, Japan attacked Pearl Harbor.

After a long and hard war that the United States neither started nor wanted to fight, President Truman wisely chose to quickly end the war. Other options had been carefully studied. A land invasion would have taken at least a million lives. The fanatical Japanese military had taken control of the Japanese Government and would not let reason prevail. Surrender for the generals was unthinkable. A fight to the last man was their final option.

While plagued with problems, the Japanese military had a large scale nuclear weapons program underway. After the war, senior Japanese scientists admitted that their Government officials would have used the bomb against America if it had been available.

When faced with these sobering realities, is there any wonder that President Truman did what he did? Even after the first bomb was dropped, Japan still hesitated to give up. Finally, however, the second atomic weapon convinced them, and peace came.

Yes, the decision to use those terrible weapons was a sound one. I want to share an insightful Washington Post editorial on this subject with my colleagues in the House. I also want to pay a special tribute to those who served, fought and died, so all of us can enjoy the fruits of freedom.

WE ENDED A TERRIBLE WAR—RATHER THAN ACT GUILTY, WE SHOULD HOLD A GRAND V-J DAY PARADE

(By Richard Harwood)

I am tempted to imagine myself this week as Shakespeare's old King Lear, stumbling across the heath and howling futilely into the storm: "Thou art not more unkind than man's ingratitude."

We are in the process of observing the anniversary of one of the great events in the history of our country and in the history of the world—the conclusion of World War II and the victory of the democracies over the fascists of Germany and Italy and the militarists of Japan. I cannot imagine what our world would be like if we had lost that war. But, at the minimum, one can fairly say that it is unlikely it would be a better or happier place.

This ought to be, therefore, a joyous and satisfying anniversary. We brought to an end 40 years ago a terrible war—terrible beyond contemporary comprehension. No one knows precisely how many people died; 100 million is probably as good an estimate as any. This carnage all stopped on Aug. 14 and the human race was given a fresh opportunity to restore itself and the planet we inhabit. It was a glorious day.

But instead of celebrating, this month, we have been engaging—at least through the popular media—in endless self-flagellation, a kind of psychological hara-kiri. A child or a visitor from another planet would assume from what has been printed and shown to us by television that World War II consisted of a single event: the dropping, for no earthly reason, of two nuclear weapons on the innocent people of Japan.

It is as if little or nothing had gone before, as if a million of our comrades and many millions of our allies had not fallen in battle in fields and oceans all across the globe in order to bring us peace. The expressions of "bomb guilt" have not reached the stage of on-camera immolations at the White House gate but there have been a funeral tolling of church bells, symbolic acts and demonstrations of contrition and endless footage of Hiroshima and Nagasaki.

It is appropriate to mourn the war dead, whether they died at Hiroshima or Bataan or Stalingrad or Auschwitz or Pearl Harbor. But it is also appropriate to remember and to give thanks for the victory that was won.

What we should be doing this week, all over America, is staging the last, grand parade. There will not be another chance. When the 50th anniversary comes along all but a few of the veterans will be infirm or dead. So we should have assembled the old regiments, brigades and divisions, the crews from the ships of the line, the aviators and submariners.

We should have stuffed ourselves into those old uniforms, pinned on the ribbons and medals, hoisted the battle streamers and stepped out down Pennsylvania Avenue, struggling to keep pace with the bands. We would salute absent friends. We would savor the victory and the peace that it won. We would embrace one another and say our goodbyes. And we would say to our sons and daughters: "For all our defects, the world survives. Now it is yours. Take care of it."

That is the way to celebrate this magnificent anniversary—not with a whimper but a bang.

A TRIBUTE TO JAMES A. McNAIR

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to salute James A. NcNair for his 30 years of distinguished service in the U.S. Army. Having held the position of command sergeant major of the Test and Evaluation Command at the Aberdeen Proving Grounds since 1981, James returns to civilian life this month.

For James McNair, military service has been both challenging and gratifying. McNair's assignments included duty in Alaska, Europe, and Korea. Among James' many awards and decorations are the Meritorious Service Medal with two Oak Leaf Clusters, Army Commendation Medal with three Oak Leaf Clusters, Good Conduct Medal, National Defense Service Medal, Armed Forces Expeditionary Medal, and the Expert Rifleman Badge.

On the occasion of James McNair's retirement, I extend my congratulations to him on his many accomplishments and wish him well in his future endeavors. His outstanding service to his country will long be remembered by his fellow soldiers and is greatly appreciated by his fellow Americans.

NUTTY BUSINESS AT THE ICC

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, as you know, Government regulations are very difficult things to eliminate. Once they are on the books, they take on lives of their own. Federal regulation almost always benefits some select group at the expense of the general public, and these special interest groups become very aggressive in protecting their advantageous status. President Reagan is committed to limiting regulation, but progress on reform has been mixed. Consequently, where there have been notable victories, we do well to note the ingredients necessary for success and to acknowledge the contribution of those who made it possible.

Perhaps the most conspicuous victory of the last 5 years has been the deregulation of surface transportation. In 1980 Congress wisely passed two laws—the Motor Carrier Act of 1980 and the Staggers Rail Act—that created the potential for meaningful reform of the strangulating bureaucracy that the Interstate Commerce Commission had become. But the reform laws inevitably committed important areas of implementation to the discretion of the Commission, and a failure of will on the part of the Commissioners could have stymied real progress toward a competitive and efficient market. Fortunately for the Nation, there has been a majority on the Commission since 1982 that has fought willingly for reform. This majority has produced enormously beneficial results, despite intense criticism, constant foot-dragging, and not infrequent arm-twisting from colleagues special pleaders, and even a few discomfited legislators.

Let me take just a moment to mention a few of the many reform achievements that are the product of this reform-minded majority. The railroad industry is back from the edge of nationalization, serving its customers with speed and innovation. Tens of thousands of new trucking companies have been licensed, leading to a competitive rate level and the end of the take-it-or-leave-it attitudes that characterized the service of monopoly preserves. Intermodal transportation has been freed from restraints on pricing and multimodal ownership in ways that have brought new capital into the field and fostered new enterprise. Shippers and carriers, rail and motor alike, are turning increasingly to the use of contracts rather than rate lists, with the result of mutually exempting their business from regulatory interference. The tariff regulations in the Federal code have been reduced from over 300 pages to under 60, and a whole sector of the trucking industry has been excused from filing altogether. The ICC staff has been cut in half.

The benefits of these and the many other accomplishments of the Commission's majority have been enormous. One observer, an executive of an established trucking firm and a student of transportation logistics, estimates that deregulation of transportation cut $40 to $50 billion from the cost of doing business in 1985. While not everyone will agree to any particular figure, the recognition of the gains from deregulation is widespread, and President Reagan indicated his strong support for further transportation deregulation in his recent State of the Union address. What is not so widely understood, however, is that not all the gains from deregulation came automatically from the laws passed in 1980. What was also needed was farsighted and determined interpretation of those laws.

Consequently, I rise to acknowledge three members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Frederic N. Andre, Heather J. Gradison, and Malcolm M.B. Sterrett for their consistent, energetic, and courageous efforts on behalf of the cause of free enterprise and responsible, limited government. President Reagan is to be commended for appointing these individuals, and the Commissioners deserve an expression of gratitude for the job they have done. I urge them, and their colleagues, to continue to pursue the congressional mandate for reform. I also urge my colleagues here in the House to read the following editorial by columnist Donald Lambro that appeared in the Washington Times.

[From the Washington Times, Mar. 21, 1985]

NUTTY BUSINESS AT THE ICC

(By Donald Lambro)

The cash crunch at the overstaffed Interstate Commerce Commission has renewed a perennial question that Congress must soon answer: Why, in the midst of $200 billion deficits, is this regulatory anachronism being kept alive?

After deliberately spending more than Congress appropriated for its fiscal 1985 operations, the ICC is now pleading for an emergency $4.5 million supplement. If Congress refuses, ICC Chairman Reese H. Taylor Jr. warns, nearly 1,000 employees will find themselves being furloughed one day a week, without pay, beginning April 1.

That prospect sent shudders through South Dakota Sen. Larry Pressler, an ICC supporter who in a "Dear Colleague" letter said denial of the added funding "would destroy the ICC. By putting them out of business one day a week, you might as well close them down."

That would not only bring cheers from deregulators in and out of Congress—like Wisconsin's Sen. William Proxmire and Budget Director David Stockman—but from liberal crusader Ralph Nader, who has long opposed the ICC's corporate welfare for the big trucking industry.

Unfortunately, the truth that many lawmakers can't bring themselves to face is that if Congress closed down the ICC, few people outside of Washington would notice. Not only would its elimination save taxpayers $48 million a year, it would put an end to a host of Rube Goldberg rail and trucking regulations that prevent competition, inflate shipping costs, and contribute to higher consumer prices.

At a time when the benefits of deregulation in the airline and energy industries are manifestly apparent, it is ludicrous for trucking entrepreneurs to have to seek approval from Washington to haul frozen pizzas from Massachusetts to Arkansas.

The degree to which this agency involves itself in the commerce of our nation is stunningly illustrated in a recent ICC booklet, titled Can They Do That? It details which commodities are exempt from ICC regulation and which are not.

For example, take manure. In its natural state, dehydrated, or bagged, the ICC says it is exempt, which means it can be shipped without an ICC certificate. But try trucking manure that is "fermented, with additives such as yeast and molds, producing a rich liquor which in water solution is used for soil enrichment" and you'll have some ICC agents on your case.

Similarly, grass sod, plants, vegetables, and flowers are exempt, but maple syrup, frozen beef dinners, and french-fried potatoes are not exempt.

Dried fruits such as figs and dates are exempt, but grind them up into a paste or mix them up with other substances and they are not.

Or consider, appropriately enough, nuts. Cashews, roasted or cooked, or peanuts, roasted and salted in the shell, are not exempt, but macadamias and pistachios are exempt.

The ICC has hundreds of highly paid people working full time on such things. Indeed, there are 50 ICC field offices scattered around the country that are authorized to crack down on anyone foolish enough to haul the hundreds of unexempted products that cannot be shipped without explicit ICC authority.

"There are about 250 people out there in our field offices," ICC Commissioner Fred Andre told me, "but their work is largely anachronistic. Some of them are doing little more than sending us newspaper clips."

In order to transport ICC-regulated commodities legally, shippers must first enter a closed, incestuous world. They must hire an ICC-approved lawyer to apply for certificate authority to haul goods, maintain insurance with the ICC, keep their rates on file with the commission, and meet a number of other requirements.

Because of partial ICC deregulation begun in 1980, "America's transportation industry is infinitely better off today than it was four years ago," says Mr. Andre.

Now Congress must take the next step and eliminate this useless and counterproductive agency.

TAX REFORM UPDATE

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, September 4, 1985, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

TAX REFORM UPDATE

As Congress returns from the August recess, one of the major items on its agenda is tax reform. Hundreds of witnesses have testified on aspects of the President's plan, and dozens of analyses have been released. Contrary to some pronouncements that tax reform is dead, chances for passage of a tax reform package this year seem to be improving, at least in the House. The plan the President submitted in May will be the starting point, but some reworking by Congress is expected. The central theme of his proposal to make the tax code fairer and simpler—trimming tax provisions that benefit special groups in order to reduce overall tax rates—is expected to remain intact, but specific provisions might be altered by Congress. Many of the likely changes seem to me to be improvements.

One change, endorsed by both the President and the congressional tax-writing committees, is to make the plan more revenue neutral. The Joint Committee on Taxation recently estimated that the President's plan would result in a $25 billion revenue loss over the next 5 years. Although this loss is less than 1% of anticipated revenues, there is broad agreement that the plan should not increase the federal deficit at all. The President is submitting additional proposals to make up for this projected shortfall.

Of the scores of changes proposed in the President's original package, the main ones are: elimination of the state and local tax deduction for individuals; termination of the business investment tax credit; and the recapture of windfall profits from businesses that deferred past taxes and now could repay them at the new lower tax rates. Together these three provisions would raise $363 billion of the $442 billion needed over the next 5 years to finance the proposed corporate and individual tax rate cuts. The large sums make it unlikely Congress will simply drop these provisions, but some changes are possible, especially in the recapture provision and in the state and local tax deduction. Only 2% of families earning less than $20,000 take the state and local tax deduction, compared to 80% of families with incomes exceeding $50,000. But critics argue that eliminating the deduction will cause state and local governments to lose needed revenue. Alternatives under discussion include excluding only some of the state and local taxes from the preference, or trimming the deduction for richer taxpayers. Concern that the President's recapture provision is a retroactive tax might lead to replacing it with less generous depreciation schedules for business.

Other changes being considered by Congress involve much less revenue than these three parts of the plan. Some changes are proposed to improve the plan's fairness or economic efficiency. Such changes will not be easy to make, as the Chairman of the House tax-writing committee insists that all amendments be revenue neutral: anyone proposing to restore one tax break must find a way to make up for lost revenue by trimming another. Nonetheless, several changes are expected to be seriously considered in committee.

The most likely change on the House side is a reduction in the difference of the tax cuts between middle and upper-income taxpayers. Critics point out that under the President's plan, one-earner families with more than $200,000 in income will receive an 11% tax cut while those earning between $30,000 and $50,000 receive on the average only a 6.5% cut. Possible changes are: adding a fourth tax bracket for the wealthiest taxpayers; or dropping the President's proposal to cut the top capital gains tax rate for investors.

Another "fairness" issue is to reduce the tax plan's burdens on families in which both spouses work, perhaps by retaining the child care credit or offsetting the repeal of the "marriage penalty" deduction. Support is also increasing for strengthening the minimum tax. Despite closing many tax loopholes, the President's plan retains many incentives that could permit some high income individuals and corporations to pay little or no tax. A stronger minimum tax would help ensure that all pay a fairer share.

Other changes receiving serious consideration by Congress include: achieving more balance in the energy tax provisions (the President would eliminate incentives for renewable energy and restore $30 billion in tax breaks over 5 years for oil and gas producers); revising the President's tax on the first few dollars of health-insurance premiums, possibly by replacing it with a generous ceiling on the amount of tax-free benefits; revising the proposed investment interest limitation, which higher income taxpayers with investment income can avoid, according to critics; phasing in the doubling of the personal exemption; and revising the proposed capital cost recovery system for business. Another tricky issue will be the effective dates and transition rules for the various changes. If the changes are phased in to lessen their impact, rate reductions may also have to be phased in.

Action on the package is expected in the House first. Most key changes may be worked out in the Ways and Means Committee rather than on the House floor. To prevent the package from being gutted, the full House may have the opportunity to vote only on the entire committee package, with few or no amendments allowed. Passage is considered less likely in the Senate, where the President's plan has met with more opposition and where procedures are more open.

Even in the House, tax reform faces several hurdles. In addition to concerns about specific provisions, some members are worried about the impact of tax reform on the economy. Others feel that Congress should focus on the budget deficit instead of on tax reform. The key factor in passage is presidential leadership; If the President pushes hard for tax reform, he might get it; if he doesn't push hard, he won't. Those of us who support the goal of tax reform are hopeful that real progress will be made in upcoming weeks on one of the most significant tax reform efforts in decades.

AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION IS CRITICAL

HON. HAL DAUB

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, earlier this summer, I had the privilege and opportunity to attend the 1985 State Presidents Conference of Future Farmers of America [FFA].

Mike Barrett, FFA's national vice president from Mead, NE, spoke to us about the challenge of American agriculture and the importance of quality in agricultural education and in our high schools' vocational agriculture departments.

Mike's remarks are enlightening and instructive, and I take this opportunity to share them with our colleagues:

PRESENTATION AT THE 1985 CONGRESSIONAL LUNCHEON, STATE FFA PRESIDENTS' CONFERENCE, WASHINGTON, DC

Today is a very special day for the young people in attendance. It isn't often that we have an opportunity to share a meal and conversation with those whose wisdom, authority, and expertise affect the lives of all Americans daily. We are honored to have you with us.

This group of FFA members in attendance has been selected by their peers to lead our organization. Here this week at the FFA State Presidents' Washington Conference Program are the top leaders from all 50 states and Puerto Rico. They represent over 430,000 Future Farmers of America in 8,300 secondary schools across the country.

Their peer group is comprised of young people, ranging in age from 14-21, who are the products of a very complete vocational education program. This program is composed of three basic divisions that not only overlap with one another but are actually bonded together. They include: vocational agriculture or classroom instruction, Supervised Occupational Experience Program and the Future Farmers of America organization. This total vocational agricultural program branches off into many fields of agriculture.

Perhaps never before has there been a greater awareness of the need for vocational agriculture/FFA than now when American agriculture faces a multitude of seemingly unsurpassable challenges. This awareness has been conceived from the realization that quality in agricultural education is a duty and not a luxury. A duty brought about by the need to prepare students for the diversity of our country's proudest and most vital industry, American agriculture. We accomplish this by developing applicable and employable competencies and preparing students for higher educational aspirations.

The demand for quality in agricultural education is merging head on with the strides that are currently being taken by the 8,300 vocational agriculture departments in our high schools across the country. This group, composed of energetic young Americans, is rising to the occasion and challenging the adversities that our current agriculture crisis imposes.

It is a quest for success that backs basic academic skills, such as mathematics, English, biology and chemistry, reinforced in the vocational agriculture classroom, with a proven system of realistic application in an actual agricultural occupational setting.

This setting is supported by the philosophy that entrepreneurship is not something that can be acquired through a number of lectures and readings. It is learned through observation and participation and by being exposed to the risk-taking that agriculture requires. We call this 68-year-old innovation a Supervised Occupational Experience Program.

The strategy behind vocational agriculture is based on a well-established principle in which students make independent decisions and are encouraged to take initiative. While this form of vocational education is seldom mentioned by policy analysts, it may very well be the principle that rises above the opponents of vocational education and points the way for implementation of essential educational reforms.

Much of the success of the vocational agriculture/FFA program can be directly attributed to the efforts that have been made to keep abreast of technological advancement. The use of computers, through realistic application of acquired competencies, is one example of our determination to maintain quality in agricultural education.

The need for this determination becomes even more apparent when we consider that today vocational agriculture is often criticized for training farmers when the demand for farmers is definitely declining. Our response to this lies in the fact that today's vocational instruction is comprised of many classes; which may include horticulture, ag mechanics, marketing, processing, and agribusiness.

These classes and others build the competencies needed to meet the diversity of a vast agriculture industry.

Finally, our quest for success matches an educational program that has been proven over the years through past experience and accomplishments (vocational agriculture courses were established in 1917) with a flexibility that allows innovation and foresight to guide the way to infinite possibilities in the future. We realize that true economic and political power of a nation depends vastly on the education of its people. By virtue of the standards that have been set with our three components of the vocational agriculture program, we prepare young people for life, building character and creating productive and useful citizens while at the same time preparing Leaders for the New Fields of Agriculture.

THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF RAILROAD RETIREMENT

HON. LEON E. PANETTA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the anniversary of a progressive retirement system that has served millions of Americans in its 50Yyear lifetime—the Railroad Retirement System.

On August 29, 1935, President Roosevelt signed the Railroad Retirement Act. This legislation, enacted only 2 weeks after the landmark Social Security Act, was unique in a number of respects. The railroad industry had already instituted retirement programs which had been operating successfully for 50 years or more. The benefits which had been accrued by railroad workers up to that point had to be added on their new Social Security benefits, so a separate system was devised which would honor these private service credits.

Administered by the Federal Government through the Railroad Retirement Board, the program operates on a two-tiered system. Tier I is identical to Social Security; payroll taxes are deducted from the paychecks of railroad employees, and their benefits are computed according to the same formula as for those on the Social Security system. Tier II is a private pension program providing additional benefits above and beyond the Social Security level.

The success of this retirement system can be seen by looking at the numbers of individuals served. Since its inception, $77 billion in benefits have been paid out to 4 million railroad workers and their family members. Currently 460,000 employees are paying taxes into the fund, and 1 million are receiving benefits. The Railroad Retirement Solvency Act of 1983, along with recent increases in the number of railroad workers, has secured the financial stability of the system.

The guarantees this system has provided railroad employees has served to reassure millions of families over the years. The system embodies the kind of protection that all retired Americans deserve, so that they may enjoy the fruits of years of hard labor and dedication. I ask my colleagues to join me in celebrating this historic and significant anniversary.

IN PRAISE OF NATICK LABS

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, the U.S. Army Research and Development Laboratories in Natick, MA, has, over the years, been quietly doing excellent work researching materials and equipment that provide for the comfort and safety of the American soldier. Unlike the sophisticated weaponry that draws so much attention, both when it works and when it fails, Natick Labs concentrates on the mundane, but equally necessary items such as field rations, boots, all-weather gear and other equipment without which army cannot function.

Recently, however, Natick Labs has received some well-deserved attention over a development that provides both comfort and safety to our soldiers—the Kevlar helmet. As the following article from the Washington Post explains, this helmet has become, among soldiers, the most popular new piece of equipment ever provided. I am proud to have Natick Labs in my district. I am proud of the work they have done on this helmet and the work they do on a continuing basis providing for the needs of American soldiers. And I am glad they are receiving some well-earned recognition for their efforts.

I commend to my colleagues the Washington Post story that follows:

PASGT, MON ARMOR: FORM FOLLOWS FUNCTION IN NEW ARMY HELMET

(By Benjamin Forgery)

Although you don't see much of it on those upbeat "Be all that you can be" television commercials, the U.S. Army is fast acquiring a new image.

American combat-ready soldiers massed in review at Fort Ord, Calif., or spread in squad formations across fields in West Germany, or preparing to hurtle from aircraft in parachute maneuvers at Fort Bragg, N.C., no longer look like cartoonist Bill Mauldin's prototypical "Willie" and "Joe" of World War II, or the GI footsloggers in Korea or the kids afflicted with the thousand-mile stare in Vietnam.

What they do look like is a matter of some dispute, but the reason for the change is not: The troops of the volunteer Army, and the U.S. Marines, and Army Reserve and National Guard units across the land are being equipped with what researchers and bureaucrats call PASGT (pronounced pass-get), an acronym for Personnel Armor System for Ground Troops, the key elements of which are a ballistics protective vest and, above all, a new, molded, laminated Kevlar helmet.

The old M1 helmet, the "steel pot" born of necessity in the early days of World War II, is going, going and, quite soon, will be gone.

"This is absolutely the best helmet in the world today," engineer Philip Durand states unequivocally. "I guarantee if we show anybody what we did and why we did it, he will say, 'What a beautiful helmet.' "

Durand is half of the team largely responsible for the new design. Lawrence McManus is the other half. They work at the Army and Special Projects Branch of the Individual Protection Laboratory at the U.S. Army Research and Development Center in Natick, Mass., and between them, they estimate, they have accumulated more than 50 years of helmet research.

"We thought it out without any preconceived ideas," Durand adds. "It wasn't an artist's concept. It wasn't just something a general or two happened to like. It was a very logical, sequential, step-by-step, cause-and-effect development."

"Hey, we thought it looked like a Little League baseball cap," quips McManus.

Like Little League baseball caps and more potently, like German helmets from World War II, the silhouette of the new American combat headgear shows a pronounced dip from the edge of the visor to the line to the ear and neck. To many Americans inside and outside the Army this image conjures old hostilities and fears. It is the "Nazi helmet," the essence of Evil and Enemy. By contrast, the steel pot represents God and Country. And, as the new foot soldiers know all too well, you can't cook in the new helmet, and you can't shave out of it, either.

These factors, and the cost—$87 per unit compared with about $30 for the M1 helmet and liner—explain the lengthy delay in getting the PASGT helmet to the troops. Voluminous, painstaking research, initially intended simply to improve the steel pot, began in 1968. The design of the new helmet was fundamentally complete by 1974. Worldwide testing of the product was finished by 1977. Approval from the Joint Chiefs of Staff was granted in 1978. Yet procurement and distribution just inched along.

"I had difficulty getting it into the system because of the visual perception of it," recalls Vivian McKenzie, acting project manager for the Clothing and Individual Equipment Command of the Army Material Command in Alexandria, who was in charge of the initial distributions. But, she says, "the Grenada incident did it."

As part of the Army's Rapid Deployment Force, troops of the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg were the first to receive the PASGT helmets. Consequently, they were the first to wear the new issue on a combat mission, when President Reagan dispatched U.S. units to Grenada in the fall of 1983. Many Americans got their first view of the helmet in television and newspaper images of that operation, and the response perhaps prompted the Pentagon's low-key approach to any further publicity.

But the performance of the new equipment surpassed expectations. In two well-documented examples, the helmets stopped a vicious bevy of fragments from a 20 mm missile and a round fired from a Russian AK47 rifle. Although even the new helmet is not designed to protect its wearer from direct rifle rounds—"stopping that AK47 bullet was luck, like a Doug Flutie Hail Mary pass," McManus says—response was alacritous throughout the armed forces. Shortly thereafter, the Marine Corps, which until then had disdained the new helmet, put in its order.

Today, McKenzie says, distribution is proceeding rapidly, and by 1988, nearly 2 million PASGT helmets will be in use.

So the next time you see massed troops wearing steel pots on television or in the papers, they probably won't be Americans. They very well could be Germans, though. Soldiers in the Bundeswehr have been wearing a version of the M1 helmet ever since the West German army was reconstituted in 1956.

The question is, did the Germans know something we didn't back in World War II? Was their helmet intrinsically superior to the steel pot?

"No, their design just came about from an artist's concept," Durand says derisively. "In fact, in terms of ballistics it wasn't nearly as good as the M1. It was too close to the head and it had a terrible suspension system with a lot of metal components inside that became secondary missiles."

What about the broad, angled "skirt" around the German helmet? Didn't it offer more protection than the steel pot, with its narrow rim?

"No," Durand says. "That was a leftover from World War I, from trench warfare, when the soldier was in danger from being hit by falling rocks and debris from explosions. That's why the British 'pie plate,' the one we were using in Bataan, had the skirt."

Well, if the old German helmet was so bad, why does the new American helmet look so much like it?

"Actually, it doesn't, if you look closely," McManus says, and he's right, up to a point. The American helmet seems to fit the head better, it has a molded protrusion for the ears, and it lacks the distinguishing flare of the "skirt." Even so, anyone with strong memories of World War II isn't likely to be so analytical.

The only positive aspects McManus and Durand see in the old German helmet are that "it was stable, because it sat lower on the head, and it provided peripheral vision." Those are but two of the many advantages that the pair see in the new American helmet.

"The philosophy of this program began with the obvious assumption that to attain maximum protection to the head one should cover the entire head," states a 1976 Army report, "Development of a New Infantry Helmet."

Common sense dictated that this medieval ideal was not suitable for the 20th-century infantryman. But McManus, Durand and their colleagues in various Army research organizations, setting out to design the first new U.S. helmet since World War II, were leaving nothing to chance.

"Every design aspect reducing the ideal coverage was documented by a corresponding study recommending such a cut or standoff," states the 1976 report. Thirty-two studies were conducted, involving everything from the sizes and shapes of human heads to ballistic material evaluation. The tests produced three U.S. patents, praise from the National Academy of Sciences and, not exactly presto, the PASGT helmet.

Sizing was a particularly nettlesome issue. The problem, say McManus and Durand, was that conventional data on the human head, including information the Army acquired by measuring the heads of 6,600 soldiers, does not take into consideration the vagaries of individuals head shapes. "Sizes just don't go up from 7½ to 7⅝ and so on," Durand says, "It's like a Miss America contest where the perfect measurements are 36-24-35—not one of those women will have all three of those measurements."

After several laborious false starts, McManus and Durand devised a "3-D numerical surface descriptor," a transparent hemisphere fitting over the head and equipped with needlelike probes to measure distance from the head at 27 points. The thing looks like an instrument of torture, but it provided the researchers with the information they needed—that is, it gave them three-dimensional data concerning head shapes corresponding to the voluminous two-dimensional measurements.

"In our eyes the heads actually were more important than the helmet," Durand recalls. "They became the basis from which we designed. The ideal helmet from the ballistic point of view would be a bathing cap, because it moves with the head and thus gives the greatest possible stability, and it presents the smallest target."

The sizing effort was characterized as "the most comprehensive anthropomorphic data-gathering program ever established for the head" by the National Academy of Sciences, and the awful-looking apparatus won McManus and Durand one of those three patents. As a result of this work, the new helmet, which comes in four sizes, fits much better than did the steel pot, and thereby helps to answer the three primary complaints from the field regarding the old helmet—stability, fit and comfort.

Concurrent tests were conducted on ventilation, one of them using a full-scale "copper man" to measure insulation values and "vapor transmission coefficients of clothing systems," and on "transient deformation"—"the distance a given material will momentarily deflect when impacted by a missile of known mass fired at non-penetrating velocity," or what a soldier might call a helmet's headache potential.

In other words, a hard bathing cap would be hot, uncomfortable, and would transmit an awful headache to its wearer when hit by anything larger than a small pebble. These tests proved that one-half-inch standoff for the head was adequate for ventilation and transient deformation in a helmet using Kevlar, the tough new polymer developed by Du Pont originally to replace steel belts in radial tires but whose chemical properties make it ideal for ballistics protection. (Kevlar is also used in the PASGT vest.)

At this point the researchers basically had the inside of the helmet designed. The information was passed on to a sculptor who prepared working molds, and tests continued concerning the exterior properties of the helmet—what shape would provide the optimum mix of visibility, hearing, weapons compatibility and protection—and on the suspension system.

When a prototype based on criteria established in these tests was first field-tested in 1974 at Aberdeen, Md., it received, according to Durand and McManus, the "highest level of troop acceptability of any item of clothing in Army history."

A surprising result of these tests, in view of the fact that a prime complaint about the steel pot was its heaviness, was that the new helmet was perceived as being lighter than the M1, even though its actual weight was about the same.

Why? "The center of gravity is lower, it's closer to the head and it just fits better all around," McManus says.

The result is a helmet with a built-in, adjustable suspension band and an outer shell made of 19 laminated layers of Kevlar. It covers 11 percent more of the head than the M1, provides better visibility and greatly increases stability and comfort. Most importantly, it increases protection. "It takes 2½ times the energy to penetrate this helmet as it does the M1," Durand states. "We can expect head casualties to be reduced by 25 to 30 percent in a given scenario" with the new helmet.

In addition, there are intangible advantages. In the first field tests, 11 years ago, soldiers equipped with the M1 and PASGT helmets ran parallel lines along obstacle courses. "The soldiers invariably took off the steel pot when they were done with the course," Durand recalls, "but many would just leave the PASGT helmet on. We knew we had a comfortable helmet then." In Vietnam quite a few casualties resulted from hits taken on helmetless heads. This is not likely to happen with the new helmet.

Of course, a trooper can't cook in it or use it as an instant early morning wash basin. "You can't cook in it, but you won't bleed in it either, is what we tell the soldiers," concludes McManus.

The new helmet is, in short, a classic example of the design dictum that form follows function. Its great beauty is that it saves lives.

PROTECTING SECRETS

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, August 7, 1985, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

PROTECTING SECRETS

The Walker spy case and other recent cases of espionage against the U.S. have focused attention on how to improve protection of our secrets.

We now protect vital government secrets through a system of classifying information according to sensitivity, and limiting access to it. Not instituted or regulated by Congress, the system controls information only in the Executive Branch. The system's three categories—Top Secret, Secret, and Confidential—are based on the harm disclosure would cause to national security: exceptionally grave damage, serious damage, or damage. Information is classified only if it is important to national security, and applies to military plans, weapons, or operations; foreign government information, intelligence activities, sources and methods; foreign relations; safeguarding nuclear materials or facilities; cryptology; or a confidential source.

Specific agencies and officials have authority to classify information. Other officials use "derivative authority" to classify documents based on information taken from other classified documents. Last year, 6,900 federal officials with original classification authority classified 881,943 documents. Another 18,725,793 documents were classified by derivative authority.

Only trustworthy people who need the information to do their jobs are allowed access to classified documents. The "determination of trustworthiness" is commonly called a security clearance. The condition that access is necessary is the "need-to-know requirement". To obtain access to classified information, an individual must have both the necessary security clearance (Confidential, Secret, or Top Secret) and the need to know the information to perform his duties.

Recent events show the system is not working well. Several steps can be taken to improve it:

1. Reduce the amount of classified information. Some estimates of the number of classified documents reach into the trillions. The Pentagon alone classifies 16 million new items each year. Needlessly stamping information "secret" breeds a lack of regard for material that is properly classified, and overloads our capacity to protect truly sensitive information. We classify so much materials that officials need clearances for routine work. When everything is classified, then nothing is classified, and officials become careless in handling classified information. If we classified only what is valuable, we could focus our resources to protect that information. An effective security system would have maximum disclosure, recognizing that secrecy can best be preserved when credibility is strictly maintained.

2. Reduce the number of people with access to classified information. About 4.5 million people have security clearances, 40% more than five years ago. Leaks are inevitable when so many people handle secrets. If we reduced the number of people with clearances we could examine their backgrounds and activity more closely.

3. Strengthen the clearance process. We devote too few resources to background clearances. Many investigators are overworked, underpaid and undertrained. Background checks are often sketchy, usually only a perfunctory check for convictions and firings. Only about 1% of 200,000 top secret clearances requested last year were denied. Re-clearance checks, mandated every five years for access to top-secret data, are at least ten years behind schedule. We should regularly recheck and cancel unnecessary clearances. Since spies are apparently motivated more by money than by ideology, clearance reviews, as well as initial checks, should include financial examinations. Another step to consider is the careful use of lie detectors on those with special clearances. Polygraphs, though not infallible, are already used by the CIA and the National Security Agency.

4. Enforce the "need-to-know" principle. The need-to-know principle—the key to the system of classified information—is often violated. A clearance should not entitle an individual to see anything; it is only one condition for access to classified information. Once an individual has met this condition he should be permitted access only if he needs the information to do his job.

5. Improve security at private contractors. 1.5 million private sector employees with clearances are monitored by about 200 government agents. About 200 companies have 95% of the classified documents, but investigators must inspect all 14,000 contractors regularly. Companies request more clearances than they need, often for employees hired to paint and do other maintenance jobs. Many government contractors are lax in reporting clues of espionage—unexplained affluence, unusual interest in classified material, excessive foreign travel. Private companies are also not required to train security guards. Security is often the responsibility of secretaries and file clerks. Federal regulations prohibiting removal of classified documents from the premises are not strictly enforced.

6. Encourage respect for security. The recent upsurge in spying may be due in part to a change in official attitudes. Government officials, including Members of Congress, sometimes leak classified information, usually to influence policy or gain bureaucratic advantage. Public respect for security has declined, and many officials do not, for whatever reason, follow the simple rules that assure good security.

These precautions alone will not eliminate the hemorrhaging of secrets. We will have to take other steps as well, such as stepping up efforts against the real culprits in espionage: thousands of enemy agents operating under diplomatic cover, to do so will require expanding our undermanned counterintelligence units. But if we reduce the amount of information we classify, reduce the number of people with access to that material, and improve investigations of those getting the clearances, we will make those counterintelligence efforts easier, and the nation's secrets will be more secure.

BRZEZINSKI TALKS ABOUT SDI

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the Soviets are master negotiators and have used their finely tuned skills in the Geneva negotiations on arms control. They try to win major concessions from American negotiators while giving nothing. They promise progress in arms control only if the United States abandons new weapons programs. They leave the negotiating table if they fail to get their way. All too often, it is the United States which gets blamed for the failure of the talks. When agreements are arrived at, the Soviets often break those solemn accords with great disdain. Who can forget about Helsinki?

At the current talks, the Soviets are insisting that the United States abandon the strategic defense initiative. To nobody's surprise, they want our negotiators to say that America will terminate that stabilizing program without requiring that the Soviets cut back on any of their offensive systems.

I am encouraged by a recent article on this subject written by Zbigniew Brzezinski. He is to be commended for saying, "enough is enough." If the Soviets continue to play hard ball at the negotiating table, our Government should quickly move ahead with the strategic defense initiative.

While many opponents of the President's strategic defense initiative have made their views known, I want to share the refreshing views of former Assistant to the President for National Security, Zbigniew Brzezinski, with my colleagues in the House.

[From the New Republic, July 8, 1985]

HOW TO BREAK ARMS CONTROL IMPASSE—A STAR WARS SOLUTION

(By Zbigniew Brzezinski)

The usual danse macabre of American-Soviet arms control negotiations is about to begin. The process is typically initiated by a Soviet announcement to leaders of the U.S. government, and to the myriad self-appointed American accommodationists trooping to Moscow to seek on their own a "fair" solution, that the ongoing stalemate is due entirely to American rigidity. The Soviets insist that they cannot give an inch, and that only a massive display of American good faith—translated into unilateral concessions—can revive the negotiations.

In the late 1970s the Soviets made it clear that progress in negotiations would be contingent upon U.S. abandonment of its cruise missile program. In 1984 they premised even the beginning of arms control talks on the dismantling of the U.S. Pershing and cruise missiles already deployed in Europe. Then the MX missile came to be designated as the impediment to any compromise. And now the Strategic Defense Initiative, Reagan's so-called Star Wars proposal, has been identified as the mortal enemy of arms control.

These arguments are then faithfully reproduced on the Op-Ed pages of U.S. and West European papers. Renowned professors, former ambassadors, various politicized scientists, and leaders of the arms control lobby plead for a demonstration of American good faith—which happens to coincide with the acceptance of what the Soviets have been demanding. The process of negotiation thus begins in earnest—but among us Americans! The Russians, meanwhile, sit at the table in Geneva and wait for the eventual U.S. concessions.

It is a normal procedure for the United States to prepare for serious negotiations with the Soviet Union by defining a tough opening gambit, to be followed by a more flexible position that would be exercised in conjunction with some demonstrated Soviet willingness to compromise. But it is usually only a matter of time before some disgruntled official leaks the substance of the fallback position to one of the ex-ambassadors, peace-loving professors, or any one of the 535 representatives and senators who have lately become our surrogate secretaries of defense and state. Any one of them then feels free to publicize the fallback position as his constructive suggestion. Indeed, the latest fashion is to compose a joint letter published under three or four prestigious signatures, strongly urging the U.S. to make further unilateral concessions in order to convince the Soviets that we are negotiating in earnest. After we prove our good intentions, the Russians may be prepared to accept our third—or fourth—fallback position as a proper match for their own unyielding position.

The Soviet argument against SDI and the domestic critics' case against SDI are politically complementary. The Soviets say that SDI threatens the militarization of space, and that there will be no arms control agreement unless it is abandoned. The American critics say SDI will not work, that it will cost too much, that the Soviets can very easily overcome it, and that the Soviets are dreadfully fearful of it. The logical inconsistency of these arguments is less important than the political symmetry of their intended effect—namely that the U.S. should unilaterally forgo the SDI program.

In fact, nothing could be more damaging to the prospects for real arms control than the jettisoning of SDI. Indeed, the time has come for the United States to bite the bullet on the SDI question. Only if a strategic defense system is deployable within the next decade or so, and only if our will to deploy it is proven credible, can the United States trade it for a genuine and comprehensive arms control agreement with the Soviets. It is essential that this system be capable of disrupting and rendering militarily useless a Soviet first strike by intercepting missiles early in flight or by knocking them out as they descend toward the United States. Anything less than that virtually guarantees that there will be no comprehensive arms control agreement.

The reason for this proposition, unpalatable though it may be to the arms control lobby, is rooted both in the changing character of nuclear weaponry and in the nature of Soviet strategic deployments. In the 1970s both sides enjoyed large strategic forces whose primary function was to pose the threat of annihilation to the other country. These systems were not susceptible to preemptive destruction. The emerging reality of the 1980s, and 1990s is that both sides are deploying far more accurate weapons. These weapons are capable of a preemptive first strike that could eliminate the opponent's strategic forces—and prevent effective retaliation. For the first time it is possible to contemplate the possibility of an attack that destroys an overwhelming majority of the other side's forces while also disrupting its command and communications structures to such an extent that any response would be marginal, spasmodic, and conceivably not totally destructive. In short, as accuracy increases so does the benefit of striking first.

This is not to argue that the Soviets (or the United States) are likely or certain to launch a first strike. It is simply to say that the nuclear relationship is growing ever more precarious. This is the current danger in the American-Soviet military situation. It needs to be addressed and resolved by the arms control process, if possible; or unilaterally, if arms control remains stalemated.

But there is another problem raised by the advent of the highly accurate weaponry.

The Soviet Union is now deploying such forces in large numbers; the United States is not. How can we negotiate effectively in this situation? We somehow have to convince the Soviets to limit the further deployment of their new SS-24 and SS-25 missiles, and to limit significantly the deployment of existing SS-18s and SS-19s, all of which have counterforce capability. Without such limitations, by the early 1990s the Soviets—even by conservative estimates—will have enough missiles to place the entire U.S. arsenal in jeopardy. Only our Trident and Poseidon submarines already out at sea might escape destruction from a Soviet first strike. And with the confusion and resulting disintegration of communications systems, the submarines forces might not be in a position to retaliate effectively.

In contrast, the United States is not likely to be able to threaten the Soviet Union in a comparable way. No ongoing or likely deployment program will enable us to launch a disarming attack. Even if the U.S. had some form of strategic defense in order to protect its missile forces, we would still have far too few MX missiles, D-5 missiles on Trident submarines, and Midgetmen to even permit contemplation of such a disarming first-strike attack at any point between now and the end of the century.

In these circumstances, the decision to go ahead with the SDI makes eminent sense. But is also means reformulating it politically and strategically. The U.S. should drop or at least de-emphasize President Reagan's idealistic hope for total nuclear defense for all our population. We should also abandon our unwillingness to consider SDI in the bargaining process. If we implement that part of the SDI program which by the mid-1990s would enable us to disrupt a Soviet first strike, we would reinforce deterrence and promote nuclear stability. That means concentrating on terminal defense and boost-phase interception.

Once we establish our determination to act on the SDI, we are in a better position to strike a bargain. We can say to the Soviets that we both face essentially two choices, one mutually beneficial, the other especially costly to them, but both stabilizing. The first choice is to renegotiate the 1972 ABM treaty to permit deployment of strategic missile defense, but without either side improving its ability to carry out a first strike. Then, in return for significant reductions in SS-24s, SS-25s, SS-18s, and SS-19s, the United States would not deploy its strategic defense system. The second option would be pursued if Soviets were unwilling to accept such a bargain. The United States would unilaterally terminate the ABM treaty and proceed with the SDI. This would render the Soviets' new generation of accurate missiles useless and wipe out their multibillion ruble investment in them.

Some critics of the SDI argue that the Soviets could respond by vastly increasing their offensive deployments. There are two problems with this line of thinking. First, if the Soviets do respond by building up, they will confirm the ominous suspicion that they are intent on preserving a first-strike capability against the United States; if so, the urgency of negating that threat is all the greater.

Second, if the Soviets expand their offensive forces, the strategic defense could be expanded proportionally. Remember that such a system would not need to be foolproof since it would not be designed to defend populations; it would only need to be capable of significantly disrupting an attack on U.S. strategic forces. In such a competition we would have the advantage. It would be far cheaper for us to add defensive missiles than for them to add highly accurate offensive missiles. (Those who make the most ambitious claims for the SDI should bear in mind that we could not compete so well if we were seeking to build a foolproof defense of our cities. If our defense had to be 100 percent effective, it would cost us far more to expand it than it would cost the Soviets to expand their offensive forces.)

To shape such an effective U.S. defense strategy and a meaningful negotiating posture, President Reagan's SDI needs to be redefined. We must show the Soviets both that we can deploy a strategic defense system soon and that we will negotiate over its deployment if they are willing to make stabilizing reductions in their offensive missile forces. In the event of Soviet unwillingness to accept such an arrangement, we would be in position unilaterally to achieve strategic security for ourselves. And because the SDI would not be accompanied by a massive deployment of disarming first-strike offensive U.S. systems, we would in no way increase our strategic threat to the Soviets. Either way SDI promises a genuinely stabilized nuclear equilibrium between the United States and the Soviet Union. It is time to act.

WHAT THE STATUE OF LIBERTY MEANS TO ME

HON. ROY DYSON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to share with my colleagues the four winning essays read at the Jewish War Veterans Ladies Auxiliary of the United States Liebman-Berger Memorial Post No. 7's Fourth of July celebration. Established in 1896, the Jewish War Veterans Ladies Auxiliary is our Nation's oldest veterans organization.

The essays submitted for this competition are entitled, "What the Statue of Liberty Means to Me." The winners—all of whom hail from Maryland's lower shore—are Heather L. Kimmel, Kathy Shenesky, Lisa Ann Hoffman, and Hartley Saunders. I extend my congratulations to these fine young Americans and wish them well in their future endeavors.

The four essays follow:

WHAT THE STATUE OF LIBERTY MEANS TO ME

(By Heather L. Kimmel, Wicomico Senior High School)

In 1865, the French had the idea of giving a monument to the United States to mark the friendship between the two nations. Frederic Auguste Bartholdi was sent to America to investigate the possibilities of such a monument. He conceived of building a colossal statue at the gateway to the New World, the entrance to the New York Harbor. Liberty Enlightening the World was then created by Bartholdi, engineer Alexander Gustave Eiffel, and architect Richard Morris Hunt. In 1886, the statue and pedestal were erected on top of Fort Wood on Bedloe's Island, now Liberty Island.

The idea of the creation of the statue and the finished work itself represent a close friendship between France and the United States. This illustrates the fact that countries of our world can work together and remain allies. An Old World country created the statue for a New World country. The Old World has come to respect the ideas of the New World and no longer tried to take over and destroy the newer principles.

The tablet held by the Statue of Liberty is inscribed "July 4, 1776," the date that the Declaration of Independence was signed. To me, this statue represents the freedom that our forefathers envisioned for the United States. It also symbolizes opportunity for our country's citizens and foreigners that have come and will come here.

The torch in Liberty's upraised right hand symbolizes a ray of hope for all mankind, since the flame in the torch never flickers. Despite wars, conflicts, corruptions, or natural disasters, Americans will have a hope that peace and prosperity will be available to all.

At Liberty's feet is a broken chain, seldom seen. This symbolizes the bonds that link people struggling for their liberty. People of different religions, cultures, nationalities, and races can live and work together in harmony.

Liberty, as a whole, represents the American dream of individual freedom and hope for living a meaningful and rewarding life. Even though the statue is almost 100 years old, it continues to be an important symbol to the American people.

WHAT THE STATUE OF LIBERTY MEANS TO ME

(By Kathy Shenesky, Bennett Senior High School)

The Statue of Liberty is a symbol of pride for all Americans. Seeing it reminds us of the freedom, hope, and courage that all Americans share. Each American has a story to tell about their first viewing of Lady Liberty. They all feel some sort of patriotism, which is a part of being a citizen of the United States. The Statue itself has become a symbol of our country.

All Americans take pride in having freedom. We fought for it during the Revolutionary War, and shared our victory with France the donor of this statue. Immigrants see a life in our country as a chance to be free; either to have freedom from oppression or freedom to be a more independent individual. I feel that there is no country in the world that allows me more freedom to achieve my potential as a citizen of the United States.

Hope is also a characteristic that all Americans share. One hundred years after the Revolutionary War, France gave us the Statue of Liberty to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the signing of the treaty to end the war. It was given as a symbol of hope that our alliance would continue. Hope is also felt by United States immigrants. They want to be successful in their new country, and hope for a more prosperous future. The Statue of Liberty makes me hope that our country will spread peace throughout the world.

The Statue of Liberty represents courage. In the Revolutionary War, it took courage for a group of people to fight for freedom and risk defeat. It also takes courage for United States immigrants to move to the United States and risk failure. When I look at Lady Liberty, I feel courage to stand up for what I believe in.

The restoration of the Statue of Liberty has enkindled great enthusiasm among all Americans. To everyone, young, old, rich, and poor, this monument stands for the best qualities of being American.

WHAT THE STATUE OF LIBERTY MEANS TO ME

(By Hartley Saunders, Wicomico Senior High School

Ever since its construction in 1876, the Statue of Liberty has been a symbol of peace and prosperity for imigrants as well as to patriotic Americans. Her magnificent lines and adornments symbolize many of the liberties that native-born Americans have exclusively.

The Statue's parts symbolize different things to me, while projecting a unified feeling of patriotism. The pedestal on which she stands symbolizes how high America has made itself through hard solid work, just as the solid bricks and beams that make up the pedestal. Proceeding upward, I see that Lady Liberty carries a great book. That great book is the symbol of the education that is promised to each and every American. Rising up even further, I pass her majestic head and crown. They symbolize to me the beauty of the land I call America. And finally, after following that colossal arm upward, I reach the torch. Its flame symbolizes America as a bright star over a black sea.

After closely examining the statue in individual parts, I look at her as a whole. And while I am gazing at her supreme beauty, I see another symbol; the green coating. The coating represents to me the riches to be found here, both monetary and personal.

The Statue of Liberty with all her splendor is only as beautiful as the people of America think her. I'm afraid not every one thinks as I do. But as long as a few patriotic people still believe in America, the torch will shine as brightly as the sun.

WHAT THE STATUE OF LIBERTY MEANS TO ME

(By Lisa Ann Hoffman, Wicomico Senior High School)

The Statue of Liberty on Bedloe Island, New York Harbor represents the freedom that America cherishes, and to me it serves as a symbol of what our country stands for. All through the course of history, America has fought for its freedom. When the first settlers from Europe began to colonize the New World, they expressed a desire to be liberated and govern themselves. They battled for that right, and won.

As you enter the New York Harbor, you can't help but see Lady Liberty and the torch that she holds aloft in her right hand. The flame it produces illuminates the world and radiates to everyone the feeling of independence that all Americans should have within them. It also represents the energy and fire that come from the spark of patriotism. In her left hand, Liberty holds the book of law, depicting to me the American idea of equal opportunity for all.

The amiability and gratitude that the French felt towards America must have been overwhelming to be cause for such a gift. The Statue of Liberty also, therefore, exemplifies the respect that America deserves and rightfully receives. She is a constant reminder of all these things and installs in us new partriotism whenever we see her. I am glad that the Statue of Liberty's condition is being kept up, and I hope that the restoration is not only one of her appearance, but also one of the faith and pride of the American people.

INTRODUCTION OF GLEANING RESOLUTION

HON. TONY P. HALL

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, on July 30 I made a statement to accompany the introduction of a resolution to encourage gleaning. As the statement indicated, my resolution commends gleaning groups throughout the country and those food producers—individuals and organizations—who permit gleaners to collect unharvested crops from their fields to help feed the poor of this Nation.

However, due to a printing error, the actual resolution was not formally introduced and assigned a number. For that reason I am resubmitting my resolution on gleaning with the request that the error be corrected.

H. CON. RES. 183

Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that food producers who permit gleaning of their fields and nonprofit organizations which glean fields and distribute the resulting harvest to help alleviate hunger should be commended for their efforts, and for other purposes

Whereas a large number of people in this country are not able to regularly supply themselves and their families with food;

Whereas food banks, soup kitchens, and other emergency food providers are witnessing a substantial increase in the number of persons seeking food assistance;

Whereas gleaning is a partnership between food producers and nonprofit organizations through which food producers permit members of such organizations to collect grain, vegetables, and fruit which have not been harvested and distribute such food items to programs which provide food to needy individuals;

Whereas support of gleaning to supply food to the poor is part of the Judeo-Christian heritage as set out in the Book of Leviticus, "When you reap the harvests of your land, do not reap to the very edges of your field or gather the gleanings of your harvest. Do not go over your vineyard a second time or pick up the grapes that have fallen. Leave them for the poor and the alien.";

Whereas a 1977 General Accounting Office analysis estimated that during the 1974 harvest 60,000,000 tons of grain, vegetables, and fruit, valued at $5,000,000,000 were unharvested;

Whereas the diets of millions of hungry people in the United States could have been supplemented with such lost grain, vegetables, and fruit;

Whereas a number of State and local governments have enacted Good Samaritan laws which limit the liability of food donors and provide an incentive for food contributions; and

Whereas numerous civic, religious, charitable, and other nonprofit organizations throughout the country have begun gleaning programs to harvest such food items and channel them to the hungry in the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) food producers who permit gleaning of their fields and civic, religious, charitable, and other nonprofit organizations which glean fields and distribute the resulting harvest to help alleviate hunger should be commended for their efforts; and

(2) State and local governments should be encouraged to enact tax and other incentives designed to increase the number of food producers who permit gleaning of their fields and the number of shippers who donate, or charge reduced rates for, transportation of gleaned produce.

TERRORISM IN THE UNITED STATES

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, August 14, 1985, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

TERRORISM IN THE UNITED STATES

Terrorist attacks on Americans abroad have increased fears of violence spreading to the U.S. The resurgence of religious fanaticism, the increased willingness of foreign governments to export terrorism, the development of new terrorist technology that makes detection more difficult, the enormous publicity terrorists get in the U.S., and the number and diversity of people within our borders are all reasons for concern.

Terrorism is indiscriminate violence used against innocent bystanders for political effect. Terrorists attempt to create fear and to get widespread attention, exaggerating their strength and the importance of their cause. Most recent terrorist actions in the U.S. have been committed less to alter U.S. government policies than to alter policies in other countries. For example, the FBI recently foiled a plot against the Prime Minister of India during his visit to the U.S. In recent years, the number of terrorist incidents in the U.S. has dropped from 51 in 1982, when 7 people were killed and 26 injured, to 13 in 1984, with no injuries or fatalities. However, the 1984 figures do not count the two dozen abortion clinic bombings, which some say should have been included in the tally. The dominant form of recent terrorist actions in the U.S. has been planting bombs, and most were in New York City. Terrorists usually plan actions that will call attention to their cause without resulting in deaths.

While the State Department heads up our efforts against international terrorism, the FBI is the lead agency in our domestic efforts, with more than 500 full-time counter-terrorism agents. In recent years, FBI capabilities have been strengthened, through, for example, an increase in the number of agents, hostage rescue training and expanded computerization. Moreover, domestic surveillance guidelines for the FBI were recently loosened. Fortunately, the trend in the U.S. has been to fewer terrorist acts and more convictions.

Although examples of terrorist acts are found throughout U.S. history, they have not been as widespread here as in other countries, for several reasons. Terrorism from domestic groups has been relatively rare because ideology has traditionally not been a major force in U.S. history, and because we have had few recent separationist struggles. Moreover, our political system has an enormous capacity to bring those with grievances into the democratic process.

Thus, the main threat of terrorism in the U.S. may come from abroad. Yet certain factors reduce the influx of terrorism. Foreign terrorists generally attack Americans abroad rather than come to the U.S. because of America's geographical remoteness and our tighter airport security. Many terrorists have been trained in Europe and find it easier to get around there. Also, terrorist acts in the U.S. by foreigners would inflame public opinion against their cause and would likely trigger widespread calls for strong retaliation. The view of most experts is that in the near future most terrorist actions against the U.S. will continue to take place abroad. Yet, as the FBI has noted, there is the potential for an increase of terrorism in the U.S.

We must take several steps to deal with the threat of domestic terrorism. Although we must improve our capabilities for handling terrorist incidents once they occur, the most important steps we can take are preventive—heading off terrorist actions before they take place. Such steps include, first, trying to address the kinds of fundamental grievances that give rise to terrorism. We should also continue to institute security practices that make the task of the terrorist more difficult, such as barriers around public buildings and electronic screening of crowds. Nearly all terrorism can be foiled with currently available security devices and procedures if they are applied sufficiently. We must continue to give wide publicity to our anti-terrorist efforts and our resolve to respond firmly to terrorists. For example, our well-publicized $100 million security effort at the Los Angeles Olympics is credited with discouraging terrorism. In addition, we should tighten our domestic anti-terrorist laws by increasing fines and prison terms, and by providing rewards for informants. Moreover, although the FBI has improved its capacity to deal with conventional terrorists, we should boost our ability to deal with large-scale, heavily-armed terrorist groups and to counter different kinds of attacks, such as against power or water systems. We should also improve our information-gathering efforts against suspected terrorist groups. If U.S. terrorism increases, we should consider carefully proscribed infiltration of suspected terrorist groups and steps to disrupt their planning. Finally, the U.S. should stop supporting actions elsewhere in the world—such as mining harbors and publishing assassination manuals—that appear to give our blessing to the notion of terrorism.

The fight against terrorism in the U.S. does not rest entirely with the federal government. Others must become more involved, including cities that are prime targets, high-profile international companies, and even individual citizens. One major terrorist group was captured because a housewife called officials after becoming suspicious of several men in jogging suits milling around a van. Her suspicion was aroused because the "joggers" were all heavy smokers.

Although our efforts against domestic terrorism must be firm, we must not overreact and trample civil liberties, disrupt normal commerce, and sharply restrict citizen access to our public buildings and to our government. A government that responds with oppressive measures loses the confidence of its people and plays into the hands of terrorists. Moreover, we should remember that terrorist acts in the U.S., though a major source of concern, are much less frequent than other violent acts. For example, last year there were 13 official acts of terrorism in the U.S., compared to 18,600 reported murders, 84,000 forcible rapes, 485,000 robberies, and 2,984,000 burglaries. Our efforts against terrorism in the U.S. must be forceful, but not panicked.

THAT IMPORT SURCHARGE

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, the following editorial by Congressman JACK KEMP which recently appeared in the Washington Post contributes a great deal to the debate over how we will conquer our trade deficit. JACK reminds us that we must avoid at all cost the kinds of trade policies which dragged this country down earlier in this century and which would reduce our opportunities for economic expansion. I urge my colleagues to read these words carefully:

THAT IMPORT SURCHARGE: WHY WOULD THE DEMOCRATS REPEAT A REPUBLICAN MISTAKE?

Reps. Dan Rostenkowski and Richard Gephardt and Sen. Lloyd Bentsen say that their proposal for a 25 percent import surcharge is a shot across the bow of our trading partners. Like every shot across someone's bow, this one would miss its target. But it would score a direct hit on American businesses, workers and families.

The Rostenkowski-Gephardt-Bentsen bill is no different in principle from the Smoot-Hawley tariff, which helped precipitate the Great Depression. Even some of the circumstances are uncomfortably similar: a growing debt burden in the developing nations; a progressive decline in American agriculture because of the rise of the dollar against other currencies in real terms; a failure to establish a stable international monetary system. In 1929-30, instead of correcting these problems, Congress enacted and President Hoover signed the Smoot-Hawley tariff, which hiked duties across the board. It was the last straw for world trade. The debtor nations could not repay their debts if they could not export to us. They sought to ease the pressure by devaluing their currencies and imposing retaliatory tariffs. The dollar rose even farther. The world economy imploded.

The Democratic sponsors of the new protectionist bill seem to want to repeat the same mistake. The main provision is a 25 percent tariff on any country whose exports to the United States are 50 percent higher than imports and whose world exports exceed world imports by 65 percent. (Why the difference? There's almost a $100 billion statistical discrepancy between total world exports and world imports, even though the two are obviously identical; yet these statistics are supposed to decide whether or not we trigger an all-out trade war!) It turns to that this would selectively target four countries: Japan, South Korea, Taiwan and Brazil.

It's easy to see who this bill would not help: American farmers. Japan, South Korea and Taiwan all make a living by importing raw materials and food and exporting manufactured goods. Japan, for example, is our single biggest agricultural customer. And to the degree that American farmers compete with Brazilian farmers, it is mostly abroad, not in U.S. markets. The 25 percent tariff would hike the prices paid by American farmers for equipment, though the world prices they received would be no higher. And U.S. farmers would be the first victims of any retaliation by other countries.

Would the bill at least reduce our competitive disadvantage in manufacturing? No: Since the tariff is selective, the main result of a 25 percent tariff on Japan would be to shift Japanese goods to Europe and European goods to the United States. This wouldn't help our trade balance at all.

To the degree that any American businesses could gain, it could only be at the expense of other American businesses—and, of course, American households. Both would be hit with price markups from foreign and domestic suppliers. American goods would cost more at home and abroad. Productivity and our standard of living would fall, and we would lose jobs. Any reduction in our imports would be more than matched by a loss of exports. And how can Brazil repay its debts to us if it cannot export to us? How can Japan invest its savings in our country if it cannot transfer the resources to us through trade?

In solving a problem, it helps to know what the problem is. Part of our trade deficit is not a problem. Countries that grow faster than the rest of the world, as we have done, generally import capital seeking a higher return, in the form of a trade deficit. This part of the trade deficit will automatically disappear if other countries pursue growth-oriented policies; if not, we don't need to slow down our economy to reduce the gap, as long as the goods are used to increase our economic capacity. The United States ran a trade deficit for its first 100 years.

But part of our trade deficit is a problem. As in the 1920s, American farmers, manufacturers and mineral producers—industries that export or compete with imports—have been priced out of world markets by the dollar's rise. Just as the fall of the dollar in the 1970s provoked protectionism abroad, the rise of the dollar in the 1980s has led to calls for protection in the United States. The instability of exchange rates has cost many jobs in both the United States and the Third World.

The obvious answer to a monetary policy that permits a rising dollar or a falling dollar is a monetary policy that preserves a stable dollar. We need a domestic monetary policy geared to the value rather than the quantity of money. And we need to return to an international system of stable exchange rates that is neither inflationary nor deflationary. (The Rostenkowski/Gephardt/Bentsen bill does have a section calling for movement toward stable exchange rates.) At the same time, we need a Reagan Round of talks on trade liberalization, patterned on the successful Kennedy Round of the 1960s. This was the goal of the statesman who designed the postwar Bretton Woods monetary system: to dismantle the beggar-thy-neighbor protectionism and competitive currency devaluations of the 1930s.

The Democratic Party is now going through a well-publicized identity crisis. The protectionist bill shows the difficulty the Democrats are having in hammering out a consistent philosophy. The tariff would hurt the farmers for whom the Democrats want larger federal subsidies. In the field of tax reform, many Democrats propose new disincentives for investment that would worsen the competitiveness of precisely the same industries they are trying to "protect."

Politically, the Democrats might do well to consider the kind of luck we Republicans had with the ideas they are now thinking of adopting. The Smoot-Hawley tariff was the prelude not only to national economic but also Republican political disaster. As E. E. Schattschneider remarked about the soon-to-be-minority Hoover Republicans in his classic study of the Smoot-Hawley tariff: "To manage pressure is to govern; to let pressures run wild is to abdicate."

The Republicans used to be the high-tariff party and the Democrats the party of free trade. The switch underlines a larger role reversal of the two parties: Republicans have become the party of growth and opportunity, and the Democrats the party of tax increases and protectionism. As a rule, I don't mind it when the Democrats act like a minority party—confused, contradictory, narrow in scope. But when the future of our economy is at stake, I wish they would stick to ideas, such as tax reform, that make better economic and political sense.

THE TRAGEDY OF NICARAGUA

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, there are many tragedies in today's Nicaragua. After stealing what was originally a democratic revolution, the Sandinista Marxist-Leninists have also destroyed the economy of that country. Their brand of unworkable Communist economics has essentially brought the economy of Nicaragua to its knees. I want to share an interesting editorial on the economy of Nicaragua with my colleagues in the House.

Much has been said about human rights violations by the Sandinistas and their efforts to destroy the church in that country. Much has been written about the police state nature of that society and the growing role of Cuban and Eastern bloc advisers. Many Americans, however, fail to notice that much of the damage to the Nicaraguan economy was inflicted upon that poor country by the Sandinistas themselves.

Around the world, the Marxist-Leninist approach to economics has failed. The economy of the Soviet Union is a classic example of what massive damage is done when the so-called masters of economics take over.

Many countries in Eastern Europe are also economic disasters along with many Third World nations which modeled their economies on the Marxist model.

Given the many problems in that country, is there any wonder that the democratically oriented freedom fighters are winning the support of an increasing number of Nicaraguans? The common people in that country know that the road down which the Sandinistas are forcing that nation is the wrong one. In 1979, that nation obviously took the wrong turn. Let's hope we can help to get Nicaragua back on the right track.

With these concerns in mind, I commend the following insightful article from the Arizona Republic to my colleagues in the House.

The article follows:

[From the Arizona Republic, July 15, 1985]

NICARAGUA: THE FUTURE IS HERE

It was six years ago this month that a popular uprising of the Nicaraguan people drove dictator Anastasio Somoza out of the country his family had controlled virtually as a private fief since 1934.

So abhorrent was the corrupt military dictatorship that the Nicaraguan opposition and North American critics thought almost anything would be preferable.

Well, the future is here in Nicaragua.

According to Mark Falcoff of the American Enterprise Institute on an article in the current issue of Commentary magazine, the euphoria of the immediate post-Somoza era is wearing off and the hard realities of what Sandinista Marxism means are beginning to dawn.

Except among all but the most inflexible apologists for the Sandinistas, there is the growing recognition that quality of life under the regime has steadily declined.

Although never a wealthy country, Nicaragua was reasonably self-sufficient in food production.

Over the past 30 years, the standard of living in Nicaragua, like that for Central America in general, steadily increased.

Under the Sandinistas, that standard has dropped considerably.

Using 1978 as a base year, by 1982, agricultural production had declined 17 percent; industry had dropped 18 percent; and commerce had shown a 27 percent decrease.

The only sector of Nicaraguan society that gained in the first four years of the revolution was the size of the government, which increased three-fold.

By 1983, private consumption of goods had dropped by 12 percent.

Offical sources admit to 20 percent unemployment, and inflation is running at an annual rate of 25 percent.

Amid this economic slump, however, the Sandinistas have managed to build a heavily armed military larger than all others in the region combined.

Since 1979, Nicaragua has been the recipient of $3 billion in foreign loans and $250 million in outright donations, $118 million of that coming from the United States during the Carter administration.

If Nicaragua has economic problems, it is not the fault of the outside world.

Its problems, like those of the Third World generally, are not strictly economic, but are fundamentally political.

The Nicaraguan uprising was, by virtue of their greater armed strength, stolen by Marxists convinced they alone possess the sole repository of historical and economic truth, and are authorized to impose that "truth" on the population generally.

The scenario in Nicaragua is the same one that was played out in Cuba.

For the sake of Marxist patterns of social control, economic growth is willingly sacrificed to the need for the instruments of force and violence.

Nicaraguans understand what is happening, even if many North Americans do not.

That is why in just three years, contra forces has grown from a mere 300 to more than 16,000, or three times the number of armed Sandinistas who fought against Somoza.

WOMEN'S EQUALITY DAY

HON. HAL DAUB

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, last week, the Nation marked Women's Equality Day when we recognized the contributions and achievements of American women.

As in past years, this year was one of both accomplishments and continued challenges.

The challenge for us, as we consider legislation that affects women, is to assure that our laws allow full and equal opportunity for women to advance in every sector of American society.

Having become a member of the Ways and Means Committee earlier this year, I am particularly concerned about the impact of major tax reform on women. I am pleased that the proposal before us includes a number of positive provisions in this regard.

Two areas of special concern are the spousal IRA provision and the child care credit. The spousal IRA is a long overdue recognition of the economic value of the homemaker. Additionally, the spousal IRA addresses the problem of disproportionate poverty among elderly women by providing an incentive for retirement savings.

The child care credit recognizes a legitimate cost to America's working parents. The opportunity for a mother to return to her career should not be diminished by our tax laws, and the child care credit assures that this cost of working is treated fairly in the Tax Code.

Tax reform will affect each American family differently; however, if we are to achieve our goal of fairness, we must recognize the role of women in our economy whether they work as a homemaker or in a career outside the home.

Tax reform and a fair tax code are fundamental to women's equality.

CONGRESS AT MIDYEAR

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, August 21, 1985 into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

CONGRESS AT MIDYEAR

As Congress breaks for its August recess, it is an appropriate time to review its record for the first seven months of 1985. There is only a modest list of legislative accomplishments.

The session began contentiously with the partisan fight over Indiana's Eighth Congressional District seat, and continued with skirmishes over party ratios on committee slots. As consideration of the budget progressed, however, institutional divisions took over with House Democrats and Republicans siding with the President against Senate Republicans. After a slow and bitterly partisan start, Congress managed to reach bipartisan agreement on major budget, defense, and foreign policy issues.

The budget dominated the first six months of the 99th Congress. Differences over Social Security COLAs and defense spending brought budget talks to a halt. But at the last hour before the recess began—ten weeks behind schedule—Congress passed a budget resolution that sets targets for government spending.

The measure's sponsors claim it will trim $55 billion dollars from the deficit for the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1985. But within hours after it was passed, congressional leaders said that overly optimistic economic projections and the budget's measurement for defense cutbacks inflated the savings, and doubts were expressed over whether Congress will enact all the savings called for. Savings will probably be closer to $30-$40 billion next year.

With the President ruling out tax increases and Social Security cutbacks, reductions will come from squeezing domestic programs for a fifth year in a row and by restraining military spending. The balance between defense and domestic cutbacks is vastly different from what the President proposed in February. More savings came from defense, largely because of congressional resistance to continuing the military buildup at the expense of domestic programs. About one half of the savings are from defense.

The budget imposed no new benefit cuts in programs for the poor and elderly, such as food stamps, child nutrition and welfare. Medicare and Medicaid were cut, but by freezing payments to health care providers rathers than by cutting benefits. Farm programs will also be cut, and federal workers' pay will be frozen for one year. Most other domestic programs will be cut by 10-30%. General revenue sharing will end after 1986, the only major program to be eliminated. The plan contains no new taxes.

The budget resolution will keep the deficit from getting worse, but it is little more than a staying effort. Even so, savings are real, and amount to the single largest reductions in history. It sets spending and deficit levels lower than the President proposed. But the budget also leaves deficits of historic proportions. With predictions that, despite these cuts, the deficit will top $200 billion again this year, Congress and the President face an even tougher task next year.

I am concerned about the failure of the President and Congress to address the long-term budget problem. The disappointment for me is that we had the chance while the economy was doing fairly well to act in a non-crisis atmosphere. If we are unwilling to consider reductions in spending in major entitlement programs and defense, then cuts in other domestic areas will have little impact.

The passage of the budget resolution does not complete the budget process. The bill is only a guide for spending bills still to be enacted. My hope is that Congress will make cuts even greater than those proposed by the resolution when it considers spending bills this fall.

Congress also completed action on other items. It released highway funds from last year held up by a dispute over demonstration projects, and repealed the contemporaneous record-keeping requirement enacted last year. In foreign policy and defense, it settled the controversial MX missile and Nicaraguan Contra aid issues, at least for now. It passed the first foreign aid bill since 1981. It provided emergency famine relief and recovery aid for Africa. In response to the TWA hijacking, both Houses passed bills to improve security standards for international air transportation. It has nearly completed action on the defense bill for next year and is likely to give final approval to sanctions against South Africa when it returns in September. Congress has also been pushing the President to take action to reduce the growing trade deficit and to respond to unfair trading practices by other countries, notably Japan.

The President has been less effective at the beginning of his second term. Because of staff changes and the President's illness, the White House has been unable to focus its resources. In both foreign and domestic policy, the President was forced to settle for less than he wanted. The MX was saved but the program was cut in half. Humanitarian aid for the anti-government rebels in Nicaragua was approved, but not the military aid the President wanted. Domestic programs were cut but not eliminated. Senate leaders were forced to abandon efforts to give the President a line item veto. And in the case of sanctions against South Africa, Congress simply repudiated the administration's policy of "constructive engagement" with the Pretoria government.

The big work for the Congress when it returns in September will be to implement the budget resolution. A wide range of additional issues will be on the agenda including immigration, international trade, civil rights, farm programs, clean water reauthorization and the Superfund for toxic waste cleanup. Tax reform is not dead. Virtually all members of the key House tax-writing committees favor tax reforms and the President continues to support it strongly. House action on tax reform this year remains a strong possibility, but Senate action is much more uncertain.

JAPAN EVEN HAS TROUBLE BUYING FOREIGN WINE

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, the Journal of Commerce, August 19, 1985, carried an article entitled "Trade Tensions Mount Over Japanese Wine."

For a people who are so smart, it is hard to understand why they insist on a domestic wine production industry—why 130 million people living in a mountainous area about the size of Montana would want to plant land in vineyards.

But the concluding quote in the article explains why Americans are at the end of their rope over our trade relationship. The Japanese Treasury official says, "We intend to protect first these small, weak wine makers."

Excuse me, Japan, but if you won't buy more of the wine of my district's Livermore Valley, then I intend to protect first my small weak semiconductor and computer firms against Hitachi, Fujitsu, NEC, and the other industrial/bank conglomerates of Japan.

TRADE TENSIONS MOUNT OVER JAPANESE WINE

TOKYO.—In 1983, Herve Gueymard gave up his career as an architect to take over a family business, a 20-acre vineyard that produces about 7,000 cases of select Japanese wine a year.

Japan might seem an unlikely place for a Frenchman to cultivate grapes, but Mr. Gueymard shares the conviction of producers worldwide that the wine market in Japan will ripen in the next decade.

"It will be one of the biggest markets in the world (behind France, the United States and the United Kingdom) within 10 years, maybe before that," the 39-year-old Mr. Gueymard predicted in an interview. "Things are changing and we can feel it."

Growing interest in the beverage, however, has raised tensions in the market, uncorking an oft-bitter brew of trade problems.

Lacking land, climate and a tradition of wine, Japan's wine producers have cultivated their market using foreign flair, a chauvinistic preference for the domestic product and cheap foreign wine blended with locally grown grapes.

Foreign vendors, sensing a coming market boom, voice complaints that are familiar to would-be importers of many other types of products, namely, that the Japanese government has unnecessarily protected Japan's wine makers with a web of tariffs and duties and a dearth of labeling regulations.

"Imported wines have roughly a 23 percent share of the market, but pay 57 percent of the taxes and duties on all wines," said French Embassy Agriculture Attache Jacques Torregrossa.

"Imported wines cannot compete at the moment," said Mr. Gueymard. "The local market is so well-structured."

The import market recently suffered another, unexpected blow—the discovery in Japan of 35 bottles of Austrian and West German wine tainted with a potentially lethal anti-freeze called diethylene glycol.

No deaths or injuries have been reported in Japan or any of 10 other countries where the tainted wine has been found, but the effect has been nothing short of devastating, according to some sources familiar with the market.

At least two department stores in Tokyo halted sales of all Austrian and West German wines, and an American importer, asking not to be named, said he learned that one import firm that does not even handle German or Austrian wines had seen sales plummet from 3,000 cases a week to less than 100 cases.

Once regarded solely as an herbal medicine, wine still enjoys only a single-digit share of the Japanese liquor market, although its growth is double-digit.

In the first quarter of 1985, beer held 60 percent of alcohol sales, whiskey 6.3 percent and wine just over 1 percent, according to the trading house Jardine, Matheson and Co. (Japan) Ltd.

Yet, "Japanese per capita wine consumption doubled during the past 10 years, reaching 0.8 liters in 1983," a U.S. Embassy report said: In Tokyo, consumption reached 1.6 liters per person.

With a drop in whiskey sales of 8 million cases in 1984, an increase in women drinkers, Western meals and travel abroad, and a global trend toward low-alcohol liquor, market watchers say wine will continue to climb.

"Everything is in its favor," said Willie Purcell of Jardine, while at the same time complaining that importers won't easily be able to share in the market.

Japan's climate is so humid and land so scarce that the few wine grapes produced are 500 percent to 900 percent more costly and 8 percent lower in alcohol than U.S. or European Community varieties; according to the French Embassy.

Japanese producers depend on bulk wine from countries such as Spain and Bulgaria, or grape must—the fermenting juice of grapes—for blending with Japanese wine.

Only 20 percent of wine consumed in Japan is purely domestic, and a bottle needs only 5 percent Japanese grapes to be labeled "Product of Japan."

"We don't think it is an important matter," said Masahide Kanzaki of Suntory Ltd., one of three companies that control 60 percent of the market. "Consumers don't want to know where the grapes come from."

In addition to a lack of laws regulating wine labels by origin and variety, importers say duties and taxes are 40 percent higher than those paid by domestic producers.

Japanese officials defend the system as necessary to protect domestic producers. "It is very difficult for us to reduce our tariffs," said Yoshiro Okamoto, deputy director of planning for the Finance Ministry's Custom and Tariffs Bureau. "We intend to protect first these small, weak wine makers."

IN SUPPORT OF H.R. 10

HON. NICK JOE RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, today the House passed H.R. 10, the National Development Investment Act which amends the Economic and the Appalachian Regional Development Acts of 1965. The programs developed under these acts have been highly successful in the fight to eliminate poverty and its devastating effects in Appalachia and to educate and enlighten the people of this area.

I would like to share one of the many successful endeavors of the Economic Development Administration in my home district in West Virginia. The following details Marshall University's Center for Regional Progress and its Economic Development Administration University Center Program. The center for regional progress was one of only three new University centers created by EDA nationwide last year. The support provided by EDA has enabled Marshall University to extend a wide variety of technical assistance and research activities to business, industry and government which otherwise would have been unavailable.

MARSHALL UNIVERSITY CENTER FOR REGIONAL PROGRESS, EDA UNIVERSITY CENTER PROGRAM

In August, 1984 Assistant Secretary of Commerce, Ms. J. Bonnie Newman, awarded a $77,000 grant to the Center for Regional Progress to establish an Economic Development Administration University Center. The purpose of the University Center is to provide economic development assistance to 21 southern West Virginia counties hard hit by unemployment.

The EDA University Center program enables the considerable faculty and staff resources of Marshall University to be directed to the region's economic development needs. Four types of assistance are made available to business and industry, government and community organizations: (1) Technical and research assistance, (2) Counseling and referral, (3) Continuing education through workshops, seminars and lectures, (4) Graduate assistantships, cooperative education and internships.

To date 20 faculty members representing various disciplines and 45 students have participated in projects sponsored by the Economic Development Administration Program.

A summary of some of those projects follows.

The client requested assistance in developing a business plan for a pizza/entertainment center, with which bankers and prospective investors could be approached to finance his project. The Center recommended that we undertake a feasibility study along with the development of a business plan to further enhance the business proposal package. Staff is currently researching the feasibility of the project and developing a business plan for the pizza/entertainment center.

The owners of a successful sheet metal fabrication corporation acquired the exclusive manufacturing patent to an innovative solar hearing system and began proto-type production. They test marketed the product and due to the demand for their product the owners decided to set-up a separate corporation to manufacture the solar heater. They approached the Center about advice concerning a national promotional campaign package for their new product. As a result of several meetings with the owners, the Center put together a faculty team to research market data and determine a competitive product price. Upon completion of the market study the team will develop promotional strategies and materials for the new corporation. Market research is underway.

The owner of two local pharmacies asked for research assistance. The research would determine if it is feasible to offer retail goods at a wholesale price, charge a fee for this service and maintain an expected fixed overhead for the two pharmacies. The Center is arranging for a faculty team to study the feasibility of the proposed service and develop a fee schedule as it relates to expected markets.

The client needed market information for downtown Charleston, WV to help pre-lease space in a proposed retail facility. The Center was able to readily assist the client providing the necessary, previously compiled, current market data.

A group of area Chamber of Commerce presidents and local economic development directors requested the Center to research and compile a tri-state regional profile to be used for recruitment purposes. The Center has completed the text of the profile and is working with the group on the design and printing of the document. It is felt, by the group, that the profile will be an asset in the recruitment of business and industry into the area.

The client requested market and demographic information for the Huntington and Charleston, WV areas. Average land, building, and lease cost were also required to conduct a preliminary study concerning the location of a proposed fast food restaurant into the two areas. The Center was able to quickly respond to the client's needs with minimal research and providing previously compiled data.

The client requested both technical and financial assistance to establish a non-profit textile processing plant to provide employment opportunities for the chronically unemployed, the handicapped, and the veterans. The client had approached a number of agencies and entities for assistance. The Center is working with these various groups to assess their level of participation and to package the proposals as a total project. A total proposed project encompassing all groups will better leverage funds and avoid duplication of efforts.

The City of Huntington, WV has asked that Marshall University through the Center for Regional Progress assist in the research and data collection for the development of a city Business Plan. The Business Plan will establish an economic development strategy and help facilitate economic growth within the City. Faculty and staff have become involved in various aspects of the plan development. The University is currently assisting which the arrangement of meetings with local business and community leaders to solicitate their input into the plan, along with ongoing compilation and research of required data.

The client is interested in establishing a consulting business. The business would offer exercise programs and instruction to local businesses for their employees. The Center is studying the aspects of meshing this project with a fitness evaluation and prescription program currently intact at Marshall University.

The Charleston Renaissance Corporation, a non-profit organization working in cooperation with the City of Charleston, WV and the area business community requested assistance with the development of re-development plans for the three Urban Renewal areas of the city. The Center conducted a preliminary marketing survey of Capitol Street between Virginia and Lee Streets and gathered the information necessary, and developed a long term marketing strategy for the area. The non-profit is charged with the implementation of the re-development plan.

Marshall University's College of Business, in conjunction with EDA and the Center for Regional Progress presented the first annual Global Trade Conference and Exposition. The GTC assisted participants in increasing their individual and collective share of the global market for their own businesses' and the region's economy. New opportunities in exporting were discussed and how to develop strategies, promotions, and techniques of capturing these markets. The conference was composed of ten seminars on a wide range of subjects. The exposition provided regional firms the opportunity to display and promote their export products. In addition to exporters, export intermediaries were present to explain their many services that facilitate exporting. The GTC was a great success and the Center looks forward to sponsoring next years conference.

A small manufacturing company has requested assistance from the Center for Regional Progress. They have a patent to manufacture a ceramic self-watering flower pot. The company has run into some problems and currently needs production space to further develop molds and manufacture additional sample pots. These proto-type pots will be used to market the product to distributors. Without commitments from distributors the company cannot secure a loan which is necessary to re-establish their own production facilities. To address their immediate needs the Center is currently researching the possibility of utilizing university space and equipment for production.

The client requested assistance in preparing a feasibility report for a total care retirement center. The feasibility report is providing the necessary documentation for a Certificate of Need from the State Health Department. If constructed, the retirement center will create an estimated 200 new service jobs in the Huntington/Cabell County area.

The Interim Commission on Employment Opportunities and Economic Development of the West Virginia State Legislature requested research assistance. Through the EDA University Center program, research was provided the Interim Commission in the following areas: Financial Incentives to Business, Free Enterprise Zones, State Image and Promotion, Export Marketing, and Taxation.

The McDowell County Development Authority contracted with the Center for Regional Progress to prepare an Economic Development Plan for McDowell County. The plan includes a resource inventory, needs assessment, project recommendations and funding alternatives, and an industrial diversification program to offset high unemployment in the coal fields.

The City of Pt. Pleasant contracted with the Center for Regional Progress to prepare a comprehensive Economic Development Strategy/Marketing Plan to promote industrial development, stabilize employment opportunities, and identify employee training needs in Mason County.

As a result of the EDA program, the Center for Regional Progress has been able to assist the Governor's Office of Economic and Community Development in the recruitment of new industry for West Virginia. The most notable example is the information provided in support of West Virginia's bid to become the site of the new General Motors Saturn factory.

The EDA University Center program, in cooperation with the International Trade Commission and the Regent's Center for Education and Research with Industry, has made possible the publication of a WV Export Products Directory. As a result, WV businessmen will have their products represented in foreign trade missions worldwide.

FINN CASPERSEN STATEMENT ON TAX REFORM

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, if my colleagues' mail has been anything like mine lately, they are probably receiving hundreds of letters from individuals and businesses who, though supportive of the concept of tax reform, are opposed to specific aspects of the President's proposal which might hurt them.

In view of this common response, I was greatly impressed to learn that Beneficial Corp., one of the largest financial institutions in the country, is behind President Reagan's plan in spite of the fact that Beneficial's tax liability would increase by about $100 million over 5 years under the proposal. Beneficial's reasons for supporting this tax reform are simple, yet dynamic and farsighted. In the word of Chairman Finn Caspersen:

This adverse impact (of higher Beneficial taxes) would be far outweighed by the positive consequences of tax reform on our customers and thus on the economy and our own business.

Beneficial Corporation and Finn Caspersen should be applauded for having the foresight to remember what so many others seem to have forgotten: Short-term losses through the elimination of one tax break or another should not color our understanding of the larger benefits resulting from a fairer, simpler tax code, which stimulates long-term economic growth and job creation through lower marginal rates.

It is well worth reading Finn Caspersen's statement on tax reform before the House Ways and Means Committee. I commend this testimony to the attention of my colleagues.

The material follows:

FINN CASPERSEN STATEMENT ON TAX REFORM

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, my name is Finn Caspersen. I am Chairman of the Board and Chief Executive Officer of Beneficial Corporation and I appreciate your invitation to appear before this Committee to express Beneficial Corporation's strong support of your efforts to reform our tax system.

The President's tax proposals, which Secretary of the Treasury Baker delivered to you almost two months ago, launched what many taxpayers, both individuals and businesses alike, hope will be an historic and successful effort to reform the system of taxation in this country. The yardstick upon which the success or failure of the effort will be measured will, no doubt, be the financial health or our country, its citizens and businesses over the next decade and beyond. Will the legislation raise enough revenue to meet our government's needs? Will the taxpayers view the system as "FAIR" and continue to support it on a voluntary basis? Will the system provide a framework that permits strong economic growth? Will it permit our multinational companies to compete profitably abroad?

We believe that the President's tax proposals provide the cornerstone for a tax system that will produce the most positive answers to those questions.

Today, I am here to explain why we at Beneficial believe this to be true. I speak from the perspective of the leading consumer lender in the country. Beneficial, unlike many other financial institutions, is first and foremost a consumer lender. we do not lend to governments or in any significant amounts to large businesses. Our primary mission is to supply credit to the public at a fair and profitable rate. We provide this credit in many forms—through our 1,135 loan offices in 40 states, Canada and the United Kingdom; through the issuance of Visa and MasterCard cards; and through retailers of all kinds throughout the country. We lend both on an unsecured and secured basis. We are the largest second-mortgage lender in the country. At the end of June, we had $5.5 billion of loans outstanding to more than 2.3 million customers. Most of our customers are the American middle class; with household incomes that typically range from $20,000 to $50,000. Beneficial Corporation's stock is traded on the New York Stock Exchange and is owned by more than 26,000 shareholders.

Our reason for supporting tax reform in the form submitted by the President is very simple . . . We believe it will benefit our customers. Most of our customers will pay less taxes and, therefore, have more disposable income to save, spend or invest. This, obviously, will benefit us directly. As Americans become financially healthier, they will be better customers for our services. As Secretary Baker pointed out in his testimony, most taxpayers will pay less taxes and most of our customers, namely those families with between $20,000 and $50,000 of household incomes, will pay 7.2% less taxes.

It will also benefit the general economy. Many economists believe the economic recovery in recent years was led by the willingness of the consumer to spend and invest. If the tax changes result in more disposable income as predicted by Secretary Baker then the scenario could be repeated.

Beneficial supports tax reform even though its corporate income tax payments will increase in the aggregate by $100 million over the next five years, the period being used to measure the revenue impact of the proposal. The reason for this increase in tax payments is twofold: first, the transition rules in the President's proposals moderate the benefit of the rate reduction during the first five years of the changes; and second, Beneficial like many other companies structured its financial affairs and made investments over the past several years with the specific purpose of minimizing its corporate income tax burden. It would probably no longer be prudent or economically viable to make such investments if the tax reform proposals are adopted in their present form.

I would now like to turn to the specific provisions of the President's tax reform proposals upon which we base our support for tax reform for both our customers and the company. Looking first at our customers, the keys words in the Treasury proposal as it applies to individual taxpayers are "fairness and simplicity." The tax system today has become extremely complex and riddled with provisions for special interest groups; it is perceived by the averaged American taxpayer to be unfair. In order for the voluntary nature of our income tax system to survive, it is important that this perception be changed. We believe that fairness will be achieved by adopting the President's proposals that broaden the tax base, lower tax rates, and eliminate special deductions, special tax credits and other preferences.

Simplicity and fairness are inter-related. A tax system that is complicated is perceived as unfair because its interpretation is restricted to those who can afford to employ tax experts. We do not expect Congress to adopt, in total, the President's proposals for tax reform. However, we believe it's important that, when the dust settles, the average American must feel that he is better off as a result of these changes and, specifically, that his tax burden has been reduced. If this objective is accomplished, and only if this objective is accomplished, will tax reform achieve its stated goals of fairness and simplicity.

The President's tax reform proposals address two specific deductions that are very important to our customers. They are the home mortgage interest deduction and deductibility of consumer interest. We applaud the Administration for stating as one of the tax reform goals "the home mortgage interest deduction should not be jeopardized." This was enumerated by the President in his State of the Union Address and once again by Secretary Baker before this committee. The President's tax reform proposals permit taxpayers to deduct all of the interest on loans secured on their primary residence. This is of paramount importance to our customers if they are to enjoy the benefits of the American dream of home ownership.

Some have advocated that the home mortgage interest deduction should be limited to the mortgage incurred at the time the house was purchased. We strongly disagree. Implicit in the American dream of home ownership is to one day recognize the increased value in the equity in one's home. Refinancings and second mortgages help middle-class Americans unlock that equity without having to sell their family homes. They are able to finance college educations, pay medical bills, make home improvements or, generally, just improve the quality of their lives. Furthermore, to try to condition the deductibility of interest on the basis of the form of the loan or the use of the proceeds would be inconsistent with tax simplification and would be difficult to enforce and administer.

The President's tax reform proposal further provides that interest expense other than that associated with indebtedness on a principal residence will be deductible up to $5,000 plus investment income. We agree with Secretary Baker that the majority of families will never be affected by the latter limitation; it would serve primarily to curtail the economics of the tax shelters that higher income taxpayers currently utilize to reduce their tax liabilities. We would recommend, however, that the $5,000 limitation be indexed for inflation so that legislative changes will not be necessary in the future if inflation causes interest rates to rise to the very high levels of just a few years ago.

Turning to the reform of corporate taxation, we are pleased to join General Motors, IBM, 3M, R.J. Reynolds, J.C. Penney and many other distinguished companies who have appeared before this committee to support corporate tax reform around two common principles: the reduction in the corporate income tax rate from 46% to 33% and the introduction of the deduction for dividends paid. Like Beneficial Corporation many of these companies will incur increases in their tax burden under the President's proposals. Like Beneficial, they have decided to support this type of tax reform despite the increased cost. They understand that the benefit to their customer and the fundamental fairness which follows from eliminating special preferences and creating a "level playing field" will insure that decisions are based on market motivation not tax considerations. Overall, the reduced rate will encourage economic growth that will lead to better long-term profits for their corporations.

I encourage this committee to look very closely and put a high burden of proof on those companies and those trade associations that argue for the maintenance of special provisions which tilt the playing field in their favor.

Beneficial pays relatively high dividends to its shareholders. We are thus concerned with the partial deduction for dividends paid in the President's proposal. The current system taxes corporate earnings twice. Once when they are earned by the corporation and again when they are received in the form of dividends to its shareholders. While we favor a deduction higher than 10% for dividends paid, we applaud the introduction of the concept and would agree that it should be tempered with the overall need for revenue neutrality.

In conclusion, I recommend and challenge other financial institutions not to limit their testimony today to the impact of the tax reform proposals on their special tax preferences in the Internal Revenue Code. Instead, they should take a broader look at the significance of the reform proposal to the overall economy and especially at its impact on their customers. Ultimately, it will be the health and success of their customers that will control their future profitability. Let's not let the tax system continue to dictate economic decision making. Let the market and consumers provide such initiative.

The tax system should be fair. It should collect enough revenue to support our country and its citizens but not favor one industry over another or one form of capital allocation over another. I agree with many that have come before this committee that the tax laws are now a form of industrial policy. This should be eliminated to the greatest extent possible, in order to introduce a perception of fairness and neutrality in the revenue system.

The job of this committee and Congress is a very difficult one. No doubt with such sweeping tax reform changes there are risks. The answers will not be known nor can the economic result be known with any high degree of certainty. However, the time has come for tax reform legislation to be enacted that is founded on fairness and simplification not special interests. The time for tax reform is now. I learned from listening to our customers that a consensus of the American people want tax reform. We, at Beneficial, are prepared to help you in this historic undertaking for fundamental tax reform. Thank you.

PLIGHT OF MIGRANT FARMWORKERS, SEPTEMBER 4, 1985

HON. MICKEY LELAND

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, migrant farmworkers are among the most vulnerable workers in our Nation. Low and unstable family income, hazardous working conditions, unsanitary living conditions, the transient nature of their lives, and limited health and social services have led to high infant mortality rates and a lower life expectancy among migrant farmworkers.

The most recent statistics show migrant health to be among the worst in the Nation. The latest available health data for migrant farmworkers notes an infant mortality rate that is two and one-half times the national average. Life expectancy for migrants in 1976 was reported to be 49 years—23 years below the national average.

I would like to commend Molly Moore, Washington Post staff writer, for bringing public attention to findings from a recent report by the U.S. Civil Rights Commission on migrant farmworkers. Her excellent article describes the deplorable and unsanitary living conditions of the migrant farmworker families who harvest the crops on the eastern shore of Virginia.

I am submitting Ms. Moore's article below in hopes that it will awaken our concern for the 2.7 million migrant farmworkers whose labor contributes to making ours the greatest agricultural nation in the world.

VIRGINIA WEIGHS MIGRANT WORKERS' PLIGHT: FEDERAL REPORT SAYS DELMARVA CAMPS AMONG NATION'S WORST

(By Molly Moore)

RICHMOND, August 28.—Virginia Gov. Charles S. Robb's administration, spurred by a civil rights report that said conditions for migrant farmworkers in the state are among the worst in the nation, is proposing sweeping changes to improve migrant labor camps and tighten enforcement of laws protecting the workers.

The administration, taking unusual action for a bureaucracy that long has given migrant problems a low priority, has been conducting its own unannounced investigation of conditions in the state's remote Eastern Shore farmlands. Top ranking officials, who say they have found migrant workers living in housing unfit for humans, said today they will submit their final proposals to Robb within the next month.

"Some say that what's in the [Civil Rights] report is mostly horror stories," said Virginia Secretary of Commerce Betty J. Diener, who donned a pair of old trousers and joined migrant workers picking tomatoes during the investigation. "But they're not untrue horror stories."

The study that alarmed Diener and other Robb administration officials came earlier this summer from the Virginia Advisory Committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. The report, which the Reagan administration withheld for two years, concluded that the plight of migrant farm workers on the Delmarva Peninsula—a poverty-ridden finger of flat marshland between the Chesapeake Bay and the Atlantic Ocean—has improved little since the Great Depression and that conditions in Virginia were "possibly the worst in the nation."

"I was fairly shocked," said Diener, who has earned a reputation as an activist in a conservative state government. "I called all the agency heads together . . . The report was saying the conditions were the worst in the United States. Why didn't I know about this? We went over there in a hurry."

Virginia officials say their own findings point to major weaknesses in the state's enforcement of health, safety and wage standards for migrant workers. They have discovered that many regulations are not being enforced while some state agencies enforce laws that contradict standards imposed by other agencies.

Their recommendations, still being drafted, are expected to be among the most comprehensive ever proposed by state officials. Some of them, presented publicly for the first time today at a meeting of the state Migrant and Seasonal Farmworkers Commission, include:

Proposals that the state, for the first time, provide funds, grants or loans to farmers for improving migrant labor housing.

A policy-making commission made up of cabinet-level administrators that would coordinate regulations governing migrant workers and attempt to untangle the sometimes conflicting mass of state laws.

Stricter enforcement of health, safety and wage standards.

Improved coordination among numerous agencies providing social services such as food stamps, medical care and education. Officials say they found that migrant workers frequently are victimized by bureaucratic red tape and lose valuable services that government should provide.

State officials say that their findings verify the conditions cited in the federal report, which was prepared in 1982. In many instances, that report was scathing:

"Migrant housing on Virginia's Eastern Shore is deplorable with housing structures ranging from chicken houses to barns," it states. "Commonly cited problems include mosquito infestation, overflowing privies and septic tanks, lack of hot water for bathing, rotten ceilings and roofs, and walls with holes."

Three years later there are some improvements, but state officials say major problems remain in both Virginia and Maryland. Communities such as Exmore, a small crossroads town, have become refuges for migrants. What officials call "outlaw" labor camps—unlicensed ones that go undetected by state inspectors—are commonplace.

At one such camp on the edge of town, workers recently were sleeping in the carcass of a rusting old bus and other abandoned vehicles. They shared a single, weatherbeaten outdoor privy. Beer cans and trash were strewn across the bare dirt that surrounds the vans and cars.

To the north and a few miles from Crisfield, Md., a town known for its annual crab festival, is the massive Westover labor camp with its rows of ramshackle dormitories. Once a World War II camp for German prisoners of war, Westover has been taken over by Maryland growers and it serves each summer as a temporary home for hundreds of Haitians, Mexicans, blacks and others who work the nearby fields. Families are squeezed into tiny, one-room cubicles and dozens of toddlers play unattended underneath huge pieces of farm equipment and trucks in the barren yards.

In a shabby two-story clapboard house perched on the marshy edge of a bay inlet is a group of migrants from a homeless shelter in New York City. They sleep on filthy mattresses covered by dirt-encrusted blankets. Their few possessions are stashed in plastic garbage bags under sagging cots. Two outhouses, on the edge of a nearby potato field, provide their only sanitary facilities.

Some of the laborers say they are resigned to such housing. "You're lucky if you can make enough to pay to live in an abandoned house," said Wilbert Riley, a migrant worker. He said he spent two weeks in an old vacant house just off Exmore's main street while he worked the cucumber and tomato fields.

While housing may be the most visible problem of the migrant workers, the civil rights report and migrant worker advocacy groups say that wage and labor abuses are rampant. Crew leaders frequently cheat workers and pocket money from their pay that should be funneled into Social Security and other tax payments.

There is, for example, the 63-year-old migrant laborer who has been working from Florida to the Delmarva Peninsula since 1937. A migrant advocacy group discovered recently that Social Security Administration has recorded his total at only $20,332 for his 46 years as a farmworker.

In other cases, lawyers representing migrant workers say many crew leaders routinely avoid paying workers the federal minimum wage of $3.35 an hour by underreporting the number of hours their crews work. That often makes it appear the workers were in the fields for relatively short periods and earned the required wage when they actually worked longer and earned far less than they should have.

Few of the numerous federal and state laws imposed during the past decade to protect migrant workers are being enforced, some officials say. Virginia officials say agencies that do attempt to enforce them frequently find the regulations so riddled with loopholes that violations often go uncorrected.

"Migrant workers are just falling between the cracks of every jurisdiction where they work," said Wanda Hoffman, Virginia representative to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights.

Each summer as many as 8,000 laborers and family members migrate to the Eastern Shore, following the harvest seasons into the tomato, potato, watermelon and pepper fields of the Delmarva. While thousands of summer tourists drive U.S. Rte. 13, the Coastal Highway, most remain oblivious to the dozens of labor camps hidden behind the miles of lush groves of hardwood trees.

Although states are required to regulate the camps, Virginia officials concede they don't know how many of the camps exist, much less have an accurate count of the number of migrant workers in the state. Of the camps that are licensed by state governments as migrant housing, officials estimate that at least one-third of the known facilities are substandard.

A "Guide for Serving Migrant Farmworkers" used by Virginia agencies, points to the problem. "With a bit of initiative and inquisitiveness, it should be possible to ferret out many other locations throughout Virginia where migrants are housed," it says.

Officials say they depend on word-of-mouth reports from various farmworker advocacy groups for information about migrants. This summer Virginia officials say they issued permits for only about half of the 130 migrant labor camps on the Eastern Shore that were reported to them by Delmarva Rural Ministries. The group is a private, federally funded organization that provides health care for migrant workers.

Even when camps are located, Virginia officials say laws regulating them are so lax that the most basic health and safety regulations often cannot be enforced. Virginia law requires only camps housing at least 11 workers to be licensed by and subject to state regulations.

"We might get a report that a camp has 15 people and when we go there we find only nine or 10," said Dr. James B. Kenley, Virginia State Health Commissioner. "They play the numbers game on us."

During one year, despite widespread reports of health and safety violations in the camps in Maryland, only one labor camp was refused a permit to operate. Even then, it was allowed to remain open without the required permit, according to the federal report.

State officials in Maryland and Virginia say they have the authority to cite camps for violations, but have no power to shut them if operators refuse to comply with the laws.

Virginia places strict regulations on camps that house farm workers recruited through the Virginia Employment Commission. The result is that very few crew leaders or growers use the state's job service, thus avoiding compliance with the standards.

Farmworker advocacy groups estimate that about one in four of Virginia's migrant labor camps are operating with serious violations of health and safety codes. Gregory Schell, who heads the Legal Aid Bureau that covers the Delmarva Peninsula, calls that an improvement over the past season when he estimated more than 75 percent of the camps were severely deficient.

Virginia state officials credit Legal Aid Services with forcing improvements through a summertime blitz of complaints last year that prompted the Department of Labor to conduct about 100 investigations of migrant camps. The department imposed $67,875 in civil penalties on growers, but a spokesman said it has collected less than a third of that amount.

While many growers upgraded their housing this year, "some still were really not fit for human beings to live in," said Eva S. Teig, Virginia's Commissioner of Labor and Industry. Teig, a Robb appointee and coordinator of Virginia investigation.

Some state officials say that they are hampered because many local governments in the poverty-stricken Delmarva farmlands have no housing codes or health standards. The two Virginia counties on the southern end of the peninsula are among the poorest in the state.

"They say it's hard to enforce the labor camp housing when local housing is sometimes worse," said Mary Ellen Beaver, a Legal Services field worker. "That's no excuse."

Law enforcement problems are compounded by the high visibility of outsiders on the Shore. "As soon as you go across the bridge [from Virginia Beach] with a state seal on your car, things seem to disappear," said Civil Rights representative Hoffman. "Obviously you're going be noticed as an outsider, and in plenty of time."

Until recent years, federal and state laws held crew leaders—migrants themselves who lead the bands of laborers—responsible for complying with housing and wage regulations. Because officials said it was virtually impossible to enforce those laws, new requirements hold both the crew leader and the farm owner responsible as "joint employers."

That has angered farmers who are facing their own economic problems.

"The farmers are very, very bitter about being made corresponsible for crew leaders," said Philip McCaleb, chairman of the Virginia Migrant and Seasonal Farm Workers Commission, a panel appointed by the governor and charged with monitoring the conditions of migrant workers. "The [law] has been put in strictly because the enforcement agencies and bureaucrat have been unable to enforce rules and regulations against the crew leaders. They're being punished because bureaucrats can't do the enforcement jobs against the people that had been responsible."

Schell, who has taken several growers to court over failure to pay their migrant laborers, says the new system has forced many crew leaders to adhere more stringently to federal wage and tax requirements. Still, Schell estimates that as many as 40 percent of all migrant workers on the Shore are being cheated on their wages and tax payments.

"There has been long-standing flaunting of the law," said Schell.

It was the reluctance of federal officials to act on their own report that partially spurred Virginia officials to chart their own plans to deal with some of the breakdowns in the state government that have contributed to the problems facing migrants.

"What you end up with is a terribly complex problem that no one seems to be able to get a handle on in unison," said Labor Commissioner Teig.

RESPONSE FROM AMBASSADOR ON MEXICAN ELECTIONS

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, before our recess I submitted an editorial from the Washington Post for inclusion in this RECORD which discussed abuses of the democratic process in the recent Mexican election. Shortly thereafter, I received a letter from the Mexican Ambassador, differing with my views, and submitting two other editorials critical of Mexican elections along with his rebuttal to those editorials. He expressed the view that it would be in the interest of free debate for this packet of material also to be added in the RECORD. I agree because I continue to believe that the Mexican Government was untrue to democratic principles in the way in which it allowed the recent elections to be conducted. And I therefore ask that my correspondence with the Mexican Ambassador as well as the editorials from the New York Times and the Wall Street Journal and the Mexican Ambassador's answer to those editorials be printed here.

EMBAJADA DE MEXICO,
Washington, August 5, 1985.

Hon. BARNEY FRANK,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. FRANK: I read with interest your statement at the House of Representatives (July 31, 1985) asking to incorporate in the Congressional Records the editorial article of the Washington Post "Elections, Mexican Style", due to your concerns about the violations of human rights of minorities, wherever they may happen.

As your sources of information on these matters do not limit themselves to just one newspaper, I am enclosing two more editorials (of The Wall Street Journal and The New York Times) related to the same issue, as well as the public answers that I gave to their allegations.

I am sure that your sense of justice and fairness will foster the inclusion in the Congressional Records of these four Documents too.

On the other hand I suppose that you agree with me on the fact that irregularities and violations are part of the price of insisting in a democratic electoral process within a political system of individual freedom. Even in such a developed country like the United States and according to recent front page articles of The New York Times—which I am also enclosing—there are some suspicions and complaints of electoral fraud notwithstanding the highly sophisticated computarized systems at their disposal.

Furthermore, to complain about violations in an electoral process—as I have stated in both my letters to The Wall Street Journal and The New York Times—is an effective way of drawing sympathy from many people not sufficiently informed towards losing parties that did not reach the success they hoped for.

Finally, and due to your interest on the recent Mexican elections, I am also gladly enclosing a copy of our press-release 14/85 from July 24th, which points out their main results and gives a brief explanation of the Mexican Electoral System.

With my best regards, I remain

Cordially yours,

JORGE ESPINOSA DE LOS REYES,
Ambassador.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, August 13, 1985.

Ambassador JORGE ESPINOSA DE LOS REYES,
Embassy of Mexico,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. AMBASSADOR: I appreciate the time you took to respond to my public criticisms of the way in which the recent Mexican elections were conducted. I have read the letters to the editor you sent to the New York Times and Wall Street Journal, as well as your letter to me. Nowhere in any of these documents do I find any rebuttal of the very specific, first-hand reports of electoral abuse which I have read in respected American newspapers of varying political opinions. I continue to believe that the recent elections in Mexico were marred by abuses which are inconsistent with a respect for democracy.

I agree with you that "irregularities and violations" are present in many electoral systems. But there is a critical difference between the Mexican experience, as reported in a number of dispatches which I find credible and well documented, and experiences in other countries, including the United States. Here, the role of the federal government has been to combat these irregularities and to try to abolish them. My sense from what I have read and heard—strengthened by the absence of any rebuttal—is that the Mexican government was unwilling to take any firm action against these abuses, and may indeed have encouraged some of them. The fact that there are possible abuses in computer voting, as reported recently in the New York Times, in no way is analogous to what is reported to have happened in Mexico. Had there been a pattern of such abuses in the recent elections in the United States, or in other democratic nations, it would have been relevant for you to cite those. The fact that there are potentials for abuse in computer voting in no way is comparable to the officially sanctioned abuses that appear to have occurred in Mexico.

At your request, I will be submitting to the Congressional Record when we reconvene the two editorials mentioned, as well as your rebuttals to them, and I believe it would be helpful if I included this correspondence as well.

BARNEY FRANK.

STILL ONE-PARTY MEXICO

Mexico's electoral system, as again displayed this week, is an undemocratic anomaly. Citizens may vote for parties of their choice but only one of them, the Institutional Revolutionary Party, is allowed to win. This puts Mexico in the uncomfortable company of Chile, Haiti, Paraguay, Cuba and Nicaragua—the other Latin Governments that permit no significant opposition. That is odd company for a society long associated with the cause of Latin American democracy.

Why Mexicans put up with this anomaly is something of a riddle. They have largely surrendered their political life to the electoral machine of the Institutional Revolutionary Party, or P.R.I. For 56 years they have permitted it to elect every President, every state governor, most mayors and the overwhelming majority of each national Congress.

The party used to boast, with some justice, that it repaid this trust by substituting stability, liberty and economic development for the pre-revolutionary upheaval and decline. But those gains have long since been absorbed. Modern Mexico is an increasingly urban, industrial and complex society that should not have to suffer monopoly rule. The unofficial election results from this week's balloting suggest a desire for change. But they also suggest that the desire will continue to be frustrated.

The National Action Party was thought to have a shot at one or two state governorships in northern Mexico. To beat back the challenge the P.R.I. used all its weapons, from the open flaunting of patronage to instances of apparently outright fraud. Reports accumulate about absent poll watchers, suspicious voter lists, missing ballot boxes, taxis full of uncounted ballots, subtotals reported in implausibly round numbers.

Yet despite these obstacles, the National Action Party may have captured an unprecedented number of congressional seats—it claims 16 of the 300 directly contested seats. In the last Congress the P.R.I. held 299.

The P.R.I.'s component units are theoretically providing indirect representation for groups of workers, peasants and other population sectors. But it has become mainly a permanent bureaucracy, governing through patronage and riddled with corruption clear to the top. Mexico preaches something better, and deserves it.

[From the New York Times, July 27, 1985]

IN DEFENSE OF MEXICO'S MAJORITY

To the Editor:

"Still One-Party Mexico" (editorial, July 13) is biased since, among other not very objective comments, it asserts that although "citizens may vote for parties of their choice, only one of them, the P.R.I., is allowed to win."

In this regard, one may ask: Allowed by whom? Elections in Mexico are supervised by a federal electoral commission and by state electoral commissions, all of which include representatives from all of the nine officially registered parties. In the event of a properly documented complaint, the party that considers that its interests have been negatively affected by the majority vote of the corresponding commission can appeal its case to the Supreme Court of Justice or High State Courts of Justice.

To complain of irregularities in the electoral process is a political artifice frequently used in many countries by the losing parties, whatever their ideology, because it is an effective way of drawing sympathy from many people not sufficiently informed.

The not very objective comments by many journalists, and their obvious interest in reporting sensational events, have fostered publication of articles showing a profound lack of understanding of Mexican political realities, primarily based on rumors and complaints—which were only to be expected—from parties that did not achieve the success they hoped for.

Moreover, the editorial concludes with the patronizing assertion that "Mexico preaches something better, and deserves it." This is a generalization valid for all countries since, in one way or another, all nations seek to improve within their own scale of values and cultural models.

It is important to point out that new political leaders have been elected by Mexico in each of its electoral proceedings; this has undeniably been the continued decision of the majority of Mexicans and of Mexicans only.

Most of the voters believe that their legitimate popular representatives have gradually promoted the country's development and maintained domestic and international peace for several decades, notwithstanding the crises and hardships that Mexico, like even already industrialized countries, has faced throughout its long process of development.

JORGE ESPINOSA DE LOS REYES,
Ambassador of Mexico.

[From the Wall Street Journal, July 12, 1985]

MEXICAN DEBACLE

It is time for Mexico's responsible leaders as well as the country's friends outside to sit down and do some serious stock-taking. Mexico is a troubled nation, a fact made plain by last weekend's midterm elections. It is not merely that the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI) practiced some ballot-box fraud. As the nearby Americas column by Journal reporter Steve Frazier makes clear, PRI's behavior in many Mexican polling places was so unabashedly brazen and unapologetic as to turn the Mexican elections into a pathetic event.

The days leading up to the elections were full of promise. A serious and historically unprecedented challenge to PRI's hegemony by the National Action Party (PAN) held the prospect of giving birth to a two-party system, or at least some serious political competition, in Mexico. For that reason, observers and friends of Mexico were watching the election with extraordinary interest. President Miguel de la Madrid must be personally embarrassed at being unable to redeem his promise of honest elections. They were instead a travesty. No doubt many officials in Mexico's current government will take offense at the harshness of this assessment. But Mexicans should understand that this criticism is born of concern and interest in their future.

The affairs and relationships of the world's nations are becoming increasingly integrated, and much of this has to do with expanding world trade. Many less developed nations, often in Asia, are exercising their comparative advantage aggressively, driving world markets forward and thereby improving the economic well-being of all actively participating nations. Because of their size or historical importance, certain countries are regarded as natural, potential leaders in this process. A partial list would include India, China, Brazil and most certainly Mexico, which in addition shares a 2,000-mile border with the U.S.

It is not in the interest of the developing world or of the U.S. in particular to have a nation of such enormous potential as Mexico giving strong evidence that when the train of history pulls toward the 21st century, Mexico won't be on it. While its intense nationalism is understandable historically, Mexico's political future is inevitably bound up with the political and economic system of its large northern neighbor. Put precisely, this means that while Mexico will properly develop within the framework of its own national and cultural institutions, there is little chance of prosperity spreading to all Mexicans without the creation of two critical factors—political and economic freedom. We do not see how the Mexican governing institutions can escape from either, as PRI attempted to do in last weekend's elections.

Though it's true that Mexico has been ruled by a single party for most of the century, it is no Cuba. People speak, move and publish freely in Mexico. The country is developing an educated middle class. Mexico's admirable system of personal freedom has, in short, created a large population of smart, opinionated people. This explains why an opposition party like PAN has come into existence; it's hardly surprising that progress and modernization would impinge on PRI's closed system of political and economic rewards.

PRI and the Mexican government can try to adapt to this healthy political development, as President de la Madrid sometimes has. Or they can try to kill it, as PRI did last weekend in Nuevo Leon and Sonora. But efforts to prop up such an increasingly artificial political system have serious economic implications. While many of Mexico's most motivated workers surge into the U.S, Mr. de la Madrid is left with a politically dispirited and cynical population to respond to his government's efforts at economic reform. And when a party system is willing to endure international obloquy to steal elections, it will scarcely be likely to attract needed foreign capital. More important, it will not be able to offer the opportunities to being back the capital its own citizens have moved abroad.

We don't mean to underestimate the difficulty Mr. de la Madrid and his associates face in joining Mexico to the modern world economy. But as part of the process, Mexico has to recognize its own importance. It is far too crucial a nation to escape having its politics scrutinized by the rest of the participants in an increasingly integrated world. We wish the best of luck to Mexico in general and Mr. de la Madrid in particular, but last weekend's elections must be marked down as a victory for the past.

[From the Wall Street Journal, July 25, 1985]

MEXICO'S ELECTION RESULTS

Your July 12 editorial "Mexican Debacle," regarding the recent elections in Mexico, can hardly be considered objective. One gets the impression that you either had a vested interest in the success of the conservative political party PAN or, because of the predictions and information received from observers prior to the election, felt your expectations frustrated and now wish to justify mistakes in evaluation and analysis. These observers seem not to have taken into account that the majority of the independent surveys conducted before the election forecast a general success for the PRI. If this is the case, instead of unleashing bitter criticism against the Mexican system, the editorial should deal with your own sources of information.

It would be interesting to know whether your reaction would have been the same if, instead of the conservative PAN, it had been a socialist party threatening to take the victory from the PRI, and complaining about "flagrant" violations of the electoral process. Complaining of the results of an election is a political tool—perhaps not a very elegant one, but an effective way of drawing sympathy from many people not sufficiently informed.

A country and its political system cannot be judged by one electoral campaign. To be able to understand and to analyze that country's electoral processes in an objective manner, it is necessary to study its history and political movements in depth. Superficial analysis may be the reason why the article suggests that a bi-party system is the only legitimate form of democracy. To deny the Mexican multiparty system is to deny right of expression and political participation to other ideologies and ways of living equally respectable.

On the other hand the editiorial is unfair to the Mexican nation in saying that "many of Mexico's most motivated workers surge into the U.S.," while "Mr. de la Madrid is left with a politically dispirited and cynical population." However, pretending to be balanced, the article contradicts itself in another paragraph, indicating with patronizing attitude that "Mexico's admirable system of personal freedom has, in short, created a large population of smart, opinionated people."

Ambassador of Mexico.

PRAYER ON THE DEATH OF APARTHEID

HON. WALTER E. FAUNTROY

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, on August 12, 1985, a march and demonstration was held in protest against the Government of South Africa's practice of apartheid. During the event, Rabbi Andrew Baker, Washington, DC, director of the American Jewish Committee, delivered a moving statement and prayer which illuminated the moral issue involved in the Free South Africa Movement. I present the text of the prayer for the benefit of my colleagues:

YITGADAL V'YITKADASH SHEMAI RABAH . . .

The Kaddish is well-known as the traditional Jewish prayer recited at times of mourning. When word of a death is first heard, when people have assembled for funerals, when the anniversaries of those losses are marked, we say Kaddish.

It is ironic, then, that the Kaddish, this special prayer for the dead, nowhere in its contents mentions death. Ironic, but fitting. For it acknowledges a truth we all know but seldom admit: The dead are at peace; funerals are for those who must continue. They are the ones who now need comforting. They are the ones who now need strength. They are the ones who now need God's blessing. They are the ones who now need our help.

Everyone knows that Apartheid is evil. It requires no special study, no complex analysis. But until recently it has been a problem easy to ignore. After all, it's on a distant part of the globe, complicated by a strategic location, essential minerals, an important anti-Communist ally, and the like. This sort of thing is best left to diplomats and professionals, we are told. We all know there's nothing worse than a few amateurs trying to mix morality and international politics. But Apartheid is evil, and it can no longer be ignored. These coffins arrayed below are here to tell us that.

Ecclesiastes teaches us that, "The dust returns to the earth as it was; and the spirit returns to God who gave it." But the memories are for us, the living.

And we do have memories now. We may never have known any of the lives whose names are stenciled on these boxes. But the evening news and the daily papers are bringing us graphic images of lives very much like theirs, and of deaths very much like theirs. Youngsters at a time in their lives when the future should look brightest, swept up instead by a wave of frustration and hopelessness. Civil rights workers and anti-Apartheid demonstrators, brought down by assassins' bullets or the random firings of uniformed police. And those caught in the middle—Asians and "coloreds" with only a little more priviledge and a little less misery, and homeland officials and informers and collaborators, too—who must also be counted as victims of the state-sponsored evil. These are the memories we now recall, the hundreds of deaths that have already occurred and the hundreds more that we know are still to come.

"I lift up my eyes to the mountains. From where will my help come? My help will come from the Lord, the maker of heaven and earth." All of our religious traditions share the common belief that there is a God of justice, the creator of all, and that, in time and with our help, the peace and order that reigns in the heavens will descend on all of us as well. There is much for us to do, much we will need to accompany our prayers. There is much for us to do, if a system founded on injustice is to be overturned. There is much for us to do, if peace and harmony are to descend on that distant, troubled land. There is much for us to do, if the wickedness of Apartheid is to be erased from this earth.

We are gathered today to mourn the victims of that wickedness, and to insure that their deaths will have meaning. The authors of the Talmud wrote that, "The righteous are called 'living' even when they are dead, and the wicked are called 'dead' even when they are living."

Those coffins below are nothing but cardboard boxes, visible tokens for us who have assembled at this symbolic funeral. But it is the evil of Apartheid and its supporters that today we call dead. True, we are gathered at a funeral, but it is Apartheid and not its victims that we have come to bury. The living God reminds us that our place—the place of America, its government and its leaders—must be with the victims.

Baruch Ata Adonai, Dayan Haemet.

Praised are you, O Lord, the judge of truth."

OPPOSE CONRAIL TAKEOVER

HON. CARROLL HUBBARD, JR.

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, I received a letter from one of my constituents, B.J. Goodwin of Fulton, KY, which I believe might be of interest to my colleagues. B.J. Goodwin is general foreman of Illinois Central Gulf Railroad at Fulton and is strongly opposed to a Conrail takeover by Norfolk Southern Corp.

I hope my colleagues will take the time to read his comments about smaller, class I railroads—such as Illinois Central—and the need to preserve the railroad industry in the best interests of the Federal Government, shippers and the consumers in our country.

The letter to me from B.J. Goodwin is as follows:

FULTON, KY,
July 9, 1985.

Hon. CARROLL HUBBARD, JR.,
U.S. House of Representatives, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN HUBBARD: I am writing to you to solicit your support in opposition to a Conrail takeover by the Norfolk Southern Corporation, House Bill H.R. 1449. I believe a Conrail sale should be a public offering of stock. If this is impossible, I believe a non-railroad buyer would be the only way to preserve competition.

Over the last 10 years increased concentration of the railroad industry into larger rail systems with their ability to divert traffic from smaller, Class I railroads such as my line, the ICG, has been a significant factor requiring us to reduce our size and the number of employees.

Please support my belief and the hopes of other ICG employees and oppose the Conrail sale to the Norfolk Southern. We believe the sale to a non-railroad buyer would be in the best interests of the government, the shippers and the consumers in the northeast, midwest and southeast. I understand the unions also oppose a Norfolk Southern takeover of Conrail.

Sincerely,

ILLINOIS CENTRAL GULF RAILROAD,
B.J. GOODWIN,
General Foreman.

LEGISLATION TO FACILITATE TRADE AND TOURISM

HON. CHARLES E. SCHUMER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to facilitate trade and tourism between the United States and Canada by allowing Canadian bus drivers to enter the United States on appropriate visas. This legislation will correct an unintended inequity in our immigration laws that allows airline and ship crews to stop in the United States in the course of their business but does not allow the same privilege to motor coach drivers. My bill, which has also been introduced by Senators DECONCINI, LEAHY, and D'AMATO in the other body, would bring bus drivers under the same immigration provisions as ship and airplane crews.

Because of the current defect in the immigration laws, travelers in the Northeastern United States, particularly in New York, face the threat of a disruption in bus service. In recent years, Greyhound Bus drivers on routes that service points in both Canada and the United States have had trouble obtaining visas to drive their routes. Indeed, since 1983, these drivers have only been allowed to work under "emergency parole status," which will expire without chance for renewal in 1986.

Without this legislation, Greyhound will be forced to suspend its service between Canada and the Northeastern United States because it will no longer be able to hire Canadian drivers. Moreover, if the company must discontinue international service, it will be forced to discontinue several domestic service routes as well, because they are not profitable without the international component. The company has investigated all other alternatives—such as changing drivers at the border and using U.S. drivers for service from Montreal—but none are economically or logistically feasible.

This change in law will not adversely affect U.S. jobs. Indeed, it will preserve some, since jobs filled by U.S. citizens would be lost if Greyhound were forced to discontinue these routes. The bill has the support of both Greyhound and the drivers' union. I hope my colleagues will join me in support of this effort to preserve jobs and promote commerce between the United States and Canada.

I insert the text of the bill in the RECORD:

H.R. 3236

A bill to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to provide for the temporary admission to the United States of the operators of motor common carriers of passengers

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 101(a)(10) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(10)) is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: "or, for the purposes of paragraph (15)(D) of this section and sections 245, 252, and 257, a person serving as an operator of a motor common carrier of passengers".

(b) Section 101(a)(15)(D) of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(15)(D)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(i)" after "as such"; and

(2) by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", or (ii) as an operator of a motor common carrier of passengers engaged in regular route transport across an international boundary who intends (I) to travel to his destination in the United States with intermittent stops as prescribed by the schedule established by the carrier, (II) to remain in the United States temporarily and solely in pursuit of his employment as an operator of such a carrier, and (III) to depart from the United States with the carrier on which he arrived or some other motor common carrier of passengers".

(c)(1) Section 252 of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1282) is amended by inserting "or stay" after "to land" each place it appears.

(2) Section 252 of such Act is further amended—

(A) in subsection (a)(1), by inserting after "port" the following: "and the period of time during which the motor common carrier of passengers remains in the United States in accordance with the schedule established by the carrier"; and

(B) in subsection (a)(2) and in subsection (b), by striking out "or aircraft" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof ", aircraft or motor common carrier".

(d) Section 257 of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1287) is amended by striking out "or aircraft" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof ", aircraft, or motor common carrier".

REV. JERRY FALWELL AND SOUTH AFRICA

HON. LOUIS STOKES

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Speaker, Rev. Jerry Falwell, leader of the Moral Majority, has let America and the world know just where he stands on the preeminent moral issue of our day—apartheid in South Africa. Jerry Falwell is not on the side of justice. He is not on the side of morality.

Instead, Rev. Jerry Falwell is on the side of the immoral, racist, and repressive South African Government. In effect, he is a supporter of apartheid.

During a recent trip to South Africa, the man regarded as a key religious leader in America, lent his support to one of the most unchristian and immoral governments in the world—South Africa. Jerry Falwell stated that he supported the token reforms the Botha government has announced. Then, this so-called religious leader labeled his religious brother, Nobel Peace Prize winner Bishop Desmond Tutu, a "phony." Finally, Falwell announced his personal crusade to benefit the minority run Pretoria government. He is launching a $1 million public relations campaign to encourage American investments in South Africa.

Mr. Speaker, America and the religious community now know just where Jerry Falwell stands. On the issue of South Africa, he is not on the side of justice and righteousness. Rather, he stands on the side of immorality and injustice.

We now must question how a man of God could take such a warped position in the midst of the shocking facts. In South Africa, 24 million blacks live under the domination of 5 million whites. The majority has been relegated to segregated and undesirable homelands which comprise only 10 percent of the land. Black South Africans are victimized daily by a host of Government-imposed economic, social, and political discriminatory practices. As the impatience of black South Africans to apartheid and the Government's heavy-handed retaliatory actions grow, the death toll and arrests mount.

Through his recent statements, America's Moral Majority leader stands today with the immoral minority Government in South Africa.

Mr. Speaker, at this time, I would like to insert in the RECORD a recent Cleveland Plain Dealer article on Rev. Jerry Falwell and the South African Government.

[From the Cleveland (OH) Plain Dealer, Aug. 24, 1985]

FALWELL TIPS HIS HAND, AND IT'S ALL THUMBS

(By Darrell Holland)

Paint Jerry Falwell black and send him to South Africa to live.

If that were possible, it would be one way that the leader of the so-called Moral Majority in the United States could begin to understand how bad it really is for blacks living under apartheid.

During a visit this week to South African President P. W. Botha, Falwell revealed his insensitivity to the pain and agony of the 24 million blacks who live under the unjust domination of the 5 million whites in South Africa.

At the very time that Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu, a delegation of leading South African churchmen and a host of other religious leaders from around the world, including Pope John Paul II, condemned South Africa's oppressive racial laws, Falwell said he supported the very limited (but mostly meaningless) racial reforms Botha proposed.

In doing so, Falwell revealed his lack of understanding of the biblical ideal of justice and righteousness.

There is no doubt that the Old Testament prophets, noted for their proclamation of social and economic justice, would roundly condemn legally imposed racial separation such as exists in South Africa.

And, it is indeed difficult to understand how the command of Jesus to love one's enemies, as well as one's neighbors, could be fitted into a system under which blacks are treated as inferior.

"Indeed, how is it that a man of Falwell's supposedly Christian background can support a system that treats his black brothers and sisters as inferior?" asked one American black this week while expressing dismay at Falwell's failure to morally condemn South Africa for its racial policies.

It has been said before that Falwell's brand of Christian fundamentalism is hardly moral and that it does not represent a majority of American Christians, as its name implies.

In regard to his views on South African treatment of blacks, there can be no doubt that his views are not based on Christian morality or ethics.

And in light of the fact that legalized segregation has largely been dismantled in the United States, either by changing laws or by the courts enforcing the Constitution, it seems unlikely that a majority of Americans would support Falwell's misguided views on South Africa.

Support for apartheid from any religious leader, and especially one held in such esteem in the United States as well as in many other nations, is reminiscent of the Christian leaders in Germany who supported the Nazi regime and its murder of Jews, Gypsies and other Europeans.

Morally, it is a disgrace that Falwell endorsed, as news reports said, Botha's analysis that apartheid is only a system of racial and tribal compartmentalization by which South Africa is governed and that apartheid reflects a social reality, not a policy, and that reform is the government's policy.

If apartheid is a mere social policy, then it is one that dictates that most of the blacks remain poor, while whites are wealthier; this forces a majority of blacks to live in so-called black homelands that make up a little more than 10% of the nation's land mass and is the poorest land in the nation.

Apartheid divides families by making it necessary for fathers to leave their homes to seek jobs, forces blacks to carry passbooks wherever they go and makes them liable for jailing if they do not and denies equal education and employment to blacks.

Opposing proposed economic sanctions against South Africa and, in fact, voicing strong support for American companies that continue to do business there, Falwell has revealed a social and moral conscience that operates at somewhere near kindergarten or preschool levels.

Falwell's meddling in South African affairs, especially in such a sensitive area as race relations, poses a danger to the lives of blacks and whites there. Some observers of the South African scene have suggested that the recent attempts by blacks to attain justice and freedom will not be stopped until whites willingly permit blacks full citizenship.

If the white minority does not respond willingly, permitting blacks to become equal participants in the nation's government and social and economic life, then many are predicting a revolution that could turn out to be one of the worst bloodbaths in modern history.

Botha, and most other South African whites, already have displayed a stubborn intransigence against removing or even reforming apartheid.

To have Falwell, to whom South African whites are likely to attribute greater influence than he really has in the United States, appear to endorse Botha's present policies, likely will make South African whites even less willing to remove apartheid.

That could lead to the bloodshed many already believe is inevitable in South Africa. Other church leaders, including Tutu, have pleaded with Botha to attempt to avoid this.

With all the money he collects from his begging for contributions on his religious television broadcasts, it is likely that Falwell's organization could buy a large number of the one-ounce Krugerrand gold coins produced in South Africa.

He said he was going to urge Americans to buy them as a sign of support for South Africa.

"We are going to present our cause," in a million homes through television, Falwell said, to oppose economic sanctions that Congress might enact.

Falwell, who has decried the violation of human rights in Communist nations, apparently believes social injustice is quite correct in South Africa, a nation he described as a friend of the West.

Western friend or not, President Reagan, himself no friend of sanctions, is far more moral in his judgment, made earlier this year, that "apartheid is repugnant."

Falwell is ethically and morally ignorant in his views on South Africa's racial policies.

WESTWAY TRADE-IN DEADLINE SHOULD BE EXTENDED

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing an emergency measure that would extend until December 31 the deadline New York has to "trade in" Federal funds already designated for the Westway highway project for an estimated $1.7 billion in Federal mass transit aid. The current deadline for the trade-in is September 30.

This proposed extension should be viewed as an emergency stop gap measure aimed at protecting the best interests of New York City. It is not designed to either save or kill the Westway project, but rather, it will provide city and State officials the necessary time to fully evaluate whether a trade-in of Federal highway for mass transit dollars is the right course to take.

Last month a Federal judge issued a permanent injunction blocking construction of the proposed 4.2-mile highway that would connect the existing Henry Hudson Parkway with the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel. City and State appeals of that decision, which are now underway, are expected to take the case all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court, a time-consuming process that will certainly extend beyond the current September 30 deadline for trading in the Westway funds for mass transit aid.

The December 31 deadline should be ample time for the Westway trade-in dilemma to be resolved in a fair and thoughtful manner.

Congress approved Federal Interstate Highway assistance for the Westway project in the early 1970's. This authority would allow 90 percent of the cost of highway construction, or about $1.96 billion, to be covered by the Federal Government. Under a 1973 law enacted by Congress, New York could trade in that highway money for about $1.7 billion in Federal mass transit aid.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I insert a recent New York Post article discussing the Westway dilemma in more detail:

[From the New York Post, Aug. 8, 1985]

WESTWAY BOMBSHELL: U.S. JUDGE KILLS $4B SUPERHIGHWAY PROJECT; CUOMO VOWS TO APPEAL

(By Marvin Smilon, Barbara Ross, George Arzt, and Fredric Dicker)

Westway came to a screeching halt yesterday as a federal judge in Manhattan issued a permanent injunction blocking construction of the controversial $4 billion West Side highway.

In a harshly critical 132-page decision, U.S. District Judge Thomas Griesa said Westway is not a highway but a "redevelopment" project—and thus ineligible for billions of dollars in federal highway funds.

Gov. Cuomo said the state would move immediately to appeal the ruling.

"Judge Griesa's decision to block construction of Westway is unfortunate, and we will seek an expedited appeal of his ruling," the governor said.

"We do not believe Judge Griesa will be sustained on appeal."

Mayor Koch said he backed Cuomo's move "100 percent," adding: "I'm not throwing in any towels."

Griesa also labeled "incredible" an Army Corps of Engineers claim that Westway's impact on the Hudson River's striped bass population would be "minor and inconsequential."

Griesa's permanent injunction bars the Corps from giving Westway a vital permit needed to create 200 acres of landfill on the Hudson shore.

He also barred the Federal Highway Administration from paying 90 percent of Westway's bill—estimated at up to $4 billion.

And he blocked New York State from building the highway.

In a clear attempt to conclude the often-bitter, 11-year legal battle, Griesa insisted "two failures to justify the Westway landfill and federal funding for Westway under the applicable legal standards should bring the matter to an end.

"There is simply no legitimate purpose to be served by further proceedings."

Koch said Griesa's decision was, "extremely important" and "would mean the end of the roadway unless the injunction is reversed by a higher court."

The project has inflamed political passions ever since it was first proposed in 1974.

Critics charged that the four-mile, multilane highway on landfill in the Hudson River from the Battery to 42nd Street was a massive boondoggle.

The project also called for 95 acres of park land and 100 acres for commercial development.

Supporters insisted the highway would be a economic boon for the West side, solving traffic problems and creating thousands of jobs.

The city and state now face a Sept. 30 deadline for trading in Westway funds for $1.7 billion in federal mass transit aid.

City officials are trying to get the deadline extended in Congress, where they got an extension once before.

But Koch, while saying it was up to Cuomo to move on a trade-in, insisted that was not "the best option."

Asked if the city would risk missing the deadline in a lengthy appeal, Koch replied: "I'm never going to do anything that I know is stupid. I'm going to do everything I can to protect this city."

When the deadline approaches, Koch said "he would sit down with the governor and the two of us would decide what is in the best interest of the city and state.

"Neither he nor I would ever take an action that would be irrevocable and lose the city an enormous amount of money," Koch said.

Cuomo conceded he would "have to be mindful of the Sept. 30 date" but maintained "It's too early to say how we'll go about it. That's being looked at and studied."

Yesterday's biting ruling was the second blockbuster decision on Westway from Griesa.

In April 1982, he granted a temporary injunction against construction, overturned an earlier landfill permit issued by the Army Corps and ordered the agency to make a new study of the impact of the landfill on Hudson River fish.

The Corps made that supplemental environmental impact statement (SEIS) and reissued the permit in January.

But Greiesa ruled yesterday that SEIS "should have but did not state" that:

"Westway is not needed for transportation purposes."

"Transportation needs can be satisfied by the existing roadway, improved at a cost of $50 million."

"The reason for the Westway landfill project, estimated to cost $2 billion, is redevelopment."

Griesa emphasized that this was the view not just of Westway opponents, but also of Col. Fletcher Griffis, the Corps' district engineer.

Griffis testified during the two-month trial that neither Westway nor the landfill are needed for transportation purposes.

Lawyers for the state also conceded in a post-trial memorandum that Westway is not necessary for transportation.

However, Griesa noted, the environmental impact statement "characterized the project as primarily related to transportation needs" and did not "apprise the public of the positions" subsequently expressed by Griffis in court.

"These are fundamental differences, not trivial ones," the judge said.

He added that Griffis admitted that, had he characterized Westway as a highway project, he could not have granted the landfill permit.

The distinction is important, Griesa maintained, because under law, the Federal Highway Administration is "essentially limited to highway projects" when issuing funds.

On the issue of the fish, Griesa called the findings by Corps scientists "incredible."

He noted that in a fall 1984 SEIS draft, the Corps' biologist found the landfill would have "a significant adverse impact" on the striped bass.

The Hudson spawning area is believed to account for up to half of the East Coast striped bass population.

But six months later, in the final version of the SEIS, the Corps reversed itself, ruling that the impact on fish would be "minor and inconsequential," thus allowing it to grant the permit.

In an attempt to explain the reversal, witnesses took the position that there was no basic change in their conclusion.

"The court finds this position incredible," Griesa said.

He singled out chief biologist William Dovel, who prepared the SEIS, saying his testimony provided "a collection of assertions so irresponsible that it is shocking that the government ever tendered him as a witness.

"It was difficult to understand how the government relied so heavily on his report in their decision to issue the landfill permit," Griesa said.

The judge also noted that Dovel, while working for the Corps, sought funds from environmentalist Laurence Rockefeller to prepare a report on striped bass.

Rockefeller's brother, former Chase Manhattan chairman David Rockefeller, is a chief proponent of the highway.

REAGAN PLAN TAXES NOW ON MONEY YOU GET LATER

HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, as we become deeply involved in the discussion of tax reform, I call to the attention of my colleagues this thoughtful and important commentary. The following editorial by Edward Pendergast, printed in the Boston Herald of July 14, accurately depicts the truth behind one aspect of the Reagan administration's proposal: a program which will inevitably increase, not lower or neutralize, taxes. It is always important to consider the local effects of proposals that will significantly alter national policy. I hope my colleagues will give serious consideration to Mr. Pendergast's observations as we continue to debate the timely issue of tax reform and simplification.

[From the Boston Herald, July 14, 1985]

REAGAN PLAN TAXES NOW ON MONEY YOU GET LATER

(By Edward Pendergast)

With all the talk about tax reform and simplication, President Reagan has insisted that he will not stand for an increase in taxes. At least one of his proposals is in direct contrast to that statement.

The section that relates to cash method of accounting will make any service industry pay increased taxes for its unpaid accounts receivable.

Historically taxes for service companies have been based on their receipt of cash rather than performance of services. This is based on the theory that one is most able to pay taxes when one has received the cash for service rendered. Service companies don't deal in solid, tangible goods, so the income from their services is less assured than wholesalers, retailers or manufacturers.

What a service company does is maintain an inventory, if you could call it that, of the time that has been expended and paid for by the company in the form of payroll for services for which the company has not yet received payment. In other words, you've put the service company in the position of paying out cash for employees to perform a service and paying out taxes for its income before it has collected any cash. Everything is outgo as far as cash is concerned, and no income.

This proposal is unfair and it is only a method of raising additional taxes. If President Reagan can show me that this is not a tax increase for every service company that either has gross receipts in excess of $5 million or needs to show accrual accounting results to creditors in order to obtain credit, then I'll eat my hat. In its usual gibberish there is some statement in the proposed law that says "consideration will be given to taking into account the billing of clients for services in the use of the accrual method." If anybody knows what this means or thinks it is simplification I would be delighted to have them try to explain this to me.

The cash basis of accounting for any company that does not maintain significant inventories has been allowed for 75 years. No one that I have ever heard of has claimed that this is unfair or that is in any way been an abuse as a way to pay taxes. I would like to find out if there is some purpose other than raising taxes.

In fact, even the notion that the proposal might raise additional taxes is somewhat faulty in the long run. The proposal makes the service company that is now reporting on a cash basis accelerate its tax payments so that taxes that might ordinarily be paid next year will have to be paid this year. After the first year or so the federal government will not raise any additional money but the service company will have permanently reduced its operating capital by advancing to Uncle Sam taxes on monies that customers have not yet paid.

To try to make the proposal understandable in a microcosm, think of the young neighborhood child who comes around and mows your lawn. Suppose he comes on Friday and mows your lawn and you promise to pay him his $10 next Friday. What this unfair tax would try to do is to make it so that the young fellow that mows your lawn would have to pay taxes this Friday rather than next Friday when you pay him.

One of the concepts of the tax law has been to tie it into ability to pay. Now the example that I gave you is not of a company large enough to be covered by this law but the principle applies if you wanted to expand this concept, then everybody who is paid in the first week of January for work done in the last week in December, would have to pay a tax as if they had received the money in December. How would you like that and is that fair?

Thanks for the help, Mr. Reagan. You have proposed to make it so that any reasonably sizeable service organization will have to prepare a more complex return, be taxed unfairly and have to slow down its growth so it can pay taxes for income that they have not yet received. This is not so funny for those of us who you bypass completely when you apply your test of simplification, reform and fairness.

TRIBUTE TO JAN AND ALAN SHULMAN

HON. HOWARD L. BERMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding couple in our community, Jan and Alan Shulman. I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring these two tremendous individuals. Each year the Pacific Southwest Region of the Federation of Jewish Men's Clubs presents the coveted Red Yarmulke Humanitarian Award to individuals who have given of themselves for the betterment of the Jewish community and the strengthening of the Jewish family. I am happy to tell my colleagues that this year's deserving recipients of this award are the Shulmans. The humanitarian award will be presented to the Shulmans at a gala dinner dance at Sinai Temple on November 10, 1985.

Alan and Jan are truly model members of our community. Throughout their 32 years of marriage they have always given generously of their time and energy for important causes. Jan served in a number of vice presidential posts for Valley Beth Shalom Synagogue as well as working in many capacities for the Women's League for Conservative Judaism and she served as a member of the Congressional Cabinet of the University of Judaism. She managed to donate her time to these worthy causes while also serving as the vice president of Los Angeles Hebrew High School. Alan, an attorney and CPA working as a partner in a law firm in Century City, also managed to find time to give to many worthwhile causes. Alan served as president of Valley Beth Shalom Synagogue and was later honored as their "Man of the Year." In addition, he served as a member of the board of directors of the University of Judaism and as a member of the Jewish Federation Counsel's Adult Education Commission.

It is my pleasure and sincere honor to join with my colleagues and the Pacific Southwest Region of the Federation of Jewish Men's Clubs to pay tribute to the Shulmans, a truly remarkable couple who have made inestimable contributions to their community.

A SCHOOLGIRL'S HOPE FOR PEACE

HON. JOHN R. McKERNAN, JR.

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. McKERNAN. Mr. Speaker, Samantha Smith and her father, Arthur Smith, perished in a plane crash outside Auburn, ME, early last week. This tragic accident ended the life of a simple Maine schoolgirl who had become a symbol of hopes for peace between the United States and the Soviet Union.

Samantha's fame as a goodwill ambassadress stemmed from her 1982 letter to then Soviet leader Yuri Andropov frankly asking, "Why do you want to conquer the world, or at least our country?" Andropov responded by inviting Samantha to tour the Soviet Union to better understand the Soviet people. During the tour that followed, Samantha charmed both the American and Soviet publics with her frank and innocent questioning of why relations between the two superpowers had to be so distrustful. As she said, "God made the world for us to live together in peace and not to fight."

The thing that made Samantha so endearing was that she kept her heart and mind open to all things. She asked, as only a child can, the very basic questions that we, as adults, often overlook. She leapfrogged the sense of mistrust and hostility that has dominated relations between our nations, and appealed to our basic instincts as people. She didn't accept the adult justifications for the way things were, hoping that "with more people thinking about problems of the world, [I hope that] someday soon we will find the way to world peace."

Though her life was but a short 13 years, Samantha Smith did much to further her belief in the need for peace. She fanned the spark that many of us hold for improved relations between the United States and the Soviet Union; she was a youthful bridge between our two countries, succeeding where many diplomats and endless negotiations have fallen short, opening our eyes and ears to the reality of nuclear war by asking simply: "Please tell me how you are going to help to not have a war."

Samantha Smith had a dream, a hope that some day our two nations would live in peace. It is no small feat that, in her life, this simple schoolgirl raised our expectations that that dream can, in fact, become a reality.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in paying tribute to Samantha Smith, and in sending sincere condolences to Mrs. Jane Smith in Manchester, ME, on the loss of her husband, Arthur, and her daughter Samantha.

WELCOME TO NEWEST MEMBER OF CONGRESS

HON. RONALD D. COLEMAN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join my colleagues today to welcome the newest Member of the House of Representatives, the Honorable JIM CHAPMAN of the First Congressional District of Texas.

If you had believed all of the other side's predictions before the election, JIM CHAPMAN by all accounts should not be here today. He was outspent by a margin of over 2 to 1 by the national Republicans' handpicked candidate, and you would have thought that the administration had relocated the Cabinet in Texarkana by the time election day arrived. When all the ballots were tallied, however, the multimillion dollar RNC campaign had failed, and the people of east Texas had informed the administration what they thought of the largest deficits in American history and the lack of a national trade policy.

Mr. Speaker, JIM CHAPMAN brings to this House a reputation based on hard work, dedication, and responsiveness to the people of east Texas, and I am proud to welcome him here today.

Thank you very much.

COLLEGE OF ST. THOMAS, ST. PAUL SEMINARY, ST. THOMAS ACADEMY A CENTURY OF LEARNING, FAITH AND SERVICE

HON. BRUCE F. VENTO

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, on September 7, 1985, an academic institution in my district will be celebrating its centennial. The college of St. Thomas, along with the St. Paul Seminary, and the St. Thomas Academy have grown over these past 100 years to form a standard of academic excellence within our community and the entire Midwestern region.

Founded by Archbishop John Ireland 100 years ago on September 8, 1885, St. Thomas Aquinas Seminary was intended to prepare young men for the priesthood and to provide other young men with a classical education.

Located on the 60-acre Finn family farm, St. Thomas Aquinas Seminary began that September with 62 students and a faculty of 5 priests. Returning to the St. Thomas campus today, they would be overwhelmed by the changes that have occurred in the past 100 years.

From their common roots, the focus of these institutions have grown and flourished. In 1894, the St. Paul Seminary moved its campus and 65 seminarians and became a separate entity. Today, still located on that same new campus the seminary is preparing 85 ordination candidates and about 100 students in evening courses and programs for service to God and their community. St. Thomas Academy, a junior and senior school, relocated its campus to Mendota Heights in 1965 and now has a strong academic and extracurricular program for 750 students in grades 7 to 12.

The most dramatic change, however, has been at the college of St. Thomas. Incorporated in 1894, the college of St. Thomas has grown to an enrollment of more than 6,200 students, making it the largest private liberal arts college in Minnesota.

As the student enrollment has grown, so has the curriculum expanded at St. Thomas. Originally only a classics department, the college has built upon this solid foundation and developed not only a strong liberal arts program, but also a graduate degree program, a nontraditional student program, and new programs in manufacturing, engineering, business, and software design.

During its 100 years of existence, the college of St. Thomas has suffered setbacks and encountered serious hurdles. But the college has been able to overcome these hurdles through its constant search for new ways to serve the community.

The golden years of St. Thomas have come during the tenure of my friend and current president, Msgr. Terrence Murphy. Under his leadership, the college has expanded its services and has moved to fill a void in our educational community. Among the notable achievements of President Murphy is the decision in 1977 to become a coeducational institution. While St. Paul has an excellent Catholic women's college St. Catherine's, there was no local coeducational Catholic facility available. Today, St. Catherine's remains a strong educational institution and 40 percent of last year's undergraduates at St. Thomas were women.

In the early 1970's there were minimal educational opportunities available for nontraditional students to expand or improve their careers. In 1975, St. Thomas sought to fill this void by creating the new college. In areas such as management and education, St. Thomas is now providing continuing educational opportunities for over 1,300 nontraditional students.

President Monsignor Murphy and the college are not resting on these laurels. New, innovative programs are being developed to meet our community's needs—whether it be religious education, business ethics, engineering, or international-management studies.

Mr. Speaker, the final test of any institution is the final product that it produces. St. Thomas passes that test with flying colors. the graduates of St. Thomas have been a positive force in Minnesota and throughout our country. In medicine, government, business and all other fields, the alumni of St. Thomas have and continue to contribute to the well-being of our society. President Murphy has stated that St. Thomas wants to impart a Christian vision and Christian values to community life by educating people for various walks of life. The goal of St. Thomas is to impart a spiritual message relevant to our society and not something that is limited to Sunday morning. St. Thomas' efforts clearly make this spiritual message alive in the lives of people who are leaders of our community and our society. Throughout its history, St. Thomas has strived to meet those goals.

Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate St. Thomas College, the St. Paul Seminary, and St. Thomas Academy on their 100 years of service, their centennial of service to our community and Nation. They have and will continue to be a vibrant force and a positive asset. At this time, I would like to bring to my colleagues' attention the following commentary on the achievements and developments of St. Thomas College.

[From the Minneapolis Star and Tribune, Sept. 1, 1985]

ST. THOMAS COLLEGE STARTS A NEW CENTURY OF COMMUNITY SERVICE

(By Leonard Inskip)

College presidents sometimes say that after 10 years it's time to move on. At the College of St. Thomas, President Terrence Murphy is in his 20th year, and it's the college that's moving on—to useful new programs for students of varied ages and to valuable new service to the community.

This weekend, for the 101st year, new students are gathering for orientation. Classes start Wednesday. Next Saturday and Sunday, St. Thomas and two related schools will celebrate a shared centennial.

The campus's late-summer serenity, freshly mown lawns and blooming flowers speak of tradition: a Catholic framework for a liberal-arts focus with practical applications.

But tradition is no barrier to change: new graduate programs planned or begun in manufacturing engineering, software design, business communications, international management. Lest those suggest a departure from traditional liberal arts, there will be a new chair in business ethics.

St. Thomas will create new graduate programs to serve St. Paul Seminary students—the result of a partial merger planned by the two institutions. But St. Thomas also will get a Jewish-Christian center this fall headed by a prominent Minneapolis rabbi, Max Shapiro. The college already has several special centers, including business management and religious, economic, community and senior-citizen education.

The college has begun working with Normandale Community College on a program to serve students who complete that school's two-year program. It also has long served nontraditional students—people with full-time careers, for example—by providing graduate business and education programs.

In recent years, St. Thomas has added an Owatonna conference center and a Chaska classroom building; both were gifts. This summer, it opened a Chaska business incubator that has access to St. Thomas programs and faculty. Last year, it discussed with William Mitchell College of Law the possibility of that school joining St. Thomas, but nothing developed. Some St. Thomas trustees have talked of classes in downtown Minneapolis—not likely soon, but a possibility someday.

With about 6,300 students, St. Thomas is Minnesota's largest private college—big enough to start programs like graduate studies in manufacturing engineering, small enough to experiment and move quickly, as it did in setting up international-management studies after a governor's commission recommended such a program. The college has good rapport with business because it learns business's needs and acts on them.

An example: When Gov. Rudy Perpich began promoting engineering, Murphy met with such chief executives as Lewis Lehr of 3M, Edson Spencer of Honeywell and William Norris of Control Data. Eventually, Perpich recommended the unusual step of state help for a new manufacturing engineering program at St. Thomas. The Senate said yes; the House said no. Murphy expects St. Thomas to decide this month to proceed on its own.

Last year, Murphy described engineering as a "window of opportunity" for St. Thomas. He anticipated that society's future emphasis "will be not so much on social welfare programs, but rather on programs that will increase the productivity of the country and thereby provide employment, increase the standard of living, combat inflation, and put us in a strong competitive position in the international markets."

St. Thomas looks for programs that other—mainly the University of Minnesota—aren't providing. Murphy says manufacturing engineering is such a niche. But St. Thomas went beyond a niche when it pioneered evening-class management studies in the 1970s. Then the university had a few hundred traditional daytime students working for masters degrees, Murphy recalls. Now St. Thomas has nearly 1,300 nontraditional students in evening and week-end management classes and the university has about 1,200 such students. "They really took our program," Murphy says, but the result is that "the whole community is better off."

The centennial year will see a new relationship between St. Thomas and the Saint Paul Seminary. Both schools and St. Thomas Academy trace roots to a common beginning on Sept. 8, 1885. The seminary became independent in 1894 and the academy, a junior-senior high school, moved away in 1965.

The college and seminary are working out final details. St. Thomas will educate the seminarians, but the seminary will foster religious-character development. St. Thomas will acquire most of the seminary's nearby 35 acres, opening up long-range possibilities for an expended St. Thomas campus. New religious education can strengthen St. Thomas' ability to train lay people to work as church counselors and administrators as priests become fewer.

St. Thomas is one of the nation's 225 Catholic colleges and universities. Most were started by religious orders. St. Thomas is one of a few started by a diocese. The relationship continues, with Archbishop John Roach chairman of the college's trustees. Seventeen priests from the diocese are among 380 fulltime and parttime faculty members. Murphy as said that St. Thomas wants to "impart a Christian vision and Christian values" to community life "by educating people for various walks of life. If we truly want the Gospel message to be relevant to our society and not something that is relegated to Sunday morning, then we must make it alive in the lives of people who are leaders . . . of our community and our society."

But that does not mean proselytizing students, Murphy says. Rather it means requiring a few religion courses along with more traditional liberal-arts requirements. It means, he says, teachers' appreciation of Judeo-Christian traditions and "scholarly discussion of religious values." At the graduate level, such concern is reflected in a course that emphasizes values and the impact of policy decisions on a community. The new chair on business ethics established by Barbara and David Koch (Graco head and a leader in Twin Cities corporate-responsibility thinking) will strengthen that emphasis.

Catholics constitute about 85 percent of St. Thomas undergraduates, but only 30 percent of the graduate students. That reflects, Murphy says, the abundance and variety of schools serving undergraduates, but the limited graduate-level opportunities to have both classes and careers.

The college is planning what probably will be a $35 million capital drive for endowment, buildings and scholarships. Among scholarship goals: Seek top-flight students who don't qualify for needs-based help but who potentially are society's leaders and who, while in college, can offer leadership in academic achievement.

A campus visitor leaves with two strong impressions: (1) Through its constant search for new ways to serve the community, St. Thomas is a remarkable community asset. (2) Thank goodness that Terrence Murphy, unlike those college presidents who say 10 years in one place is enough, stayed around. The Twin Cities are better for having the school and the man.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, this administration has made it very clear that they oppose any funding of the Economic Development Administration, because of its belief that the Federal Government should not be be involved in economic development projects at the local level. According to the administration, the private sector can provide all the funding necessary for community economic development.

In theory this may be sound thinking, but in practice it just will not wash, especially in light of the present economic realities. Mr. Speaker, I represent a poor district, the poorest in the Nation. And I can assure my colleagues that private investors are not standing in line, ready and willing to fund housing projects, businesses, or to offer technical assistance to community groups. There are investors, and the Bronx is experiencing a resurgence in terms of renovations, new construction and new businesses that have seen the opportunities that exist in the Bronx. However, more often than not some sort of incentive is needed for these investors to put their money in distressed areas. The fact that the Federal Government is behind a project is sometimes the only incentive needed.

Distressed areas have been faced with continued disinvestment. Local banks in the 18th district have a very poor record of home mortgage lending, and it would not stretch the imagination to say their commercial lending is probably not much better. I do not believe this is a situation unique to the Bronx. I do believe that communities faced with the problem of disinvestment need some Federal assistance in order to provide an incentive for investors. That is why I am a cosponsor of the National Development Investment Act. It will provide much needed assistance to areas that need it, areas that have not seen a trace of the much vaunted economic recovery.

TAX HAVENS: THE NEED FOR ACTION

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues an article on tax havens which appeared in the August 29th issue of the Washington Post entitled, "More Americans using Foreign Tax Havens."

Tax haven countries have long been a source of refuge for organized crime and drug profits. But it appears that more and more individual and tax protestors are copying crooks like Robert Vesco and stashing money in tax haven countries. So much for the new patriotism!

The IRS cannot hope to deal with this development through the traditional audit procedure. The purpose of going to these tax haven countries is to hide an audit trail or create such a maze of accounting nonsense that no one can determine the tax properly.

I think we need some new approaches to this problem. I will work to include in this fall's tax reform bill the denial of various tax privileges for countries considered tax havens—foreign tax credits; deductibility of losses, and so forth. But I think that we should also consider a Federal transfer tax on the movement of assets to these tax haven countries. The tax would be paid by the investor and anyone participating in the transfer—communications companies, banks, transportation companies, couriers, and so forth—would be held liable for any unpaid transfer tax.

Tax havens and the manipulators of them are helping destroy confidence and faith in our Nation's tax system. They should be treated like the enemies that they are.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Post, Aug. 29, 1985]

MORE AMERICANS USING FOREIGN TAX HAVENS

(By Howard Kurtz)

A growing number of Americans are using tax havens in such places as the Bahamas, the Cayman Islands and Panama as an illegal means of hiding about $20 billion a year from the Internal Revenue Service, a Senate subcommittee said yesterday.

The panel's report said that narcotics traffickers, who deal in vast amounts of illicit cash, still provide the bulk of U.S. funds laundered through foreign tax havens. But it said its "striking conclusion . . . is that offshore banking accounts are being used by people one might regard as 'average American citizens.' "

The Senate permanent subcommittee on investigations, headed by William V. Roth Jr. (R-Del.), urged the Reagan administration to impose tough sanctions—including limits on direct airline flights—against foreign tax havens that refuse to cooperate with U.S. law enforcement officials.

The United States should deny income tax deductions for losses and expenses incurred in any foreign country that will not negotiate access to its financial records by U.S. investigators, the panel said. Many low-tax foreign havens will not provide such records because they do not recognize tax evasion as a crime.

Banking is a booming industry in small Caribbean nations such as Anguilla, Barbados, and the Turks and Caicos Islands, which have joined such traditional havens as Switzerland and Hong Kong in attracting a flood of foreign capital by adopting strict secrecy laws. The number of banks in Anguilla, for example, jumped from two to nearly 100 in two years.

Such offshore banks have provided a repository for drug smugglers, who use private jets to carry millions of U.S. dollars at a time. But the subcommittee found similar patterns among ordinary citizens, such as a North Dakota farmer who deposited large sums in a bank in the Turks and Caicos Islands.

The report said that unscrupulous shelter promoters "exploit the anti-IRS biases of some of their fellow citizens . . . . These con men persuade susceptible individuals that they can legally avoid taxation by placing their assets in an offshore trust."

A senior IRS official said his agency is conducting 300 criminal investigations of tax shelters, half of them located abroad. He said four cases over the last year each involved more than $100 million in sheltered income.

"We're finding an increase in the blue-collar worker, the middle-income person getting into these shelters," the official said. "You can read the ads in the Wall Street Journal."

In a typical scam, he said, an investor will receive a report showing fictitious commodity losses from a brokerage house in the Cayman Islands. "In many of these situations, there are no commodities being traded," he said, "it's just paper being shuffled."

"The auditor will be given very legitimate-looking documentation. We have no way of going over to those foreign countries to find out what was bought and sold. It's an exercise in futility." He said the IRS must rely on informers and undercover agents to penetrate these shelters.

The subcommittee said the Justice Department's approach to foreign tax havens is "too fragmented" and that information is not shared among law-enforcement authorities.

"The Justice Department did not know what it had even in its own files," a subcommittee investigator said. "The Justice Department uses our list because they never compiled one." He called federal regulators "woefully ignorant on this subject," saying that U.S. bank examiners give low priority to tracking the movement of large amounts of cash.

The Treasury Department fined Crocker National Bank of San Francisco $2.25 million Tuesday for failing to report nearly $4 billion in large cash transactions, most of it suspected drug money funneled through Hong Kong banks. Sixty banks have admitted such reporting violations since February, when the Bank of Boston pleaded guilty to violating the Bank Secrecy Act. Banks have since tripled their reports of large currency transactions.

Stricter reporting would make it more difficult to hide narcotics profits, the Senate investigator said. "Drug smugglers deal in an unbelieveable amount of cash, most of it in small bills," he said. "They've got to launder it, and the easiest and best way to launder it is to take it offshore."

Panama has become a burgeoning financial center. In 1982, the report said, more than $1 billion was funneled through a large Panama bank to Federal Reserve banks in New York and Miami, or four times the amount of such transactions in 1980.

A major reason for this boom is a Panama law allowing secret registered companies. "Anyone holding dirty money in Panama usually has a registered company," the report said. ". . . A registered company can be available within hours. One who walks into the right law firm in Panama City will find them already formed and 'on the shelf'. . . .

"There are no requirements of any kind to be met by an applicant for a registered company. Nor do application procedures assure that actual owners of companies are identified," the report said.

PRESIDENT'S DECISION SHOULD BE REVERSED

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in expressing my concern over President Reagan's August 28 decision to reject the use of quotas or increased tariffs to protect the American shoe industry against imports. The President's decision runs counter to the wishes of hundreds of thousands of concerned citizens as well as the recommendations of the U.S. International Trade Commission.

By making this decision, the President has rejected calls for assistance to this ailing industry which is now dominated by an influx of imports. The situation is now likely to further deteriorate. More factories will close, more workers will be displaced, and we will face an even greater influx of imports.

In response to this inaction, I urge my colleagues and all concerned citizens to step up their efforts to bring about a reversal of the decision. The time to defend this important industry is upon us.

ESTABLISHING A COMMISSION TO BALANCE THE BUDGET

HON. CECIL (CEC) HEFTEL

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, in spite of the best efforts of both the Senate and the House, we have been unable to put more than a dent in the Federal deficit this year.

The political pressures on Congress simply make it too difficult to do more. Therefore, I propose, Mr. Speaker, we remove the problem from the political arena and ask the President to appoint a bipartisan commission to deal with the deficit. I am pleased that my esteemed colleague, Mr. FRENZEL, has joined me as a cosponsor.

This will not be the first time, of course, that we have used this approach. Three years ago, when the Nation's Social Security system was in deep trouble, the President appointed a commission to come up with a solution. When it did, Congress accepted it, recognizing that it represented the best efforts of thoughtful and well-informed men and women above the political fray.

Faced now with a problem even more serious for our Nation's welfare and even more difficult to resolve in a political setting, we should consider using an approach that we know has worked in the past.

Our proposal asks the President to appoint a commission immediately to report back to Congress by March 15, 1986. I know, Mr. Speaker, this is short notice, but the truth is we have very little time left. The situation is urgent.

Each day our deficit remains high, America's business fades a little more and our place in the world's economic hierarchy slips another notch. The deficit is creating such a demand for capital that interest rates remain unusually high. This in turn encourages foreign investors to convert their capital to dollars and ship it over here. The demand keeps the dollar high—40-percent higher than economists believe it should be. The result is that the rest of the world enjoys a 40-percent subsidy shipping goods to the United States and the goods we are trying to sell them carry a 40-percent penalty.

Is it any wonder our markets are being flooded with foreign imports and our manufacturers crying for quotas and tariffs? The runaway deficit is at the root of our trouble and no amount of protectionism will change matters until we come to terms with the fact that we are spending far more than we are taking in.

During the 1970's and early 1980's, the Federal Government absorbed only about 18 percent of total borrowing while business took 38 percent and households, 40 percent. From 1985 to 1988, the Bank of Boston estimates the Federal Government's share will double to 35 percent while business will be squeezed down to 25 percent and households to 32 percent.

Not only are American businesses being forced to compete with imports carrying a 40 percent subsidy from the strong dollar, but they are forced to complete with their own Government to borrow the money they need to modernize.

Time is short. That is why I chose the March deadline. Besides, the subject of the deficit is hardly a new one. Sadly, most commission members would be more than familiar with its every detail.

March 15 is the date by which the authorizing committees of Congress must report their budget recommendations for the next year to the Budget Committee. This date would therefore allow the commission's recommendations to be incorporated in the next budget.

In 1980, the deficit stood at $73 billion. This year it is pushing $210 billion. If we continue at this pace we will have squandered our inheritance and have little left for our children. As Congressional Budget Director Rudolph Penner said recently:

By running up large Federal deficits, the current generation is lowering the potential living standards of its children and grandchildren.

The time for pointing fingers and casting blame has long passed. We can no longer afford to think of the next election. We must think of the next generation.

ANTI-SATELLITE WEAPON TEST

HON. LAWRENCE COUGHLIN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, the recent administration decision to proceed with the first test of an antisatellite weapon against an object in space, while not unexpected, is nonetheless disappointing to those of us in Congress who have been working to lay the foundation for an arms control agreement banning these weapons.

No real purpose is achieved by testing our Asat now but the damage may be great. A recent editorial in the Philadelphia Inquirer expresses precisely my own concern about the Asat test and I commend it to my colleagues.

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer, Aug. 22, 1985]

ANTI-SATELLITE WEAPONS: TO WIN THE RACE IS TO LOSE

The United States must test a satellite-killer weapons for the first time against an object in space and test it now, says White House spokesman Larry Speakes. Soviet objections are discounted as sour grapes. "They [Moscow] have one [an anti-satellite weapon] and they don't want us to have one." National Security Adviser Robert C. McFarlane says the test is needed to maintain the military balance between the superpowers.

Unfortunately the administration left out a few key details:

The Soviet weapon is a clunker. Built in response to early U.S. anti-satellite models in the 1950s and 1960s, it can only hit less important U.S. satellites in low orbit, about a third of the total. The Soviet weapon can't reach the critical U.S. communications satellites in distant orbits.

Rather than stabilizing the space weapons balance, production of the new U.S. anti-satellite weapon will upset it. The U.S. weapon-in-progress is small, swift and far more sophisticated than the Soviets model. If the past is prologue, the Soviets once again will play catch up and develop a weapon to outdo the new U.S. satellite killer.

The United States has the most to lose in a such a race. It is far more dependent on sophisticated satellite communications to coordinate military operations than the Soviet Union.

Why then is the administration flat out opposed to a comprehensive ban on anti-satellite weapons, despite clear Soviet interest? One reason given is the difficulty of ensuring that the Soviets wouldn't cheat. That's a genuine concern that should be addressed carefully in negotiations, but new advances in U.S. satellite technology would make it difficult for Moscow to test a new anti-satellite weapon without detection.

Another issue is whether a treaty could control missiles, space mines or ground-based laser weapons which, though not designed specifically to take out satellites, could attack them. These threats are real. Some can be addressed by additional treaty restraints, others by making satellites more survivable and easier to replace. However, these dangers don't negate the value of banning weapons specifically designed to destroy satellites.

The real reason Washington opposes and Moscow wants a ban on antisatellite weapons may be one that Mr. Speakes never mentioned. Under the loophole of testing anti-satellite weapons the administration can conduct certain tests needed for President Reagan's "Star Wars" missile defense plan, tests that otherwise are forbidden by previous treaty.

If the issue at hand were only the one planned test, it might not be critical. At least several tests will be necessary before the U.S. anti-satellite device can be considered operational. But the administration had made clear that despite the Geneva arms talks and the upcoming superpower summit, it will not press forward for an anti-satellite ban. At best it will discuss "limits" on anti-satellite weapons aimed at those capable of hitting high orbits. But since the United States has more weapons in high orbit, and the Soviets have more in lower orbit, the Soviets are unlikely to buy that offer.

The decision to test, then, marks an administration determination to push ahead with a space race that ultimately will endanger, rather than strengthen American security. It is shortsighted. It is a mistake. In the space-weapons race, there can be no long-term winners.

THIRD ANNUAL CARIBBEAN YOUTH CONFERENCE

HON. RON de LUGO

OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Speaker, with the focus now on the Caribbean area, and with the added attention of the Caribbean Basin Initiative Program, and what we have learned from the Grenada experience, I would like to apprise my colleagues of a recent event in the U.S. Virgin Islands. Last week, the U.S. Virgin Islands hosted the third annual Caribbean Youth Conference which was very well attended by young people from countries and island nations throughout the Caribbean. Prime Minister Eugenia Charles of Dominica was a most welcome guest and speaker at the 3-day conference. The discussions were lively and gave one a real sense of the wealth of talent, energy, and intelligence of the young people of this vital area.

One of the keynote speakers was Dr. Charles W. Turnbull, the commissioner of education in the U.S. Virgin Islands. He made some very astute observations about the Caribbean identity and the possible future of the area which I would like to share with my colleagues.

KEYNOTE ADDRESS

(By Dr. Charles W. Turnbull)

The theme of this year's conference is "Youth Leadership in the Furtherance of Caribbean Identity."

The theme thus presupposes the existence of an element that can be termed "Caribbean Identity," which youth can provide leadership in furthering, expanding, improving. Is this so? Is it a fact that there is at present a "Caribbean Identity? The question for some is more than just thought-provoking. It is a downright provocation. Among some Caribbean youth it might even generate a fist fight or two. So be it. The question must be asked . . . and then answered.

In endeavoring to answer the question let us begin by defining the term—"Caribbean Identity." What do we mean when we say "Caribbean Identity"? A good dictionary that I consulted defined the term identity as "the condition of being oneself or itself and not another", "state of fact of being same one," "exact likeness in nature or qualities." Therefore, as you can plainly see, identity refers to sameness, in fact the word identity relates to identical meaning the same. We all know how closely identical twins resemble each other. Sometimes even their parents have difficulty telling them apart.

Now that we know that by identity we mean sameness we really only know that we are looking for a Caribbean sameness. But what do we mean by Caribbean? That part of the term too must be defined. And believe it or not, in someways this part of the term is more difficult or perplexing to define. This is because different people, including scholars and historians, mean different things when they use the word Caribbean. The dictionary is not much use here. By Caribbean do we mean all the countries of Central America, the West Indies and South America, the West Indies and South America that border the Caribbean Sea? This would include, in addition to the West Indies, Belize, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama, Venezuela and Columbia. Are we to inlcude countries that do not border the Caribbean Sea, such as Guyana, French Guiana and Surinam, the Bahamas and Bermuda but that do share to a large measure common historical background and modes of political, constitutional, social and economic and cultural development?

In the final analysis the determination of what is meant by Caribbean lies in the hands of the given exponent relative to his respective purpose, objective or aim. To settle the matter for this keynote address and this speaker, by Caribbean we mean all the countries of the West Indies chain from Cuba to Curacao in the Netherland Antilles, the Bahamas, Bermuda, Belize, Guyana, French Guiana, and Surinam. These we feel meet the test of a broad common historical background and mode of development.

Since we have defined "Caribbean" as well as "Identity and have equated "identity" to sameness, we know that we are looking for a

Caribbean "sameness" in the various countries. We can now reiterate the question. Is there in fact a Caribbean identity or sameness in the various countries we choose to call Caribbean? If so we must identify and describe this sameness. We must pull and show the common threads that make up this cloth or tapestry, if you please, we call Caribbean identity. The answering of the question now becomes our duty. Is there such a thing as "Caribbean Identity"? We are bold enough to say yes there is. We must now endeavor to identify and describe it.

Caribbean identity comprises the common inherited artifacts, goods, technical processes, ideas, beliefs, habits, customs and values of the people of the region. It is that sum of things that gives the people a collective personality that distinguishes them from another.

Examples of these include Amerindian tools, carvings and pottery, the sugar mill, greathouse, sugar technology, belief in a Supreme Being and a spiritual world, love of freedom and hatred of slavery or anything that even faintly resembles it, love of music, dance, festivals and holidays, desire to own at least a small piece of land and a house, lingering adherence to the time-honored rituals relative to birth, marriage and death, allegiance to family ties, etc.

Caribbean identity has grown out of the realities of geography and history. Although separated by water, for the most part, the countries are close to each other in terms of nautical miles. Narrow divides such as the Mona Passage between Puerto Rico and the Dominican Republic and the Anegada passage between the Virgin Islands and the Leeward Islands separate them. As the great Caribbeanist and scholar Gordon K. Lewis points out, this is not Polynesia or Melanesia, where thousands of ocean miles separate the various groups of islands from each other. Lewis notes:

"* * * This geographical closeness has led to a regular movement of people among the islands, by schooner, steamboat, and, today, small interisland aircraft. Intraregional migration has been the order of the day, especially in the Eastern Carribbean where, for example, laborers go south to work in the oil refineries of Aruba and Trinidad and others go north to seek jobs in the tourist industry of the U.S. Virgin Islands. Whole settlements of contract workers, both bonded and illegal, become part of their adopted homes: Grenadians in Trinidad, Antiguans in the Virgin Islands, Jamacians in Panama, and Dominicans in Puerto Rico. Add to this the more recent influx of political immigrants, e.g., Cubans in Puerto Rico, and a general portrait emerges of a regional society marked by the vast cyclical movements of peoples who have been uprooted—sometimes voluntarily, sometimes involuntarily. This, of course, has not yet expressed itself in any form of stable political union. The West Indies Federation collapsed after four brief years in 1962. But, short of that, the peoples of different Caribbean societies know each other as much as Europeans form different countries do. It is in this sense that geography is the mother of regionalism."

It can also be said that geography is a parent of Caribbean identity.

The other parent can be said to be history. Caribbean history can be divided into three or four broad periods. We choose to select four. They are (1) Pre-Columbian, (2) Pre-Emancipation, (3) Post-Emancipation and (4) Post-Independence. The three major episodes of all the countries, with the exception of a certain few, are European discovery, emancipation of the slaves, and political independence.

Out of a common historical background the social, economic, political and cultural institutions of the region has emerged with a high degree of sameness.

Now that we know there is indeed a Caribbean identity of sameness, and one we assume is worthy of preservation, what can youth leaders do to further this identity? First and foremost, youth leaders, all leaders in fact as well as the general populace, should study, know and appreciate Caribbean history and culture. Although far from perfection, there has been in recent years a considerable number of good volumes written, published and available in the region on Caribbean history and culture. These books, in most instances, have been written by native or long-term residents of the Caribbean, many having spent their professional lives studying the region. We recommend the works of Rex. M. Nettleford of Jamaica, Issac Dookhan of Guyana and the Virgin Islands, Walter Rodney of Guyana, Gordon K. Lewis, Carl Stone and others.

Additionally, a comprehensive series of textbooks of superior quality have been produced by publishing houses such as Macmillan and others for students in preparation for the CXC Examinations.

Additionally, in the various countries historical and cultural societies have been formed if they did not exist before. Organizations such as the Jamaica Institute, the Institute of Puerto Rican Culture, Virgin Islands Historical Society and others provide a venture for the furtherance of knowledge of the Caribbean.

Although far from what it must be, various Caribbean governments are improving and expanding the teaching of Caribbean history in their respective educational systems. Here in the U.S. Virgin Islands a cultural education division has been established to promote greater knowledge, awareness and appreciation of the history and culture of the Virgin Islands and the Caribbean.

More, however, needs to be done. I propose that in each country of the Caribbean a month be set aside, similar to Black History Month in the United States, to draw special attention to the history and culture of that particular country as well as to the rest of the Caribbean. What I am proposing is a "Virgin Islands History Month", a "Barbados History Month", a "Jamaica History Month", etc. Although the history, culture and way of life of each particular country and of the total Caribbean should be stressed year-long, a particular month for special observation would go a long way in the development and furtherance of Caribbean identity and awareness for the total population.

Any observance of Caribbean history must not only include the contributions of Caribbean men and women within the region but also their contributions to the larger world society.

Men and women of Caribbean birth and ancestry have contributed disproportionately to the world in a number of fields. Caribbean people, especially the youth, must know of the contributions of Edward Wilmot Blyden, Jose Marti, Marcus Garvey, Eric Williams, Grantly Adams, Shirley Chisholm, V.S. Naipaul, Alexander Bustamante, Norman Manley, Luis Munoz Marin and Terrance Todman to name but just a few.

A second strategy in the furtherance of Caribbean identity is the fostering of Caribbean unity. To do this it is of paramount importance that youth leaders sincerely believe in regional unity of all kinds and on all levels. Educators, doctors, lawyers, scholars, businessmen, service organization members, youth organizations, people of all groups should organize regional associations that meet regularly on different sites in the Caribbean for exchange of ideas, problem-solving and sheer fellowship.

There should be cultural exchanges, student exchanges, teacher exchanges, etc. The existing sports exchanges should be strengthened. Native Virgin Islanders could relearn cricket and Trinidadians could learn baseball.

There should be more personal visits for vacation and holiday among the residents of the various countries. The list of possibilities for furthering Caribbean identity and solidarity is endless.

What could all of this lead to. No none really knows. It might eventually somewhere down the road of destiny lead to renewed hope and aspiration for a Caribbean nation. As the world and by inference the Caribbean region shrink as the result of even faster and more efficient mode of transportation and communication being effected, the primary barrier to a Caribbean nation might well be the Caribbean people themselves.

Whatever the future may hold, the people of the Caribbean can take pride in what they and their forebear have been, are and will continue to be: a strong, resilient, courageous optimistic people with an identity to keep and pass on to generations to come.

The time is ripe for the furtherance of this identity. Youth leaders of the Caribbean who linger on the shore when wind and wave combine to grant you sailing weather to aid you on your way in your quest for furthering Caribbean Identity!

TEXTILE INDUSTRY JOBS

HON. GERRY E. STUDDS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, last month Berkshire Hathaway, a textile mill in New Bedford, MA—a city I have the privilege to represent—announced that it would permanently close later this year. Unfortunately, the jobs lost at Berkshire Hathaway are but the latest among some 300,000 textile and apparel jobs lost nationwide in the past 4 years. While the current administration stands idly by, imports of textiles and apparel have been permitted to skyrocket far in excess of the levels established in the multifiber arrangement. Along with a majority of my colleagues, I have cosponsored the Textile and Apparel Trade Enforcement Act, a bill designed to achieve the objectives of multifiber arrangement. It is my hope that the House of Representatives will take up this important legislation this fall.

Edward W. Clark, Jr., of New Bedford, addressed this problem in a recent column appearing in the Standard-Times of New Bedford. I commend Mr. Clark's comments to my colleagues.

BERKSHIRE HATHAWAY CLOSING LINKED TO NATIONAL POLICY

(By Edward W. Clark Jr.)

The tragedy facing Berkshire Hathaway workers, their families, and our community is not an accident of fate. It is not the result of poor local management or an unreasonable union. It is clearly the result of national economic policies that have created depressed prices within the industry, an inflated dollar and a rapidly rising tidal wave of imported textiles and garments. Unless our national government acts swiftly and decisively, the tragedy will be repeated over and over again and will affect many more workers in New Bedford and across the country.

Since 1980 more than 10,000 Massachusetts residents employed in the clothing and textile industries have lost their jobs. These workers have not found jobs as software designers on Route 128. For the most part they have taken lower-paying service industry jobs. Many are still unemployed or underemployed. Their fellow textile and apparel workers are in danger of sharing their fate and the Commonwealth is in danger of losing the more than $770 million dollar annual textile and apparel payroll.

Nationwide 300,000 textile and apparel jobs have been lost in the last four years as imports have grown 19 percent per year. In 1984, 61 textile plants closed in North and South Carolina alone. Clothing and textile imports now comprise almost 50 percent of the American market, a far greater percentage than imported autos or steel. Textile and apparel imports account for 13 percent of our record trade deficit.

To stop the destruction of the U.S. textile and apparel industry more than half of the U.S. House of Representatives and one-third of the U.S. Senate have sponsored the Textile and Apparel Trade Enforcement Act. The Bill seeks to establish a fair trade system that protects the American workers and American industry while allowing for a reasonable level of imports. Our representatives should be commended and supported for recognizing the importance of this bill for Massachusetts.

The current "free" trade system is destroying American jobs by ignoring the unfair advantages other nations give their apparel and textile industries.

Many countries insure wages are kept low by outlawing strikes (South Korea and Poland), using slave labor (South Africa) or tolerating death squads, which kill thousands of trade unionists every year (El Salvador). As long as unions are crushed overseas, foreign wages will remain low. The average American textile worker earns $6.46 per hour or $13,000 per year. He or she will never be able to compete with a textile worker in China who earns 20 cents per hour or a stitcher in Hong Kong who earns $1.46 per hour.

In addition to low wage levels and unfair labor laws, Taiwan, South Korea and Japan give their industries unfair advantage by forbidding the importation of American clothing and textile exports unless their domestic textile and clothing industries approve.

Our government unfortunately often cooperates in eliminating American jobs by subverting the intent of U.S. trade law. Many foreign governments (the Phillipines, China and Mexico) directly subsidize their industries. Under U.S. law, direct subsidies are supposed to trigger import tariffs equal to the subsidy. When it was proven that Brazil subsidized its shoe industry, our government gave Brazil five years to eliminate the subsidies rather than immediately impose a tariff. Five years later Brazil was still subsidizing its shoe industry, and our government gave them a five-year extension. At the same time, Bass Shoe, a division of Chesebrough-Pond's, Inc., closed several plants in Maine and opened a plant in Brazil.

Our government also ignores the trade guidelines established in the international trade agreement on textiles and clothing, the Multi-Fiber Arrangement (MFA). The MFA allows countries to annually increase their exports to the U.S. by six percent. Last year imports of clothing and textiles from Indonesia increased more than 200 percent, while imports from China increased 162 percent. Not wanting to anger the Indonesian or Chinese governments, our government did nothing. China's over-shipment of sheeting material last year could have kept two mills in Massachusetts open for a year.

The American worker is thus laid off to accommodate our government's foreign policy goals. Should we want a military base in the Phillipines, or should we need China's vote at the U.N., her textile and apparel quota is lifted and more Massachusetts workers go to the unemployment office.

Our union is not opposed to trade, especially trade with the Third World. Indeed, in many cases we have encouraged it. What we are opposed to is uncontrolled and unfair trade. Such uncontrolled and unfair trade can only lead to Third World conditions in industrial states like Massachusetts.

These injustices have led Republican Sen. John Danforth, the chairman of the Senate subcommittee on International Trade, to say, "The Administration equates even enforcement of the law as protectionist. They view free trade as "necessitating docile acceptance of the unfair practices of trading partners." The Textile and Apparel Trade Enforcement Act would bring some fairness to an unfair trade system.

Foreign governments and many retailers (who for the most part do not pass on to consumers the savings they make from buying cheap foreign goods) oppose this legislation. The Reagan Administration is also presently opposed to it. If we are to save the textile and garment industries in this country, we must overcome this opposition. Nationally, a majority of our legislators supports the passage of the Textile and Apparel Trade Enforcement Act. We all must work hard to increase that majority to a point where it becomes veto-proof. Failure to do so will most certainly mean the virtual elimination of an industry that affects the employment of one out of eight manufacturing workers in the United States.

Our union will continue to work as hard as possible to make sure that the owners of Berkshire Hathaway live up to their responsibilities and to keep as many Berkshire Hathaway workers as possible employed at decent wages and with decent working conditions. It is clear, however, that in the long run only national legislation can prevent situations similar to the one we now face.

JOE CLOSE, DEAR FRIEND

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, Joe Close was the most selfless man I've ever known. Altruism is rare in politics, but Joe was a rare person.

Born in Ross, CA, Joe moved to Oakland with his family when he was 10. He graduated from Fremont High School and the University of California, Berkeley, where he earned a degree in economics. After graduating and marrying the former Jan Breschini, he spent 15 years as an advertising executive.

Joe entered politics in the 1950's and became a trusted leader among northern California Democrats. He was a member of the Seventh Congressional District branch of the California Democratic Council [CDC] and held a number of offices in the local, regional, and statewide CDC.

He worked tirelessly to elect representatives he thought would advocate his concepts of good government, and was generally pleased with the quality of officeholders in the east bay. His purpose was to make government work for all the people.

In later years, Joe was employed as administrative assistant to the Emeryville City Council. He resigned for health reasons in 1984, and died a year later. He was 60.

We miss his dry wit. We miss his sound judgment. But most of all, we miss his company. Joe Close was always there when needed. Joe was a friend.

TARENTUM PRESENTS COMMUNITY AWARDS

HON. JOSEPH M. GAYDOS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. GAYDOS. Mr. Speaker, the Borough of Tarentum in the 20th Congressional District of Pennsylvania will publicly recognize the civic contributions of several individuals and organizations at a community awards banquet on September 14.

I am always impressed when a community takes the time and effort to publicize residents or groups who give of themselves in order to improve the life of their neighbors. I am pleased to bring to the attention of my colleagues this year's Tarentum honorees.

Helen Mateer: A retired school teacher and treasurer of the Tarentum Parking Authority, Helen is an active volunteer at Allegheny Valley Hospital.

Frank Anderson: Associate Editor of The Valley News Dispatch, Mr. Anderson also authors "The Stroller", a daily column of observations and announcements that make him one of the most widely read writers in the Alle-Kiski Valley.

Eugene Simon: Now semi-retired, Mr. Simon formerly owned The Valley Daily News and built its circulation from 9,000 to 44,000 before selling in 1976. Mr. Simon still writes a weekly column for several newspapers in Pennsylvania and New Mexico.

St. Vince De Paul Society: Chapters at Sacred Heart/St. Peters' Church and St. Clement's Church have been unstinting in their efforts to aid the poor, the unemployed, the distressed and the disabled veteran.

Volunteer Fire Companies: Eureka Hose (organized 1886), Highland Hose (1913), Summit Hose (1907) are commonly united in their unselfish commitment to protect the lives and property of Tarentum's citizens.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Congress of the United States, I congratulate the above mentioned honorees for the example they have set in community responsibility. I also applaud the Borough of Tarentum for its recognition of outstanding citizenship.

COMMEMORATION OF THE ANNIVERSARY OF THE INVASION OF POLAND

HON. FRANK ANNUNZIO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, on September 1, 1939, the peaceful state of Poland was invaded, marking the beginning of one of the most tragic and destructive wars in the history of mankind—World War II.

On this date, 46 years ago, the forces of nazism broke across the Polish borders from the West, and 16 days after this initial attack, the forces of communism began their treacherous assault from the East. Although the Polish people, including over 830,000 soldiers and officers of the Polish Army, fought bravely to preserve their homeland, they were unable to prevent Poland from becoming a nation without a state, a tyrannized and persecuted country, deprived of over half of its territory and millions of its people.

Many thousands of Polish soldiers were forced to flee from the military might of their oppressors, and joined the allied troops. An underground movement was formed, directed by the Polish Government-in-exile, which contributed to the war effort by crippling the enemy with acts of sabotage and subterfuge.

The members of the resistance movement refused to betray their national honor by collaborating with the enemy, and many were forced to survive for months and years in the mountains and forests of their homeland. Millions of Poles suffered deportation and imprisonment in labor camps, and millions more were tortured and killed. The Polish nation lost close to one-quarter of her population, and the capital city of Warsaw was leveled to the ground.

Even after the end of the war, there was no peace for Poland, as the Soviets continued their occupation, and attempted systematically to destroy the culture, religion, and national identity of the Polish people. Nevertheless, the commitment to freedom of the Polish people has remained strong, and their struggle to achieve personal liberty and national integrity continues undiminished.

Five years ago, on August 31, 1980, the historic Gdansk Agreement was signed between the Polish Government and the workers, allowing them to set up an independent trade union. Today this solidarity movement in Poland has grown to hundreds of thousands of people, who are openly and courageously struggling to achieve freedom of speech, self-determination, and human dignity. An article from the August 29, 1985 edition of the Christian Science Monitor, describing the resolve of the Polish people and the solidarity movement to achieve these objectives follows:

POLAND'S SOLIDARITY—THEN AND NOW

(By Nicholas G. Andrews)

Five years ago this week, on Aug. 31, 1980, the workers' Interfactory Strike Committee signed a historic agreement with the Polish government after a 17-day strike in Gdansk. Apart from a series of economic concessions won by the workers, the agreement allowed them to set up an independent trade union, provided for the release of political prisoners, called for the lifting of media censorship, and stipulated that religious faiths should have access to radio broadcast time. The only one of the 21 points of the Gdansk agreement still in force is the Roman Catholic Church's regular radio broadcast of its Sunday Mass.

The Polish authorities stalled, backtracked, and significantly evaded fulfilling the terms of the agreement. Nevertheless, the Independent, Self-Governing Trade Union Solidarity was legally registered in November 1980. In December 1981, however General Jaruzelski proclaimed martial law, suspending the activities of all trade unions. In October 1982, a new law on trade unions was adopted which delegalized Solidarity and provided for the establishment, in stages, of a new officially approved union.

What is the legacy of Solidarity?

The Solidarity experience showed that the workers could unite to defend their interests and compel the authorities to make economic concessions, assuming both sides renounced violence. It proved that workers without higher education understood their country's problems and could develop ideas and solutions for them. Polish workers and intellectuals joined to negotiate issues with the authorities. The Solidarity period revealed a Polish hunger for free speech and democracy. It gave a moral and spiritual boost to Polish society and furnished hope that, under other circumstances (read: the termination of Soviet hegemony over Poland), the Poles could regain their full independence and sovereignty.

Although the Solidarity union is now illegal, it is alive and busy. It still collects dues from 10-20 percent of its members, publishes uncensored weeklies and biweeklies in every major city, and looks out for the welfare of the families of imprisoned members.

This underground Solidarity organization consists of perhaps several thousand activists. The organization's Interim Coordinating Committee meets periodically, issues communiqués, and announces the union's attitude on public affairs. Each regional center has its committee to coordinate activities and issue appropriate bulletins. In major plants nationwide, clandestine factory committees collect dues, distribute the factory's underground paper or other publications, and organize local actions in defense of workers' interests.

Aboveground, active Solidarity members and sympathizers can be numbered in the hundreds of thousands. Besides distributing underground publications, they lend assistance to underground activities in unseen ways. They also organize public appeals, issue statements of principle, and form groups for specific purposes.

The Polish government's policy, so-called normalization, means a return to a strict totalitarian system in which the authorities, through the credible theat of using much-expanded police powers, permit no deviation from the rules they establish. The murder of the Rev. Jerzy Popieluszko by Ministry of Internal Affairs officials last October was no accident. The accident was that they were caught in the act.

After the purge of some officials, police and security services have resumed their previous practices and enjoy the confidence of the prime minister. Finding a solution to Poland's economic woes and debt obligations is no doubt a major task of Poland's government, but maintaining total political control and diminishing the impact of the opposition is the first priority.

Poland, has been pointed out often enough, is divided into two camps: the rulers, which consist of the Army, the Ministry of Internal Affairs, and the Communist party, state, and government bureaucracy; and the ruled, who include most of the nearly 10 million Solidarity members, other opposition opinion, the Catholic Church and private farmers.

Little communication takes place between the two camps. Efforts to stimulate a dialogue between Solidarity and the government have thus far failed. Solidarity leader Lech Walesa periodically repeats his readiness for a dialogue and negotiations, but the government, believing it has the upper hand and need not negotiate as long as it is willing to use force, ignores him.

Such as it is—a far cry from its 1980-81 existence—Solidarity is unlikely to disappear. Young people in their 20's and 30's who were the mainstay of the union, cannot write it off as a failure and forget it. Too much of the promise of 1980-81 remains fresh in their hearts and minds. So the struggle for Solidarity ideals continues because the Communist system has nothing comparable to offer.

Mr. Speaker, as we again observe this anniversary of the invasion of Poland, I am honored to join Americans of Polish descent living in the 11th Congressional District of Illinois which I am honored to represent, and Polish-Americans all over this Nation, in their hopes and prayers for the reentry of Poland into the community of free nations. The long-suffering people of Poland still look to a strong America for moral support in their continuing struggle to achieve their just aspirations of national liberty.

CALIFORNIA FARMS REELING, TOO

HON. TONY COELHO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, as we return from the August recess, the House Agriculture Committee will be completing the markup of the 1985 farm bill. This difficult task has been made even more complicated by the President's recent threats to veto legislation that extends too much assistance to American farmers—at a time when falling prices and decreasing exports paint an even gloomier picture of the U.S. farm economy in the months and years ahead.

For years, California's farmers have been recognized as the Nation's leading agriculture producers, and have even been considered immune to the financial problems their Midwest colleagues have experienced. Sadly, that is no longer the case, as California farm income and land values continue to decline, particularly impacting the economy of the fertile San Joaquin Valley. Daily, I hear from my farming constituents that they are hurting, and need help—not a handout, but help. If President Reagan could have driven a few hours north of his Santa Barbara ranch to visit with some of the same farmers I talked to, he might have a better understanding of what the House Agriculture Committee is trying to do. But since the President did not talk to any farmers, I would hope that he and others who share his opinion on this subject will read this New York Times article on the dilemma facing California agriculture.

CALIFORNIA FARMS REELING, TOO

(By Thomas C. Hayes)

Los Angeles, July 25.—From grapes and almonds, to cotton and rice, farmers in California have long had more options to make money than farmers in other parts of the country.

But growers here are reeling too, faced by many of the same woes as other American farmers: falling commodity prices, rising imports, dwindling foreign markets and staggering bank debt.

California growers face their fifth consecutive year of declining profits. The Security Pacific National Bank, for example, estimates that the industry will earn $3 billion this year, down from $3.2 billion in 1984 and a peak of $4.2 billion in 1980.

And falling prices for major crops such as cotton, grapes, raisins, corn, almonds and rice have pared cash flows so much that many growers say they face another year of losses. Those growers who borrowed to buy high-priced land a few years ago have few places to turn for help. California farms, although larger, on average, than those in the Middle West, are still mostly family owned.

"It looks like there will be a day of reckoning for a lot of growers by the end of the year," said Walt Cucuk, owner of a 180-acre grape and raisin farm north of Fresno. "They've got their ranches mortgaged to the hilt and have been living off their savings. "This year's crop won't pay their expenses."

The situation is probably not as bleak as in some parts of the American farm belt, because of the greater diversification. Nonetheless, agriculture is one of California's biggest industries, and the continued downturn has sent farmland prices plummeting, and has taken a toll on the banks here, too.

The problems in California agriculture, for example, were among the factors cited by the BankAmerica Corporation last week when it reported a $338 million loss in the second quarter. Its Bank of America unit has its roots in California's small farming communities and remains the state's largest agricultural lender, with a farm loan portfolio of $2.2 billion. It also owns approximately 94,000 acres on foreclosed farmland.

"All of the major California banks" are confronted with growing agricultural loan problems, said Ray Borton, senior agricultural economist for the California Department of Food and Agriculture.

Agriculture here remained relatively healthy during the nation's steep recession of 1981 and 1983.

Even now, some farmers are still thriving. The California citrus industry, for example, which suffered losses in the late 1970's, has benefited from the canker blight and freezes that hurt orange production in Florida. Several vegetables, such as tomatoes, also are doing well.

But many other crops are slumping. The strong dollar has made it much harder for growers to sell abroad, and foreign farmers are picking away at some of California's biggest markets, said Stephen Levy, senior economist at the Center for the Continuing Study of the California Economy, a private research group.

China, which as recently as two years ago imported California cotton, is now a cotton exporter—and a competitor. It may capture 15 percent of the Japanese market, according to the Agriculture Department.

Then too, wine imports, primarily from France and Italy, accounted for 25.7 percent of all wine consumed in the United States last year, according to the Wine Institute, an industry-financed research group in San Francisco. Many grape growers, including Mr. Cucuk, a third-generation farmer who is 52 years old, expect the figure to approach 28 percent this year.

California wine shipments, aided by the popular new wine coolers, are expected to increase about 3 percent, to 373 million gallons this year, according to the Wine Institute. But prices for grapes used for crushing have declined steadily—to $169 a ton last year, from a peak of $248 in 1981. Cotton, at about 60 cents a pound, is down about 10 cents from a year ago.

With less money coming in from crop sales, California growers have little available to make debt payments. "What we've seen the last two years will continue," said James D. Kirk, senior vice president in charge of lending for the Wells Fargo Bank in the San Joaquin Valley. "The people who took on too much debt will probably go out of business."

Mr. Kirk, along with other bankers, said they now review a grower's chances of making a profit on a given crop in deciding whether to make new loans, instead of looking at land values. Most bankers said they try to carry a farmer as long as possible, and if they must repossess the land, try to lease it back to the farmer.

"In a lot of cases, with appropriate management and efficiency enhancements, the farmers will come through" before the land is repossessed, said Duane Paul, senior economist for the southern California operations of the Bank of America. "But in other cases, fortunately the minority, they are simply not going to make it. It's a bitter pill for us to swallow, as well as for the farmer."

Most banks are keeping foreclosed acres off the market in an effort to keep prices from falling further, Mr. Cucuk, the grape grower, said.

Today, however, land values in the arid; irrigated San Joaquin Valley have plummeted in many cases by more than 50 percent in three years. Land with Thompson seedless grapes, a basic crop used primarily for raisins and in wine-making, has fallen to less than $4,000 an acre, down from a peak average of $10,840.

Rather than buying more land, Mr. Cucuk used his profits from boom times to open a machine shop. But that, too, is now "struggling." Mean-while, he expects to lose money in farming for the second consecutive year.

Dick Markarian, a grower with 880 acres south of Fresno, said that land acquired at $4,000 an acre was still too expensive for a grower to make a profit at today's prices.

Mr. Markarian, who is 74, said memories of occasionally going without food so that his father would not lose the family's 20-acre farm during the Depression had led him to refuse his son's desire to buy more land a few years ago. "I'm scared to death of debt," he said.

At the time, their farm was making more than 30 percent in after-tax profits on $600,000 in annual receipts. Today, the farm, which produces cotton, grapes and corn on mortgage-free land, might not make money, he said.

PRESIDENT ALFONSIN'S DETERMINATION

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, the September 1 edition of the Washington Post had an excellent article of the determination of President Alfonsin and the Argentine people to come to grips with their economic problems.

The tone of the article was not completely optimistic, at least as far as the ability of the Argentine leader to solve his nation's economic crisis. But the article went beyond merely assessing Argentina's economic plight. It talked about the willingness of the Argentine people to give their President a chance. The fact that he must concern himself with the political pressures that go hand in hand with taking severe economic measures was in itself a refreshing sign. There was no talk of a coup in the article, only of the kind of political pressures that any democratic elected leader might find if he or she makes difficult, if unpopular, decisions.

That is not to say that the people are always fair or far sighted in their support for their leaders, but that is how a democracy works, and Argentina is very much a democracy. I am hopeful that the Argentine Government will be able to handle its economic problems, but at the same time, I am very glad that the people of that nation have chosen to do so as a democracy.

I submit the Washington Post article for my colleagues' perusal:

ALFONSIN LEADS ARGENTINES INTO WAR AGAINST INFLATION

(By James L. Rowe, Jr.)

BUENOS AIRES.—Two months ago, Argentine President Raul Alfonsin stood Argentine politics on its head. He told the country the truth about its economic policies.

It was not foreign bankers or Argentina's $48 billion in foreign debt that was the root cause of the country's hyperinflation and economic stagnation—a popular political theme during the first 15 months of his administration.

Instead, he said, Argentina itself and decades of its economic policies were the fundamental source of the country's economic woes.

It was an amazing change of course for the president, who inherited an economic mess in December 1983 from an eight-year-old military government. But to the surprise of veteran observers, most Argentines rallied around Alfonsin's message and the painful prescriptions he administered, boosting his popularity by 10 percentage points.

Last Thursday, labor unions organized a large, one-day strike to protest the new policy, but the demonstration was at best only partially successful and not an indication of a significant loss of support, Alfonsin's supporters and critics agree.

The clock is running on Alfonsin, however, many of these political figures say. If he fails to find the resources to begin to restore the ravaged Argentine economy, his mandate—and the country's economic future—will be in jeopardy.

The problems begin with the $48 billion Argentina owes to foreign creditors, which is soon to grow to $53 billion. Just to pay the interest on that debt, Argentina will have to drain about $5.5 billion a year from its economy—an amount equal to 8 percent of its total output of $70 billion.

As great a burden as the debt, perhaps, is the memory of how little Argentina got in return. Little of Argentina's borrowings were used to modernize or expand industry or create new businesses aimed at exports. Argentine's military government, which took the country into a disastrous war against Britain, spent heavily for its own needs, and to dampen import prices and inflation, the government kept the peso highly overvalued in the early 1980s. But this fed the demand for dollars, as Argentine investors increasingly moved into the American currency to protect themselves from an inevitable fall in the peso's value.

In 1980, according to economist Jorge Dominguez, Argentina borrowed billions of dollars merely to have enough of them in the central bank to satisfy private citizen's demands. Rather than investing in their own country, Argentines shipped their dollars to safer havens abroad. In 1980 alone, nearly $12 billion was sent out of the country, and today, Argentines hold an estimated $25 billion to $35 billion abroad.

Because it neglected its own development, Argentina will need major financial contributions from abroad for several years if it is to meet its interest payments, create jobs and start new export-oriented industries.

For this help, Argentina is dependent upon its bank lenders, who hold about $25 billion of the total debt. Many Argentines were galled by the willingness of the banks to lend to the former military government because, it is said, the banks knew the government was doing little productive with the borrowings. Now the banks hold the lifeline. In the next several months, they are expected to provide fresh money totaling $4.2 billion, the first new bank loans Argentina has received in more than three years. But the banks are reluctant to make big new loans to Argentina, or any other major debtors, because of the huge amount of loans already outstanding (about $350 billion for all of Latin America).

Argentine officials say they are confident that once the country demonstrates it has inflation under control and has taken other sound steps, foreign funds will become available—not only from banks but from the foreign holdings of Argentine citizens.

"But we have to get our economic house in order" before turning to the outside for more help, according to Treasury Secretary Mario Brodersohn, a key architect of the new plan that Alfonsin announced June 14.

That plan began with a wage-price freeze that Alfonsin imposed to break an entrenched inflationary psychology that was pushing prices upward at a 1,300 percent annual rate in May. He promised to cut the bloated federal deficit and ordered a halt to the printing of new money—the principal means Argentine governments have used for decades to pay for their government. To underscore the break with inflationary practices, he created a new currency—the austral—to replace the vilified peso.

Argentina also made peace with its international lenders and the International Monetary Fund, the lender of last resort.

The attack on inflation was the heart of Alfonsin's program. Spiraling upward and out of control, the price escalation was making normal economic decision-making virtually impossible. "By late May, the economy had ground to a halt," according to one diplomatic source.

"The situation we were living through was a desperate one. Argentines are clinging to this plan as though it were a lifesaver. It has been 40 years since they last had a feeling of stability," said Sen Carlos Gomez Centurion, a member of the tiny Provincialist Party.

And the solution was desperate—following Alfonsin's moves, the Argentine economy spun into an almost immediate recession. But the wage and price freeze is only a first step. Adolfo Canitrot, second in command at the Economy Ministry, said that the freeze will be maintained until society is convinced that inflation will not return.

But at some point, economic policy makers will have to devise a strategy to get Argentina growing without rekindling inflation and inflationary expectations, he said. Exactly how they will do that is not clear, even to them, Canitrot and Treasury Secretary Brodersohn said.

If the next phase of the anti-inflation program is to succeed, the government will have to gain control over the public-sector enterprises; more than 350 in all, which range from oil and electricity to appliance manufacturing. Many of them lose money and are a drain on the government's limited resources.

In direct opposition to the verities of Argentine tradition and, especially, those of his own Radical Party, Alfonsin said he would reduce the role of the state in industry, arguing that the private sector is more efficient than the public for most forms of enterprise.

These enterprises control more money that the president, one diplomatic source said. "The government now is attempting to put the bridle on the public-sector enterprises and to get the bit to fit in the mouths of the directors," the source said. "The government must get them to transmit the money they owe the treasury and get them to follow their own budget."

In the months ahead, the debt situation is manageable. This year, a $4 billion export surplus and the long-awaited money from the IMF and the banks will meet and exceed Argentina's need for foreign assistance. But by 1986, the growing load of foreign debt and anticipated difficulties in maintaining exports will begin to slow Argentina's growth. And by 1987, unless the international facts of life change, Argentina will be hit severely by foreign debt service.

Looking farther ahead, Alfonsin and Argentina face major obstacles in their attempt to restore Argentina to the healthy economic status it enjoyed prior to World War II, when it was one of the most prosperous nations in the world. In the last 10 years, manufacturing employment has declined 35 percent, while output has fallen 20 percent, according to Alberto Sojit, a Peronist economist who has been advising the Alfonsin administration. Workers with relatively high incomes have been forced into low-paying service jobs, reducing demand for such middle-income products as automobiles.

The prices of Argentina's exports—mainly agricultural and other commodities—have fallen sharply. About 80 percent of Argentina's exports are agricultural products, and it faces increasing difficulties in exporting to its historical markets such as Europe because European farm policy has been aimed at fostering and protecting products such as beef. In 1960, Argentina exported 1 million tons of beef a year. Today it exports about 250 thousand tons.

Most troubling, perhaps, is Argentina's lack of diversification. While Brazil, its neighbor and traditional Latin American rival, has built aggressive export industries, Argentina has been content to rely on traditional commodities and raw materials for nearly all of its exports. In the mid-1960s, Brazil and Argentina each exported about $1.5 billion worth of goods a year. Today, Argentina exports about $8 billion worth, while Brazil's exports are worth $27 billion.

Economist Dominguez said that Argentina must quickly look to joint ventures with foreign investors to develop industries to transform raw materials and raw commodities into higher-value intermediate goods. For example, Argentina should export beef products, not merely beef, he said.

Perhaps the key factor in Alfonsin's new economic policy is Alfonsin himself.

"He is a man of charisma who speaks clearly and is perceived to be decent," according to N. Charles Rowe, vice president of the Bank of Boston's large Argentine branch operation.

A rival Peronist politician said that, during the year and a half Alfonsin has been in office, has stature has magnified. "Not since Juan Peron do the Argentine people seem willing to put their trust in one politician," he said.

His prospects are aided by the severe divisions in the Peronist Party, conceded Diego Ramirez Guelar, one of the leading Peronist deputies and ranking minority members of the House Budget Committee.

For the last six months, the Peronist Party, called Justicialist, has been in a massive internal war pitting provincial interests against those of urban Buenos Aires. Many expect Alfonsin's 52 percent House majority to climb to 60 percent or higher after the November congressional elections.

To be sure, Alfonsin's desire to reshape the economy and downplay confrontation with foreign banks and multilateral institutions is not shared by the vast majority of his Radical party, which remains committed to a heavy state involvement in industry.

"But attitudes are changing," insisted Cesar Jaroslavsky, who heads the Radical bloc in the House, the more powerful of the two legislative bodies. "We inherited a monstrous state from the military. More than 50 percent of economic activity is in the hands of the state."

"Alfonsin came into power hoping to duplicate the successes the Radicals felt they were achieving the last time they governed in 1963," according to a top Argentine businessman, who spoke on condition that he not be identified.

"But Alfonsin, who has been in regular contact with heads of state all over the world, learned that those policies don't work any more. Certain industries, like utilities, will always be in the hands of the state. But others have no business being there, and Alfonsin apparently now believes that, too," the businessman said.

"Alfonsin has control of the government. Don't you doubt it. Things may take time. But if he wants them to get done, they will get done," said an Argentine bank executive, who also spoke on condition that he not be identified.

But Alfonsin well may exhaust all his political appeal if he conquers the inflation problem and comes up empty-handed on investment. "Argentines are grateful today," said an Alfonsin supporter. "Will they be grateful tomorrow?"

Even though declining real wages have been a fact of life in Argentina for a decade, actual unemployment has been low, averaging about 3.5 percent. However, the recession that followed the wage-price freeze has led to almost-unheard-of layoffs and job losses. "More than 5,000 of our 30,000 members have been laid off," said Ricardo Lamanna, a top official of the union of foremen in the metals industry. "It's worse in construction. We're in favor of fighting inflation, but gradually. A country that doesn't produce can't pay its debts."

Brodersohn warns that "making serious economic policy is not enough. There are three players in this game. We need help from the advanced countries. They have to stop subsidizing exports where they have no comparative advantage. The European subsidy on beef exceeds Argentina's cost of production.

"The international banking community not only must reduce the interest it charges on outstanding loans. It also must make available new lines of credit if we are to grow."

His warning is muted in the less-confrontational tones that are now used by the government in referring to the debt. There is a recognition that, no matter how tempting it may be to say "to hell with the debt," in reality, it costs more to confront than to pay. "To be another Nicaragua, isolated from the United States, is not a palatable option," said a former top Argentine diplomat.

Leading Argentine officials are beginning to realize that neither Europe nor Japan is going to open its domestic markets to Argentine exports and that the United States is becoming Argentina's most important ally. But even if the rhetoric about Argentina's foreign obligations has cooled, the debt never disappears from the horizon.

"The people at the IMF, the Federal Reserve and the [United States] Treasury tell us that, if the economic situation stabilizes and our accounts are more or less in order, there will be an increase in foreign investments and the policy of the banks will change. They tell us the banks will be more willing to lend," the Economy Ministry's Canitrot said. "I don't know how long we've got to wait. After one year or two years without results, the political pressures will build up."

JUDGE EDWARD WEINFELD

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, Judge Edward Weinfeld recently celebrated his 35th anniversary on the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York. Judge Weinfeld's scholarship and diligence continue to add luster to a distinguished court, and, I should particularly like to bring to the attention of my colleagues an article on Judge Weinfeld that appeared in the August 18, 1985, New York Times.

A LIFETIME OF LAW AND QUIET DILIGENCE FOR JUDGE WEINFELD

(By David Margolick)

It is very quiet in Foley Square at 4:30 in the morning, when 84-year-old Judge Edward Weinfeld usually arrives. The square is deserted except for the homeless people sleeping in the park across from the United States Court House.

Last week Judge Weinfeld marked his 35th anniversary on the bench in appropriate fashion. He showed up at the Court House five minutes earlier than usual, switched on the lights in his chambers, made a pot of coffee and began doing the job he loves—the lonely, difficult but exhilarating work of a Federal trial judge.

When Judge Weinfeld leaves his apartment on East 66th Street for Room 2204 of the courthouse each day, he merely forsakes one home and family for another. At the courthouse he is married to the law, and his clerks are his sons and daughters.

Friends, colleagues and former law clerks have begged him not to work so hard. But the judge, a stickler for facts, takes issue with not only their sentiments, but also their choice of words.

NOT WORK BUT 'JOY'

"When, at a fairly early hour of the morning, I put the key into the door of my darkened chambers and walk across the room to start the day's activities," he wrote recently, "I do so with the same enthusiasm that was mine the very first day of my judicial career. What one enjoys is not work. It is joy."

Edward Weinfeld is the oldest active Federal judge in the United States. But in a profession known for its dissenters, nearly everyone agrees that he also remains what he has long been: one of the most respected Federal judges in the country.

Two years ago, when Judge Weinfeld's alma mater, the New York University Law School, named a professorship after him, Associate Justice William J. Brennan Jr. of the United States Supreme Court called him "a day-by-day living example of what we want our judges to be." He added: "There is general agreement on bench and bar throughout this nation that there is no better judge on any court.

2,108 OPINIONS

Judge Weinfeld has earned his reputation through decades of diligence rather than through the luck of assignments or the eloquence of his writing.

He has presided over his share of famous cases—the libel suit by the author Quentin Reynolds against Westbrook Pegler, the noted Hearst journalist, for instance, and New York City's case against Rockwell International for defective subway cars—but no more than his share.

His opinions—2,108 of them as of last week—are long on facts and short on aphorisms.

In 35 years on the bench, he has granted only one interview: to his granddaughter, who is recording his memoirs.

"In a sense, it would be easier to salute him if he'd been more noisy, if he had laid claim to some innovative legal philosophy or sought attention through 'great' opinions or a monopoly of 'important' cases," Justice Brennan said. What has distinguished his career, he said, has been "the purity of its devotion and its quiet dedication to the business of judging."

Judge Weinfeld, who is routinely showered with such praise, is likened to New York's other noted 20th-century jurists, Benjamin Cardozo and Learned Hand.

But Judge Hand himself might have disputed that assessment, at least judging from a photograph he once inscribed to his friend: "To Edward Weinfeld, who makes the rest of us feel like drones."

NO MORE TENNIS

Age has forced some changes in Judge Weinfeld's daily routine. He rarely takes his ruminative lunchtime walks across the Brooklyn Bridge anymore, and his 6 A.M. tennis game died a while ago, with the only person he could find to play at that hour. Some lawyers say that in recent years the judge has grown more impatient, even peremptory, with them in court.

But as sleep becomes more difficult for him, his workday begins earlier than ever. It starts in his chambers, following a round of pushups, with a verse of the Bible—first in Hebrew, then in English. In the hours before his law clerks arrive, he writes opinions, reviews court records and sentencing reports and reads the latest Supreme Court rulings.

One story, apocryphal perhaps but not implausible, tells of a prosecutor who met the judge on the Court House steps at 8 o'clock one morning.

"Going out for breakfast, judge?" he asked.

"No, for lunch," Judge Weinfeld replied.

MINISTER OF JUSTICE

The judge's work, to many, could seem like drudgery: writing and re-writing opinions, reviewing reams of court documents, cross-examining probation officers before sentencing. But Judge Weinfeld is fond of referring to himself as a "minister of justice" and telling his law clerks that "there is no such thing as an unimportant case."

Such sentiments could seem corny to some—but not to those who have reviewed his decisions on appeal, shared the trial bench with him, worked for him or been litigants in his courtroom.

The United States Supreme Court often mentions Judge Weinfeld by name, a rare tribute for a trial judge. Fellow jurists regularly seek his counsel and use his jury instructions.

The defendants in the Brinks murder cases, who routinely disrupted the proceedings in other courtrooms, stood quietly whenever Judge Weinfeld entered his.

DECISIONS RARELY REVERSED

And appellate courts rarely reverse him—not even in the midst of the McCarthy era, when he ruled that a Senate subcommittee had improperly questioned a Columbia University lecturer, Corliss Lamont, about his political beliefs.

"In my view the Court of Appeals would not have upheld any other judge," said Leonard Boudin, who represented Mr. Lamont. "The weight of his learning, legal analysis and reputation made him virtually irreversible."

Judge Weinfeld has periodically promised his wife of 54 years, Lillian, that he plans to retire from his post, a lifetime appointment. But despite gout, phlebitis and other ailments, there is no evidence that he intends to keep his word. Already, he has hired law clerks both for next year and the year after.

They will presumably develop the same bond with Judge Weinfeld as their predecessors, most of whom have long-since gone on to successful careers of their own. Many, looking back, say nothing could compete with their first job or first boss.

"One of the tragedies of my life is that I peaked at 25," said Mitchell Lowenthal, Judge Weinfeld's 1983 clerk and now an associate at Cleary, Gottlieb, Steen & Hamilton in New York.

Another New York lawyer, Daniel Levitt, wrote of his clerkship in 1964-65: "That was the best year. The rest are only to be used to prove we were worthy of you."

"He will never retire," said Martin Lipton, a New York lawyer and Judge Weinfeld's clerk from 1956 to 1957. "He will spend his last days on the bench."

Judge Weinfeld has said he aspired to serve the rule of law even as the 9-year-old son of immigrant parents on the Lower East Side. He practiced law for 27 years before entering public service, first as a delegate to the 1938 New York State Constitutional Convention, and later, as head of Governor Herbert H. Lehman's pioneering public-housing program.

TRUMAN APPOINTEE

It was Lehman, as a United States Senator, who persuaded President Truman to name him a Federal judge.

Like Judge Hand, Judge Weinfeld was often mentioned for higher judicial office, most notably in 1965, when he was recommended by Senator Robert Kennedy and Emanuel Celler, the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, and his own colleagues for the United States Court of Appeals. President Lyndon Johnson, however, ignored Senator Kennedy's nomination and chose Judge Wilfred Feinberg.

"There is no question that Feinberg's was a fine appointment," said Nicholas deB. Kastzenbach, who was Attorney General at the time. "But I think Johnson wanted to teach Bobby a lesson in politics, and did."

REJECTION "A WASTE"

"Right now, he would stand mountain high in comparison with any Justice on the Supreme Court," said Louis Nizer, who appeared before him in the Reynolds libel case. "It's a great waste."

But others, like Federal District Court Judge Morris Lasker, a colleague for nearly two decades, disagree. "He was better equipped to work by himself than on a collegial court," he said. "He's an artist of sorts, and artists can't work collegially."

According to his friends, Judge Weinfeld is somewhat baffled by the adulation he has received. His attitude toward his life's work appears akin to his feelings about jurors—to whom, he feels no thanks are ever due.

"I happen to believe that one who faithfully and conscientiously discharges his duty neither is entitled to, nor must he or she expect, thanks," he tells jurors before they are discharged. "Your reward must come from the knowledge that you responded to the call of duty as a citizen, and were privileged to play an important part in the administration of justice."

AMERICAN LEGION VIGIL IN NEW JERSEY

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, a very fine vigil for American MIA's and POW's was organized in July in Franklin, NJ. The ceremony was planned by Mr. Paul Cilurso, chairman of the POW/MIA Vigil Committee of Post 132 of the American Legion. Because Mr. Cilurso and the American Legion have performed distinguished services for American war veterans and their families, I wish the following notice of the vigil to be entered into the RECORD. Mr. Speaker, the American vigil continues for all the good men lost to us in the Southeast Asian war.

[From the Daily Record, Morristown, NJ]

LEGION VIGIL IN FRANKLIN HONORS MIA'S

(By Duane Stoltzfus)

FRANKLIN.—Through the day and through the night American Legionnaires remembered the Americans still missing in Southeast Asia in a vigil that culminated when hundreds of balloons, one for each of the missing soldiers, colored the morning sky yesterday in a symbolic flight to freedom.

The 24-hour vigil, held here at the American Legion Post 132, sought to remind Americans of the 2,464 men who remain missing or unaccounted for since the end of the Vietnam War.

"They are still there," said Paul Cilurso, chairman of the vigil, reflecting on the purpose of the gathering. "There are people over there. They are Americans. We want them home."

"It's not my vigil," he continued. "It's not the committee's vigil. It's an American vigil."

Sponsored by the Sussex County American Legion and the American Legion Department of New Jersey, the event began Saturday noon, with the reading of the 2,464 names of those listed as Prisoners Of War and Missing In Action, a reading that would continue for the length of the watch. The ceremonies included an opening prayer, 21-gun salute, speeches and a parade.

This vigil was the brainchild of Cilurso, who first attended a similar ceremony in Bridgeton last year.

Both Cilurso and Brent Minahane, who also stayed awake for the entire vigil, spoke of symbolic links and an elusive tie that binds those who have served and returned to those who remain missing.

Many of the 428 members of the Franklin post attended the vigil, along with other legionnaires and supporters from elsewhere in the county.

THE FIRST EARTH RUN

HON. MATTHEW F. McHUGH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. MCHUGH. Mr. Speaker, all of us remember the spirit of cooperation and patriotism that was generated in 1984 as the Olympic Torch was carried across the United States.

Today, I am inserting into the RECORD an article that recently appeared in the Los Angeles Herald Examiner regarding the first Earth run. This event, which is being organized by David Gershon, the director of the 1980 Winter Olympic torch relay, is designed to take the Olympic torch relay one step further by organizing a worldwide torch relay that will honor our common humanity and ignite the spirit of global cooperation.

The first Earth run is an inspirational concept that deserves our encouragement and support, and thus I hope that all of our colleagues will take a few moments to learn more about this event.

CONCEPT OF FIRST EARTH RUN IS CATCHING FIRE

NEW YORK—An Olympic torch hangs on the office wall of Peter Ueberroth, baseball's new commissioner. It's a reminder of the fever that swept the country last year during the Los Angeles Olympics.

The two-pound torch caught fire in 1984 as it made its way across the United States, carried by thousands of runners in a relay that united the country.

Ueberroth, widely applauded for his organization of the highly profitable 1984 Summer Olympics, says that one of the major reasons for the success of the Games was the torch relay.

"We were able to rekindle pride in our country as evidenced by the millions of people who took part in the torch program as either spectators or participants," Ueberroth said, "I hoped the run would unify the country. People weren't afraid to stand up and cheer for the country, and the rest of the world saw how caring the country could be."

Now, a group headed by David Gershon, the director of the 1980 Winter Olympic Torch Relay, which went from Olympia, Greece, to Lake Placid, is organizing the First Earth Run.

The international event, which Gershon and his compatriots hope will touch millions of people throughout the world, is scheduled to begin in May 1986 at the United Nations in New York and end there four months later.

"The idea of the event is to serve as a powerful catalyst," said Gershon, who also organized and led the American Liberty Torch Bicentennial Relay, a 9,000-mile journey through all 50 states in 1976, and served as associate coordinator for the New York City Marathon for four years. "We hope we can touch a lot of people and inspire them in different ways.

"We are taking the Olympic Torch Relay concept one step further . . . taking it around the world and creating it as an event . . . an event to honor our common humanity and ignite the spirit of global cooperation.

"We are calling it the First Earth Run—An Olympics of Cooperation."

Gershon said the run should be viewed as "something positive . . . something to motivate people, an event to inspire hope. We feel that given the state of the world what we need is something catalytic.

"I hope we will touch over two billion people . . . not just those who know of it, but those who will get involved physically. Our goal is to make a significant statement of cooperation."

The First Earth Run has five elements, Gershon said.

"The first is to get all countries in the world involved," he said.

Toward that end, the plan is to have runners from each country join a relay team for about a week between May and September. "A trunk route will go around the world to about 60 countries," said Gershon. "A tributary route will go to about 100 other countries.

"Using a flaming torch as the visual symbol connecting nation to nation, (the idea is to) have light-bearing runners from every country pass the flame from hand to hand across national boundaries touching every nation as they encircle the earth with light."

The second element is to try and have mass participation at candle-lighting ceremonies in many major cities.

"When the torches are returned to the tributary countries, it will be a chance for everyone to carry the torch," said Gershon. "Through light ritual ceremonies in every town, people receive the light from the light-bearing runners onto torches and candles and then spread it from individual to individual, community to community.

"By the end of the Earth Run, over half the population of the world will have received the light in their own personal candles."

The third element will be to award gold, silver and bronze medals on local and national levels "for the best strategies that embody cooperation."

"All along the pathway of the Earth Run, communities, regions and countries create ceremonies in their own unique cultural ways to celebrate the message of the torch of light as it passes," Gershon said.

The ceremonies, in conjunction with the candle-lighting rituals, will be set up as fund-raisers, he said. "We want to give money to hunger and entrepreneurial development of the Third World," he added.

Element No. 4 is to hold major concerts "to use the universal language of music and satellite communications to magnify the experience of our common humanity." The concerts will be held as the torch arrives in seven cities—Moscow, Peking, Tokyo, Rio de Janeiro, Nairobi, London and Los Angeles.

The final element will come back at the UN Building. There, world leaders, including the secretary general of the UN, will receive the torch, Gershon said, "which represents the hope and aspiration of the whole world.

"Hopefully, we will have made a shift, moving the world one step closer to a positive future."

Assisting Gershon in the project are Hal Uplinger, who has worked for CBS in producing Super Bowl games; Doug Cox, a former director of sales for CBS, who will coordinate the concerts; Mike Mitchell, the head of the chief financial group for the 1984 Olympics; Gail Straub, a former Peace Corps member, and Martin Bentz, who works for the UN and will map and plan the torch routes.

Ueberroth is not involved in the Earth Run.

Gershon estimated the total cost for the project at $15 million, with the money to be provided by "corporations, individuals and governments."

"We have a quarter-million dollars committed now," he said. "Within the next six months, we should be nailing down all the financial pieces. We hope to have everything in place by June."

UNFAIR ATTACKS AGAINST AN ADMINISTRATION NOMINEE

HON. PAT SWINDALL

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. SWINDALL. Mr. Speaker, I call your attention to an article written by John Lofton which illustrates some of the unfair attacks and smear campaigns that some of the administration nominees have been subjected to.

I would like to submit the full text of the article into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PRESSING PAW FOR THE FACTS

"I feel like a lion who was just eaten by Christians," said a smiling Anthony Podesta, president of People for the American Way, a rabidly anti-Christian group founded by TV producer Norman Lear.

And, for once in his life, Mr. Podesta was correct about something. He had just concluded a press conference in which he attacked the prospective nomination of Herbert Ellingwood to be assistant attorney general for legal policy at the Justice Department. And during his session with the press, he was kept on the defensive by representatives of Christian groups or publications, who attempted to pin him down on his charges concerning Mr. Ellingwood, who is currently chairman of the Merit Systems Protection Board.

So, what and where is the beef? How valid is the PAW case against Mr. Ellingwood? Well, as Al Smith used to say, let's look at the record.

Charge one is that Mr. E. has "abused merit hiring practices" by judging a person's qualifications for federal jobs on the basis of "religious beliefs." It is alleged that Mr. E. helped "devise" a "talent bank" to (gasp!) place right-wing fundamentalists in federal civil service and political jobs, a "talent bank" said to be a project of the American Coalition for Traditional Values.

But, in a letter last February to Rep. Pat Schroeder, D-Col., Mr. E. denied, six times, that he had done this. He said: "I do not advise or assist any group or representatives of any group on the placement of individuals with the civil service." And Mr. Podesta has produced no evidence to refute this denial. In fact, when I pressed him on this allegation, he said, no, he knows of no specific examples where Mr. E. has shown "religious favoritism," as a PAW press release charges. And he said they have looked for victims of such discrimination by Mr. E., they have found no such persons, and they are "still looking."

The PAW's charges as regards Mr. E's alleged relationship with ACTV are, in part, said Mr. Podesta, based on an article in the Federal Times which broke this so-called story. But the Federal Times story warned that "key questions" critical to determining the propriety and legality of the alleged Ellingwood-ACTV connection "remain unanswered." And "still unclear is the extent of ACTV's contacts within the government, as well as the nature of the jobs the group is seeking to fill."

Another charge is that Mr. E. has "abused the public trust" by "taking excessive paid leave for personal gain," by taking 87 days of paid leave from December 1981 through February 1984 and by taking $16,000 in speaking fees from "ultra-fundamentalist groups" while "working in a full-time federal position."

But, a June 1984 General Accounting Office report made at the request of Rep. Schroeder, and included in the PAW's own press kit, reveals that these charges are hogwash. The GAO report concluded that "all"—repeat "all"—of Mr. E's speeches to these Christian groups "were given during his personal time, or while on a leave of absence." Furthermore, said the GAO, its review did not disclose "any attempts to cover up" the nature of Mr. E's trips. And the GAO said that as a political appointee, Mr. E., as an agency head, is exempt from the Annual and Sick Leave Act, he is on call at all times and works whatever hours are necessary to meet his official responsibilities, and he "enjoys complete freedom to absent himself from duty as he sees fit."

The PAW complaint about Mr. E's speaking to Christian groups while also on official business is kooky. The charge is made that such speeches use tax dollars to subsidize the programs of these religious groups. But this is absurd and economically ignorant. With the federal deficit in the $200 billion range, one would think the PAW would be applauding government officials who make speeches, since the money these officials earn is taxed and, thus, helps reduce the deficit! But then, such reasoning imputes a degree of lucidity to Mr. Podesta and his crew which they obviously lack.

Another charge is that Mr. E. showed "personal favoritism" by "pushing through" for an attorney's job the wife of a man who loaned Ed Meese money, and that he did this without allowing anybody else to compete for this job. This is so wrong that at the press conference, Eric Yoder, a reporter for the Federal Times who said he broke this story, said he was compelled to note that "no competition was required" for this job. Mr. Yoder told me later that the PAW press release, as regards this charge, "stretches the truth."

And finally, it is charged that Mr. E. has "abused our system of justice" by "reportedly" sending an "ideological questionnaire" to potential judicial nominees when he worked for Gov. Reagan in the 1970s. And it is alleged the California bar once "indicated" it would oppose Mr. E's nomination to the Court of Appeals in 1974.

"Reportedly?" "Indicated?" These are weasel words. Who reported this? Well, Mr. Podesta said this report comes from The New York Times, the New York Law Journal, and certain unnamed judges. As for what the California bar "indicated," a spokesman for this organization said it has no record of any recommendation concerning Mr. E. and that if one was made, it would have been confidential.

And when asked just exactly which senators are among "a number of senators" Mr. Podesta said are "concerned" about Mr. E's prospective nomination, he said, well, his group has "asked for appointments" with all Judiciary Committee members, and they have met with about half of these members' staffs. Oh.

When Mr. Podesta was asked directly by Richard Dingman of the Christian Inquirer if there's any evidence Mr. E. has shown any undue bias in his present job, if he has tried to subvert the normal civil service process, Mr. Podesta said, "No," there's no such evidence.

Ordinarily, in the real world—which means everything north, south, east, and west of Washington, D.C.—it's probably true that where there's smoke, there's fire. But as likely as not, here in the nation's capital, it's an even bet that where there's smoke, there's some clown or group of clowns with a smoke-making machine. And for People for the American Way, bearing false witness has become a way of life, which is hardly the American way, by any definition.

Footnote: And (surprise!) the guy who has produced radio ads for the PAW against Mr. E's nomination is Tony Schwartz, who produced the smear-job TV spot against Barry Goldwater in 1964 featuring the little girl picking the daisy, the countdown, the nuclear explosion.

KRISTINA MARY KOCEK

HON. HARRIS W. FAWELL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. FAWELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to take a moment to congratulate Kristina Mary Kocek of LaGrange Park, IL, on her recent selection for the Secretary's International Youth Year Awards Program, sponsored by the U.S. Department of Education.

Kristina is 1 of 257 outstanding individuals nationwide and 1 of only 5 from the State of Illinois chosen for this award. She was selected from over 1,000 nominations as displaying exceptional caliber and value to others.

The Secretary's awards project is the Department's chief initiative observing International Youth Year, which was designated for 1985 by the United Nations and reinforced by a Presidential proclamation.

Kristina is deserving of this award to honor outstanding youths because she fits that description in several categories. She has been an outstanding student, maintaining a 4.0 GPA for 4 years in a college preparatory program. She was inducted into the National Honor Society during her junior year, and she has accepted a scholarship at Rice University where she will pursue an engineering degree.

She has been an outstanding student leader, serving as the vice president for 2 years in a school/community service organization, Sharclub. Among other activities, she organized visits to the British Home, a retirement residence, was president of the National Honor Society during her senior year, and was a leader in physical education classes for 2 years. Kristina, inspired and created a "school song" sign which was donated to the school and is now hanging permanently in the gymnasium.

Kristina has been an outstanding volunteer in sharing her talents with peers, serving as a tutor in mathematics and writing.

Athletically she is also talented. She participated in track and volleyball for 4 years. In volleyball, she served as captain in her senior year on a strong team that was a State contender. In track, she participated in shot put, and was a State qualifier for 2 years.

Kristina has been an outstanding recipient of various awards earned by young people recognized for achievements in different fields, including: Senior speaker (commencement, chosen by peers), Bausch & Lomb Science Award, Science Department Honors, Outstanding Senior Science Student 1985, English Department Honors, Mathematics Department Honors, Outstanding Senior Mathematics Student 1985, Physical Education Department Honors, Outstanding Senior Scholar Athlete, DAR Good Citizen Award, Illinois State Scholarship, Illinois Merit Recognition Scholarship, Presidential Academic Fitness Award, National Honor Society $1,000 Scholarship, and Write Place Tutor Award.

I wish to extend my sincere congratulations to Kristina Mary Kocek for her outstanding achievements. I share the pride and hopes for Kristina's continued success with her parents, peers, and school staff.

CONGRESSMAN GROTBERG COMMENDS ST. JOSEPH HOSPITAL FOR COST-CONTAINMENT PROGRAM

HON. JOHN E. GROTBERG

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. GROTBERG. Mr. Speaker, St. Joseph Hospital, of Elgin, IL, has implemented an innovative health care cost-containment program which provides free medical care for senior citizens 65 and older.

St. Joseph's is operated by the Franciscan Sisters, who since 1902 have been committed to providing quality health care for the elderly. This unique program, GoldenCare Plus, is in keeping with that commitment, and the sisters and hospital administrators should be commended for being in the forefront of this type of service.

GoldenCare Plus is free and open to anyone age 65 and older who is eligible for both parts A and B of Medicare. Senior citizens enrolled in the program have no deductible or coinsurance charges or any other out-of-pocket expenses for any inpatient or outpatient care provided by the hospital.

GoldenCare Plus picks up all hospital costs not covered by Medicare or supplemental insurance up to the maximum Medicare-covered days. Cardholders pay nothing for their room, meals, tests, x rays, or any other hospital charges. That kind of health care cost containment should be contagious.

Mr. Speaker, there is no catch or gimmick to this program. Hospital Administrator Robert J. Mohalski believes the program will eventually pay for itself through increased hospital census, and ultimately will increase the hospital's effectiveness.

In less than a month, 4,500 already have signed for their GoldenCare Plus cards.

St. Joseph also provides special reserved parking at the hospital, free financial counselors and a 50-percent discount on purchases in the hospital cafeteria for all cardholders.

St. Joseph has met the challenge of providing for the ever-changing health care needs, worries and frustrations of the elderly. This is one example of providing quality health care while keeping costs under control. I hope it's contagious in Illinois and across the country.

H.R. 1914

HON. JAMES A TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 4, 1985

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, earlier this session, I spoke on the House floor concerning AT&T and its plans to invest $30 million to build a plant in Singapore to produce residential telephones. This work is presently done at a plant in Shreveport, LA, and would result in the loss of about 2,000 American jobs.

Recently, AT&T announced that it would be eliminating 24,000 jobs at the communications products unit to make this particular facet of their operation more profitable. Robert E. Allen, chairman of AT&T, said that market conditions had dictated this latest action and that further reductions may be necessary.

Morton Bahr, president of the Communications Workers of America believes these cuts are being made only to achieve increased short-term profits and will result in the loss of AT&T's greatest resource, skilled craft workers. The Communications Workers of America represent about 70 percent of the jobs to be eliminated.

Again, yet another U.S. multinational corporation is making drastic cuts in its U.S. operations while continuing to expand its overseas plans. This type of action will not stimulate economic recovery and provide jobs for the thousands who are unemployed in this country. American jobs are continuing to be sent overseas at an accelerated rate.

I have introduced legislation, the Foreign Subsidiary Tax Equity Act, that would discourage American corporations from moving their operations and American jobs overseas. This legislation would plug an existing loophole in the Tax Code by requiring these U.S. plants to pay tax on the income generated in tax haven countries.

Can we continue to allow American jobs to be shipped overseas? I think American workers need our help, and I believe my legislation, H.R. 1914, is a valuable step in that direction. American jobs and economic stability are at stake in this crisis. I urge you to cosponsor H.R. 1914.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday, September 5, 1985, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, September 5, 1985

The House met at 10 a.m.

The Reverend Walter C. Kennedy, associate pastor, First United Methodist Church, Peoria, IL, offered the following prayer:

Eternal God!

As the light of a new day greets us this morning in this House Chamber, grant that the light of Thy divine presence illuminates the mind and warms the heart of each Member as they deliberate the important issues of this hour. Strengthen the hands of our President and all those, who by the will of the people, are privileged, in this day of high destiny, to mold the future of our great country. Create within all a divine discontent that we will not be satisfied with our limited achievement but that we will labor on with vision and valor for the enthronement on Earth of law and love of equity and righteousness, never doubting the final triumph of Thy redeeming purpose, for all children of every race under the sky. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Chair's approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 231, nays 100, not voting 103, as follows:

Mrs. ROUKEMA changed her vote from "yea" to "nay."

So the Journal was approved.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House with an amendment to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 444. An act to amend the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H.R. 2942) "An act making appropriations for the legislative branch for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. BUMPERS, and Mr. HARKIN to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H.R. 2959) "An act making appropriations for energy and water development for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. GARN, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. ABDNOR, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. MATTINGLY, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. STENNIS, Mr. BYRD, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. SASSER, and Mr. DECONCINI to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 140. An act to amend the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act to establish a program to encourage States to enact child protection reforms which are designed to improve legal and administrative proceedings regarding the investigation and prosecution of the child abuse cases, especially child sexual abuse cases;

S. 249. An act to amend the Uniform Relocation Assistance and Real Property Acquisition Policies Act of 1970;

S. 811. An act to clarify the treatment of mineral materials on public lands;

S. 816. An act to establish the Pine Ridge Wilderness and Soldier Creek Wilderness in the Nebraska National Forest in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes;

S. 1027. An act for the relief of Kenneth David Franklin;

S.J. Res. 166. Joint resolution to appeal for the release of D. Yury Orlov and other Helsinki Final Act monitors; and

S.J. Res. 183. Joint resolution to provide for the designation of the week of October 6 through October 12, 1985, as "Myasthenia Gravis Awareness Week."

REV. WALTER C. KENNEDY

(Mr. MICHEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I say to my colleagues that our opening prayer today was offered by my good friend and constituent, Rev. Walter C. Kennedy, associate pastor, First United Methodist Church, Peoria, IL.

Reverend Kennedy was born in Glasgow, Scotland. After graduating from high school, he worked in the John Brown Shipyards of Glasgow, where he helped to build the great seagoing ships, the Queen Mary and the Queen Elizabeth. He graduated from the International Training College of the Salvation Army and served as a lieutenant and captain in the Salvation Army, with appointments in England and Scotland.

He then came to the United States in 1949 and served as Salvation Army Corps officer, or pastor, in South Dakota, Nebraska, and Michigan. Eventually he was appointed to central Illinois and eastern Iowa as the Salvation Army divisional commander, with headquarters in Peoria.

I guess I really got to know Reverend Kennedy as a brigadier in the Salvation Army. In July 1980, Reverend Kennedy retired, and in September of the same year he became a pastor of the First United Methodist Church in Peoria.

I think it is notable also that when Reverend Kennedy was a brigadier back in January 1969, he opened one of the sessions of the U.S. Senate on the other side of the Capitol.

He and his wife, Marjorie, herself an ordained minister, have three sons: Gavin, Christopher, and Shawn Douglas.

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have this chance to give this brief biography of Reverend Kennedy, whose dedication and devotion to his calling and to his fellow human beings are so well known to all the folks out in central Illinois. We are delighted to have him open this session of the House of Representatives with his opening prayer.

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS TO FILE PRIVILEGED REPORT ON DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1986

Mr. MURTHA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations may have until midnight tonight to file a privileged report on the bill making appropriations for the Department of Transportation and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROGERS reserved all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LEVIN of Michigan). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

MODIFICATION OF APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON S. 1128, CLEAN WATER ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1985

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Chair's appointment on yesterday of Mr. ROWLAND of Georgia as an additional conferee on the Senate bill, S. 1128, is hereby modified to include sections 5, 16, 30(a), 34(b), and 45 of the House amendment to S. 1128 and modifications committed to conference, in lieu of the sections of the House amendment announced yesterday.

There was no objection.

THE ERA OF THE HYBRID IN THE AUTO INDUSTRY

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, it's the dawn of a new era in the auto industry. The era of the hybrid. These cars look American and have an American label. Some are even assembled by Americans. But don't be fooled my friends, they're foreign cars.

You would be hard pressed to find a car that is made exclusively from American-made parts and assembled by American workers.

Today's auto industry resembles the steel industry of 1960—predinosaur. We can't expect American workers to compete with foreign workers who are making slave wages. It's time for Congress to act and change the trade policies of America. Free trade is a myth and history will record what we are seeing now—the loss of jobs right before our very eyes.

I invite you to come to Youngstown, Pittsburgh, and Cleveland and see the miles of closed steel mills and despair in people's eyes. You may say now: "That's your tough luck, TRAFICANT. The industries in my district are doing OK." Let's face it. Your district is next.

I ask you to review H.R. 2953 that I have introduced. It will help the auto industry and also give consumers an incentive to purchase cars made in America.

BALANCED BUDGET COSPONSORS SOUGHT

(Mr. SAXTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today because I am more convinced than ever of the growing need for a balanced budget amendment.

Never before has there been a stronger voice calling for this body to discipline its spending. And if we don't act, the States may.

Already legal scholars are debating whether or not Congress can control the agenda of a constitutional convention called by the States.

Frankly, I would rather avoid that confrontation.

Earlier this year I introduced a balanced budget amendment which, I believe, approaches our Federal deficit in a responsible, rational way.

Quite simply, it calls for the budget deficit to be reduced by targeted amounts over a 5-year period. At the end of the 5 years, the budget would be balanced.

I thank those who have already cosponsored the bill, and I urge others to add their names.

I don't think anyone could fully express in 60 seconds the increasing importance the American public places on our deficit.

The point was hammered home during the month of August—in town meetings, in frank discussions, and in newspapers.

Please join me in taking this rational approach to the problem.

FAIR TRADE, NOT FREE TRADE

(Mr. MOLLOHAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Speaker, America needs fair trade.

As I traveled throughout my district during the month of August, the men and women who work in the glass, brick, and china plants, as well as the steel and chemical workers and coal miners, all had one message for the President: "Get off the free-trade kick. We need fair trade."

The numbers, Mr. Speaker, tell the story. In 4 short years, textile imports have increased from 13 percent to 25 percent, shoe imports have increased from 50 percent to 77 percent, and steel imports have increased from 16 percent to 25 percent.

But it is the people who feel the pain, with 2 million workers losing their jobs to foreign trade from 1980 to 1985, and for those still working, the flood of foreign goods into this country is undermining labor-management agreements and the process of negotiating those agreements.

Mr. Speaker, American industry is an endangered species. The wolves are at the door. Mr. President, we need fair-trade legislation now.

VUCANOVICH HAILS COURT DECISION ON COMPARABLE WORTH

(Mrs. VUCANOVICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Ninth U.S. Circuit Court made a landmark decision regarding the comparable worth theory. It overturned a lower court's decision mandating that Washington State pay their employees based on the comparable worth theory.

Mr. Speaker, this decision clearly shows that comparable worth is not workable. In Judge Kennedy's opinion he stated that "the wage gap by itself did not prove that the State of Washington intentionally discriminated against women." This decision proves that Congress should not take up legislation which would mandate a study of comparable worth in the Federal Government.

Comparable worth is nothing but a costly new form of government intervention in the determination of wages. I do not believe that the Congress should proceed with legislation which implements the comparable worth theory. It is clear that we do not need the costly and extraneous legislation that has been proposed.

The decision has been made. Let's get on with more pressing work.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent on yesterday due to a previously scheduled field hearing in my congressional district. Had I been present, I would have voted "nay" on rollcall No. 291 and "yea" on rollcall No. 292.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my statement appear in the permanent RECORD immediately following these recorded votes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

"COMPARABLE WORTH" AND CAPTAIN AHAB'S OBSESSION

(Mr. ARMEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, as of today, the promoters of H.R. 3008, the so-called comparable worth bill, are like Captain Ahab in pursuit of Moby Dick—they do not have a leg to stand on, and they should drop this dangerous obsession.

All of us in this body want to see equal pay for equal work, but this bill has nothing to do with that concept. Allow me to quote from the three-judge panel which overturned the Washington State case:

The state did not create the market disparity and has not been shown to have been motivated by impermissable sex-based considerations in setting salaries.

They further stated that—

Neither law nor logic deems the free market a suspect enterprise.

Let's face it, H.R. 3008 was an ill-conceived idea in the first place. Anyone who doubted that should realize it now. Without the judicial precedent to justify its existence, the comparable worth bill will have to rely on its own rationale. Given that, I think it would probably be best that this House not even consider the bill.

FAIR TRADE

(Mr. ROEMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, in the August break, when I was home in Louisiana, people talked to me constantly about jobs, the ones they have now and the ones they might lose tomorrow. As I said yesterday, they suggested a plan of action for the Congress: first, work on the deficit. They realize that the enormous deficit, the overvalued dollar, and high real interest rates are costing them jobs. Second of all, they ask that we do something about fair trade.

My people do not believe that protectionism is a strategy or a goal because it hurts workers and it hurts consumers, but they do think that selected, targeted action might be necessary to get the attention of our economic neighbors. Protectionism is not a strategy, but it is a tactic. We are Uncle Sam, not Uncle Sucker. Give us a trade policy, Mr. President, or we will give you one.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, tax reform is the lowest priority on my people's list. They tell us to be careful, be thorough, be fair, promote the middle class, help savings and investment, and create jobs. The current tax reform bill does none of those things. Without major changes, tax reform in its current status is dead.

COMPARABLE WORTH

(Mr. BARTON of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Ninth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the ill-fated Washington State comparable worth decision. This clearly shows that the idea of government bureaucrats setting wage rates is destined for defeat in this country—and rightly so.

Judge Anthony Kennedy, writing for the court, summed it up quite nicely when he said, "Neither law nor logic deems the free market a suspect enterprise."

It's ironic that just as this decision against comparable worth is being handed down in the Washington State case, supporters are attempting to impose this same idea on the Federal Government, and eventually the private sector. H.R. 3008 will likely be brought up next week with the intention being to regain momentum lost after the resounding defeat in Washington. Mr. Speaker, we have important work to do in these remaining few months of the session. Comparable worth legislation, especially since we now know this concept will not hold up in court, should be removed from consideration in the House.

Mr. Speaker, the market works; Federal courts have reaffirmed this; and it's time the Congress accepted this.

□ 1035

THE AGRICULTURAL CRISIS

(Mr. GLICKMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I just want to bring to the attention of my colleagues the current seriousness of the agricultural situation. Everybody in this body is aware that farm prices are at the low for many years right now, but I am not sure that everybody is aware that the farm credit system, the largest single bank for farm borrowers in this country, is near the point of bankruptcy because land prices have been falling. These banks have loans which are undercollateralized and we may find that this very large farm credit system is going to burst at the seams. This, in turn, will increase and perhaps be an additional catalyst for more of a farm crisis than we already have and it is affecting the general economy.

Farmers want a farm bill that preserves farm income. Farmers want a trade policy that does not cause the United States to unilaterally disarm throughout the rest of the world and farmers want responsible deficit reduction.

But I would tell my urban colleagues that the economic fate of America is tied to our natural resource base, particularly our agricultural resource base. That base is in serious jeopardy right now and what we do with respect to rural America is going to affect the ability of urban America to remain strong and productive and provide jobs.

TRANSPORTING DANGEROUS CHEMICALS ON OUR ROADS

(Mr. WALGREN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend this remarks.)

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, August is a month of surprises and this one was not exceptional in western Pennsylvania. The first surprise was that there is a daily shipment of a chemical, methyl isocyanate, which is the chemical which was involved in the Bhopal, India, tragedy, going by truck up Interstate 79, the north-south spine of western Pennsylvania.

The second surprise was that there is essentially no Federal regulation which the public can rely on for assurance that these kinds of shipments are made safely.

It turns our that the Department of Transportation's regulatory efforts in this area have been largely limited to explosives and do not cover inhalable toxics. The Department of Transportation has proposed regulations in this area which were sent to the Office of Management and Budget sometime in February and they have yet to be responsed to, having entered that black hole.

The American public deserves the protection of a regulatory presence in this area. I hope the Office of Management and Budget will issue those regulations or approve them immediately without delay.

THE MESSAGE FROM OUR CONSTITUENTS

(Mr. KOLBE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, it seems as though every reporter in town in asking Members of Congress: "What did you learn from your constituents during the recess?" As though we hadn't been taking the pulse of those we represent on every other trip home during the year.

First, I can tell you, having taken 5 days to explore the Grand Canyon on a float trip down the Colorado River, the achievements of man pale into insignificance alongside the majesty of God's creation in that canyon. I return from the journey keenly awake that we are but transient passengers on this planet Earth, stewards for generations past and generations yet to come.

On a more mundane level, as one of the stewards for the current generation, I conducted nearly a dozen town halls and scores of other meetings with constituents during the August recess. The message I heard was a consistent and uniform one: cut spending; trim the deficit.

For the first time, I believe the American people not only understand the need to cut spending in the abstract, but are committed to supporting Congressmen who make tough decisions to make those cuts, even when it affects programs that are close to their own interests.

Yesterday's vote on the economic development administration was not an encouraging beginning to our post-August efforts to rein in spending. I am sure that my colleagues heard the same message I did about spending during the recess. I would urge all of us to consider carefully how we are going to translate that message into hard action and tough choices on spending.

COMPARABLE WORTH

(Mr. STENHOLM asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, when a man or a woman or a minority perform the same job, the same factors should be considered in determining the wages they receive. This basic concept of equal pay for equal work is once again being confused with the concept of equal pay for dissimilar jobs or, as we are calling it today, comparable worth. While most people agree with the first concept, many like myself strongly disagree with the assumptions necessary to accept the latter.

The fact that the study may be impossible to conduct is but one of the problems with H.R. 3008. There are other reasons why a study on the feasibility of comparable worth is a bad idea. The Ninth Court of Appeals in San Francisco agreed yesterday. Let us give H.R. 3008 a dignified burial and get along with more important matters facing this Congress.

THE DEATH OF COMPARABLE WORTH

(Mrs. BENTLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, advocates of comparable worth were dealt a blow yesterday when the circuit of appeals overturned an earlier court decision giving Washington State employees equal pay for different jobs. In an unanimous decision, the circuit court found that "Neither law nor logic deems the free market a suspect enterprise."

I couldn't agree more. The arguments against comparable worth are simple and straightforward. The most compelling, though, is the idea that Government can determine the worth of an individual's labor. The truth is that the market and not bureaucrats or the courts is the best instrument for determining wages. As history shows, whenever Government attempts to control the economy, all citizens, women and men alike, suffer.

Mr. Speaker, comparable worth legislation is scheduled to come before the House next week. In light of this decision, I would hope the bill's sponsors would pull it from the floor and let this body move on to more important work, things like trade and budget deficits, tax reform and a farm bill.

TAX REFORM, AN ISSUE TO BE ADDRESSED

(Mr. PACKARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, I understand your opinion to be that there is little existing sentiment for a Tax Code overhaul. However, after extensive research, I have found the attitude toward tax reform to be exactly the opposite in the 43d District of California.

Two out of every three residents in Orange County and three out of every four residents of north San Diego County are in favor of the Reagan tax reform package as a whole; 78 percent of the people in my district strongly support replacing the current 14-bracket tax system with a 3-bracket system. Other figures look like this: 88 percent in favor of increasing the IRA limit to $4,000 per year for couples, 87 percent in favor of doubling the personal exemption, and 82 percent in favor of cutting personal income tax and raising corporate tax proportionately.

Mr. Speaker, these figures indicate to me that tax reform is indeed an issue to address in this body. I hope that you will have an open ear toward American taxpayers, and make way for consideration of a tax reform package in Congress this year.

NEITHER LAW NOR LOGIC DEEMS THE FREE MARKET A SUSPECT ENTERPRISE

(Mr. MONSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MONSON. Mr. Speaker, "Neither law nor logic deems the free market a suspect enterprise."

That was the decision handed down by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals yesterday in overturning Judge Jack Tanner's 1983 decision requiring Washington State to, and I quote from yesterday's unanimous decision, "eliminate an economic inequality it did not create."

Finally we can see set this ridiculous issue aside and get on with more important business. Yesterday's decision is a confirmation of every other major court decision on comparable worth, and it is a confirmation of simple common sense. But maybe the most important result of the decision was to acquit the free market from any charges of inherent discrimination. The market will set wages at a rate at which employers value each service performed. There is no conspiracy of the market forces to keep wages of women lower than those of men.

In fact, implementing a comparable-worth plan would only tend to entrench women in traditional roles. Presently, if women don't like the wages in predominantly women's jobs, they will move to a less traditional job. Comparable worth would remove any incentive for women to move away from their traditionally held jobs.

I'm glad that we can now lay this ridiculous idea to rest and get on with our job.

THE BUDGET: LET'S PLAY FAIR

(Mr. PORTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, President Reagan recently proposed a freeze on pay increases for Federal civilian employees. I can appreciate his rationale. The Federal budget is in crisis. In private industry, a company in crisis must often ask employees to bear some temporary sacrifice.

There's just one thing wrong here. We're not playing fair. To people who work for a living, we're saying: no cost-of-living increase. To people who have retired, or are on other Federal allowances, we say: OK, you get your inflation increase. To military personnel, we say: OK, you get your inflation increase.

Is this a budget crisis, or isn't it? I say it is. I say in the face fo $200 billion deficits we can't afford to pay any cost-of-living increase to anybody this this year. I imagine civil servants could live with that. But I can understand and sympathize with their protests when they are singled out for an extra dose of sacrifice. They have a right to protest. It's not fair.

You, Mr. Speaker, the Congress, and the President should have agreed to an across-the-board freeze in the first place.

WE HAVE LOST CONTROL OF OUR BORDERS

(Mr. LUNGREN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, earlier this week Bill Moyers had an exceptional documentary on the question of immigration and the state of immigration law in this country. I would hope that those of my colleagues who have not had an opportunity to view it thus far will take the opportunity in the not too distant future to see a copy of it, which I will make available to the entire House.

In very real terms, that documentary pointed out that we basically have lost control of our borders. That has been the case for some years. It is getting worse.

I believe there is, as they described it, anarchy on our borders.

Mr. Speaker, there is only one place where that anarchy can be addressed and that is in the House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate. It is my hope that we will move with immigration reform, at least begin that movement later this month, and that before this Congress is over we can achieve something that has not been achieved for about 34 years—a comprehensive reform of our immigration law.

The country needs some leadership on this. The country cries out for a solution to the problem that faces us on a daily basis. It is not just some intellectualizing on some question. It is not just some nebulous thing out there. These are real people, facing real problems on a daily basis.

Mr. Speaker, we must act and act now.

NABIH BERRI, NO FRIEND OF THE UNITED STATES

(Mr. COURTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, Nabih Berri won himself no small amount of praise for playing the roles of "mediator" and "moderate" in the recent TWA hijacking. But the play was not wholly convincing.

Berri had never disguised his anti-Americanism, and past reports had linked him to other hijackings. In a fiery speech in Beirut last September 9, he claimed to have 50 young suicide commandoes available for action against the Israelis.

As the TWA crime began, Berri publicly supported the hijackers' demands.

He claimed he had control of our hostages, but took much time—and arranged many press conferences—before they were freed.

He holds the title of Lebanese Minister of Justice, but has done nothing to prosecute the killers of Robert Stethem. Indeed, he let the two hold a press conference. And he has apparently done nothing to free the other Americans held in captivity in Lebanon.

I ask my colleagues to consider all this as we weigh three interesting news items from Beirut during August:

Berri's Amal Militia is taking delivery of Soviet-made tanks from Syria, Moscow's closest Middle Eastern ally;

Berri met with a Soviet official to discuss Lebanese security issues; and Berri received and accepted an official invitation to visit the Soviet Union.

If we are waiting for Nabih Berri to do something about the Americans languishing in Lebanon, we may be waiting for some time to come.

CONGRESS HAS A SPENDING PROBLEM

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, we have got a spending problem in the Congress. We spend too much money. Day after day, we spend too much money; week after week, we spend too much money; year after year, we spend too much money; decade after decade, we spend too much money. The American people know it; only this House seems blissfully unaware of the fact that we have got a spending problem in this country.

Now, we talk a lot on this floor about a deficit problem. Let me tell you, a sending problem is different than a deficit problem. The deficit problem is the fault of our spending problem, and it is high time that we begin to curtail spending in this Congress if we are going to solve the deficit problem. We ought to begin today with a bill we have coming before us. We have got a bill coming before us in which the first thing we are going to do is, we are going to pass a rule that waives the Budget Act. Once again, we are going to waive the Budget Act so that we can go on blissfully spending more money, and then later on we are going to spend some money with this bill that the administration did not request, that they still do not want. It amounts to about $6 million. Then we are going to turn around and go back to our constitutent, and we will say, "I don't know how all that spending is taking place." I think it is high time we start voting "no" on spending so that we can get deficits under control. If we do not, we are just plain lying to the American people.

COMPARABLE WORTH IS COUNTERPRODUCTIVE TO THE FREEDOM WOMEN ARE NOW SEEKING

(Mr. SILJANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SILJANDER. Mr. Speaker, my wife is a professional woman. She is a registered nurse and has been very successful in her career. She has been following the issue of comparable worth for some time now. I personally respect her opinion as a working woman.

Nancy feels that she is able to compete in the marketplace. The laws passed in the 1960's and certainly with the new changes in social attitude of late, with those she can fight and obtain equal wages for her profession.

She believes women should continue the fight for all professions for equal pay for equal worth. She has been an advocate of this equality for a long time. But she feels that comparable worth is counterproductive to the freedom women are now seeking.

The court case in the Ninth District Circuit Court is indicative of why this Congress should defeat House Resolution 3008 and pursue a more logical course of action that my wife, Nancy, a professional woman, would choose to pursue.

I thank the Speaker.

IT IS TIME WE PAY ATTENTION TO OUR MOST PROFITABLE EXPORT, AGRICULTURE

(Mr. ROTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, we hear many of our colleagues decry the trade deficit, and rightly so. But I hope it goes beyond rhetoric. For example, agriculture is our most important and most profitable export, and it is time that we pay attention to it. This month is the 12th anniversary of the Tokyo round of multilateral trade negotiations. It is time we give agriculture an equal billing with manufactured products.

So. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced legislation to do just that. I invite the Members of this House to join with me in that endeavor.

The reason we have these huge trade deficits is because we have the huge fiscal deficits. You can talk to 10 economists here in Washington and get 10 different answers on just about any economic issue. But on one issue they are all agreed; that is, high fiscal deficits will lead to high trade deficits. So I think that the philosophy in this House can no longer be spend, spend, spend, tax, tax, tax; but the philosophy must be: Spend less, tax less.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will remind all persons in the gallery that they are here as guests of the House and that any manifestation of approval or disapproval is in violation of the rules of the House.

CONGRESS MUST ACT NOW ON FARM CREDIT

(Mr. McEWEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, in just a few moments from now, the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration will finally admit what many of us have known for months—the Farm Credit System is in trouble, serious trouble.

He will come to us with his hat in his hand looking for help. And we must help him. Make no mistake about that. We must not let the farmers of America suffer the consequences of blatant mismanagement and abuse of a few.

But we better be sure that we exact our price—that whatever new farm lending system is established has built-in protection. That it provides America's farmers with the lending system they need to operate. Over one-third of all agricultural debt is held by the Farm Credit System. We simply cannot allow the burden of the mismanagement of the Farm Credit System to be borne by America's farmers who, in 1984, completed the second worst agricultural year in the history of America.

And the situation is worsening. With our Nation's farmers doing what they do best—produce food to feed the world at record levels—commodity prices are falling. Land values continue to plummet and the amount of available credit for farmers is shrinking.

Mr. Speaker, the Congress must act now to help America's farmers. They cannot afford to wait any longer.

RAILROAD SAFETY IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1985

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 250 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 250

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of Rule XXIII, declare the house resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2372) authorizing appropriations for carrying out the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970, and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against the consideration of the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-344) are hereby waived. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule, and each section shall be considered as having been read. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit. After the passage of H.R. 2372, it shall be in order, section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-344) to the contrary notwithstanding, to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 1080 and to consider said bill in the House, and it shall then be in order in the House to move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the said Senate bill and to insert in lieu thereof the provisions contained in H.R. 2372 as passed by the House.

The SPEAKER, pro tempore (Mr. KILDEE). The gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN] pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 250 is the rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 2372, the Railroad Safety Improvement Act of 1985. The rule provides for 1 hour of general debate to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

The rule also waives points of order under section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act against consideration of the bill. Section 402(a) requires authorizations to be reported by May 15 prior to the beginning of the fiscal year. The Committee on Energy and Commerce voted to report this bill on May 15, but delayed filing the report until May 23 to provide time for the submission of minority views on this legislation. Since this legislation authorizes the enactment of new budget authority for fiscal year 1986, a waiver of section 402(a) is necessary.

In addition, the rule provides for consideration of the bill by sections, with each section to be considered as read. The rule also provides for one motion to recommit.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the rule provides for a Senate hookup. It provides that after the passage of H.R. 2372, it shall be in order to consider the Senate-passed companion bill, S. 1080, in the House and to move to strike after the enacting clause of that bill and insert in lieu thereof the provisions of H.R. 2372 as passed by the House. House Resolution 250 also waives section 402(a) of the Budget Act against consideration of the Senate bill.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of H.R. 2372, the Railroad Safety Improvement Act of 1985, is to reauthorize and improve the safety programs of the Federal Railroad Administration, and to provide for railroad research and development programs. The bill authorizes $40.9 million for fiscal year 1986, and $42.5 million in fiscal year 1987 for the two programs. The bill contains several provisions dealing with drug and alcohol abuse in the railroad industry. First, H.R. 2372 would require the Secretary of Transportation to issue regulations to ensure the prevention of alcohol and drug use among railroad employees while they are on the job. The bill also would encourage the establishment of a private nonprofit corporation to support and promote greater employee awareness of drug and alcohol problems.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2372 would also improve the protections available to railroad employees who report safety violations or refuse to work under conditions that present the danger of death or serious injury. Under current law, an employee who is dismissed or suspended may sue for reinstatement and damages if proof can be shown that the dismissal or suspension was in retaliation for the employee having reported a safety violation to the Federal Railroad Administration. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2372 would allow workers who are discriminated against but not suspended or dismissed, to take action against employers as well.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2372 reauthorizes the safety functions of the Federal Railroad Administration for 2 years. The bill would also reauthorize the State Safety Participation Program. This program requires the Federal Government to partially reimburse States for any rail safety inspections and investigations which they may carry out. H.R. 2372 appropriates $3.1 million in fiscal year 1986 and $3.2 million for fiscal year 1987 for the program.

Mr. Speaker, the safety of rail operations in this Nation is essential to passenger transportation services and efficient freight transportation. The passage of this bill would guarantee the improvement of these safety programs, and of safe rail operations. I urge my colleagues to adopt House Resolution 250 so that we may proceed to the consideration of this important legislation.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the provisions of the rule have been ably explained by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST]. It would be redundant for me to go into detail on the provisions of the rule.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill made in order by this rule is to reauthorize and improve the safety program of the Federal Railroad Administration, and we all know that that is most important. Certainly we all agree with the goal of improved safety on our railroads. However, according to testimony presented in the Rules Committee, there are some provisions in this bill which do not contribute to the goal of improved safety and may, in fact, cause other problems.

Some of these are noted in the minority views contained in the report. The administration also takes a position opposing certain parts of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, under this open rule the House will have an opportunity to concentrate on amendments to make necessary improvements in this bill. Therefore, I support the rule and will support the bill on final passage.

The differences between the House and the other body, if any, can be worked out in the conference when the conferees meet.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the rule. As the gentleman from Tennessee has explained, and the gentleman from Texas has explained, this is an open rule. I think that is fine, very good, except that this is another one of those rules that waives the Budget Act. Now, I am sure that we will hear from all kinds of people who suggest that waiving the Budget Act here is simply waiving the reporting requirements that said that you have got to have this on the books by May 15. The reason why that is there is to assure us that when we are considering the budget, that we consider all of the things that might be authorized pursuant to the spending that the House of Representatives is going to do.

By waiving this provision of the Budget Act, what we are saying is that we do not think that this had to be included in our original budget considerations.

Well, what we are doing is trying to get around the problem that is in this Congress that we spend too much money. We always figure out ways to get around the rules that are aimed at preventing us from spending money.

□ 1105

So this rule is one more way of trying to escape our responsibility for overspending our budgets and overspending the tax dollars of the American people, and I would suggest that those who want to begin to stand up for what I think most of you heard the American people saying was their No. 1 concern is deficit, and do something to end the deficit, one of the ways you could start would be by voting against this rule and saying "We're tired of having bills come on the floor under a rules procedure that waives the Budget Act."

It is high time that we at least obey those things that we have put in law that require us to try to stop spending. If we are not willing to do that, then we ought to take all the heat that the American people can direct at this place for the spending that we do.

I ask for a "no" vote on the rule; it waives the Budget Act; we ought not do that.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I urge the adoption of the rule, and I have no further requests for time.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I would only point out that the committee in fact reported the bill in a timely manner, by May 15, but it delayed in filing in order to accommodate the minority members of the committee so that they could file minority views, and that if it had not been for that accommodation, that this would have been filed in a timely manner and it would not be a request to waive the filing requirement.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 244, nays 109, not voting 81, as follows:

Messrs. EVANS of Iowa, COURTER, and SWEENEY changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

Messrs. FRANKLIN, ENGLISH, and McCURDY changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KILDEE). Pursuant to House Resolution 250 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 2372.

□ 1125

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2372) authorizing appropriations for carrying out the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970, and for other purposes, with Mr. HUBBARD in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Under the rule, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FLORIO] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LENT] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FLORIO].

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee is now considering the Railroad Safety Improvement Act of 1985. This is an important piece of legislation, which should help improve both the safety of rail operations and the safety protections provided to railroad employees. The bill also reauthorizes the safety functions of the Federal Railroad Administration [FRA].

Let me highlight some of the key provisions of the bill. First, the bill would require the Secretary of Transportation to issue a final rule, within 30 days of enactment, to ensure the prevention of alcohol and drug use in railroad operations. Alcohol and drug use are a major problem adversely affecting the safety of rail operations. A number of recent accidents have been attributed to alcohol or drug use. It is clear that regulatory action is needed.

I am pleased that Secretary Dole finally issued such regulations the end of July. The subcommittee will be reviewing the rules and their implementation carefully.

In the same area, the bill also requires the Secretary to encourage the formation of a private, non-profit corporation to support and promote greater employee awareness of the drug and alcohol problem and to encourage peer intervention. This innovative provision was the result of the initiative of the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. LENT].

As I indicated above, the bill will also improve the safety protections available to railroad employees. The current law protects from retaliation those employees who report safety violations or who refuse to work under certain limited conditions presenting an imminent danger of death or serious injury. However, the usual remedy is backpay and/or reinstatement, if an employee is suspended or discharged in retaliation. Unfortunately, there is no remedy where an employee is harassed, but not suspended or discharged. This bill would allow such an employee to be awarded appropriate compensation of up to 1 year's pay. This remedy is justified because of the need to ensure safe railroad operations and to protect employees who seek to promote safety.

The bill would also provide standing to employees to sue the Department of Transportation where the Secretary has failed to perform a nondiscretionary enforcement related act or duty and such failure results in a danger of serious injury or death to employees. Concern has been expressed that the FRA has failed to properly enforce the rail safety laws and regulations. This provision would provide a remedy, as the court would be able to compel performance of the nondiscretionary act or duty. I want to emphasize that this remedy would only be available where the Secretary has failed to perform a nondiscretionary act—an act the Secretary is required by law to perform.

The bill also requires the FRA to examine three areas of safety concern—the maintenance, inspection and testing of grade crossing devices the need for qualification standards for employees who inspect and test brakes and inspect freight cars and the adequacy of training for train dispatchers. Several of last year's Amtrak accidents occurred at grade crossings. It is crucial that grade crossing warning devices be adequately inspected and maintained.

Finally, the bill reauthorizes the safety functions of the FRA for 2 years. The bill would specifically reauthorize the state safety participation program. Under this program, half the cost of State safety inspectors are paid for by the Federal Government. There are currently about 102 such State inspectors. The administration has recommended eliminating the funding for this program. If that proposal were implemented, most of these inspectors would be eliminated and rail safety would suffer.

This bill is also fiscally responsible. It authorizes a total of $40.9 million for fiscal year 1986, compared to a total appropriation of $41.6 million for rail safety programs in 1985—a reduction of $700,000 from last year's appropriation. While the bill exceeds the administration's budget request of $37.7 million for fiscal year 1986, the difference is primarily due to the administration's proposal to eliminate funding for the State safety participation program—a proposal that has been continually rejected by Congress. The bill also authorizes a total of $42.5 million for fiscal year 1987.

This is an important bill to improve the safety of rail operations, and I urge its passage.

Mr. GRAY of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLORIO. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GRAY of Illinois. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman for his hard work on this bill and say that in the State of Illinois we have had an increasing number of rail accidents. So I think this legislation is badly needed. I just wanted to commend the gentleman for his outstanding work and ask my colleagues to vote down the pending amendments and vote for safety on our railroads.

Mr. FLORIO. I want to thank the gentleman and just point out that there are already, in my opinion, an inadequate number of rail safety inspectors. To seriously consider reducing the number that we have out there as apparently some would do here today, is the height of folly, and is not good policy.

I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. GRAY of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FLORIO. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GRAY of Illinois. I agree with the gentleman implicitly. As I said, the accident rate in Illinois has been on the increase and we certainly need more people, not less to provide safety on the rails. Thank you.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself much time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 2372, the Railroad Safety Improvement Act of 1985.

H.R. 2372 reauthorizes the Federal Railroad Administration's Rail Safety Program for 2 years. The bill also authorizes funds for conducting safety research and development and for the State Rail Safety Participation Program. The State participation program reimburses States for expenses associated with the employment of State safety inspectors.

I strongly support the reauthorization of the Federal Railroad Administration's Rail Safety Program. In recent years, the safety of railroad operations has greatly improved. Train accidents decreased by approximately 1 percent in 1984, compared to 1983. When adjusted for train miles, which increased by 7.1 percent, the decrease in train accidents was 7.4 percent. This improvement can be attributed to the joint efforts of rail labor and management, along with the guidance of the Federal Railroad Administration.

Despite these positive trends, serious safety hazards still exist. We have all become increasingly troubled by the recent rash of head-on collisions which has occurred on our Nation's railroads. I hope that the FRA will continue to work to improve rail safety.

Secretary Dole recently issued a rule addressing the problems which have resulted from drug and alcohol use by rail employees. I commend Secretary Dole for taking such action. The rule prohibits on-duty alcohol and drug use, and authorizes toxicological testing of employees when there is reason to suspect impairment.

Section 11 of H.R. 2372 requires the Secretary of Transportation to encourage the establishment of a non-profit corporation within the rail industry to foster prevention of alcohol and drug abuse. This program would be a private initiative, funded by voluntary contributions from rail employees with matching grants from rail carriers. The FRA will be authorized to provide startup support in an amount not to exceed $100,000 for this initiative. I am hopeful that this program, in conjunction with the rule issued by the Secretary, will be effective in preventing drug and alcohol use by rail employees.

While I am supportive of reauthorizing the rail safety programs, I am, however, troubled by the concerns raised by the administration about this bill, specifically with respect to sections 6 and 7.

Section 6 provides that the Secretary of Transportation shall not disclose the name of any rail employee who provides information to the Secretary with respect to an alleged safety violation. Presently, the Federal Railroad Administration does not disclose an employee's name unless an inspector did not see the safety violation and no other evidence of the violation is present. In such a situation the employee is given the opportunity to submit a statement describing the safety violation. The employee is informed before he submits the statement that the statement will be shown to the rail carrier as the only evidence of violation. The FRA believes that, if section 6 were enacted, it would not have adequate evidence to present a complaint to a rail carrier if no other evidence was available.

Another section the administration objects to is section 7, the so-called standing provision. This provision would give a rail worker standing to bring suit in Federal district court against the Secretary of Transportation for failure to enforce any violation of the Federal safety laws.

The effect of section 7 would be the creation of a dual system of enforcement for Federal railroad safety laws—one, in an administrative forum, and a second in a Federal district court. This dual system would expose the Federal Railroad Administration to enormous time-consuming and expensive litigation.

It would also seriously impair the exercises of discretion by safety inspectors in the field by constantly second guessing their judgment. Currently, the agility of inspectors to threaten imposition of a fine is a strong incentive for carriers to make immediate repairs of safety violations. The threat of litigation would not encourage prompt correction of the discovered safety defect. Instead it could actually increase the potential of injury to workers.

In conclusion, while I support H.R. 2372, I have serious reservations about the wisdom of sections 6 and 7.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENT. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BOEHLERT. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I rise in support of the Dowdy amendment to extend the Redeemable Preference Share Program by 2 years. I am very familiar with this program as a regional railroad, headquartered in Cooperstown, NY, which is within my congressional district, is in the process of applying for repayable Federal financing to undertake a major rehabilitation project in New York and New Jersey.

This program is vital and it is cost effective. We well know in Congress, that preserving an essential transportation service is very expensive. The trucking and barge industries have been indirectly subsidized by massive Federal programs of construction on our highways and waterways. In the case of Conrail, a $7-billion subsidy was largely devoted to rebuilding that railroad. Conrail is a success and is about to be transferred into the private sector. With the 505 Program, we have made a small beginning at making financing available to regional railroads for the same kind of rehabilitation projects undertaken by Conrail. These moneys are not a grant as in the case of most other transportation infrastructure programs, but are repayable, equity financing. The funds will be returned to the Government.

John Riley, the Federal Railroad Administrator, has consistently focused attention on the need for regional railroads. Mr. Riley is correct in this matter. These small carriers are acquiring lines that are being abandoned by the larger carriers and are preserving essential service to shippers. However, these lines were often left in a deteriorated condition and there is an urgent need for public financing if these lines are not to be lost.

The Delaware Otsego Railroad [DO] is a prototype of this new breed of carrier. The DO began as a 16-mile shortline—the Cooperstown and Charlotte Valley—which had been abandoned by the Delaware & Hudson Railroad. It has grown into a 500-mile system, competing with Conrail into the New York City area. It has been patched together through lines that Conrail would have abandoned, contracts for haulage over existing Conrail lines, and acquisition of the Susquehanna Railroad in New Jersey, which a Federal judge had ordered liquidated. The DO is an amazing success story. However, many of the lines, especially on the Susquehanna, were left in bad repair by the previous owners. For several months now, the DO has been negotiating 505 repayable financing with the Federal Railroad Administration for critical rehabilitation projects, which will improve the safety and operating standards of the railroad. It is my hope that this application will be approved within the next 45 days. An extension of the program beyond the fiscal year is important to the DO.

The 505 Program is carefully designed for the improvement of facilities where private money is not available at a reasonable cost and there are public benefits. While repayment is required on a set schedule, the interest rate is low and the railroad does not begin repayment for a period of 6 years. This delayed payment schedule is especially important in giving these small carriers the breathing room necessary to revitalize their systems in order to provide superior services to shippers.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON], a very valuable member of the subcommittee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I thank the chairman of the subcommittee for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I first would like to commend the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FLORIO], and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LENT] for their efforts on this bill.

Mr. Chairman, this is an important piece of legislation. First of all, it is a compromise between labor and management. It is a bill that improves rail safety protection for employees. It reauthorizes the Federal Safety Program. It protects employees against harassment for reporting safety violations. It requires the FRA to address critical safety problems, of ensuring safe grade-crossing devices and adequately trained dispatchers. It provides standing to employees in limited circumstances to go to court to insure that safety laws are enforced.

Once again, this bill has strong labor and management support. I am a strong supporter of this bill. However, I would just like to point out one issue in this bill that disturbs me and many other Members from Western States who both for substantive and sentimental reasons regret the death of an important member of a train, and that is the caboose.

The caboose in Western circles has been a traditional part of any kind of rail program, and regrettably labor and management have concluded that for safety reasons and because of technology, the elimination of the caboose, the brakeman who for many years as part of lore was lionized for maintaining the safety of the train, is now going to become extinct.

I had contemplated offering an amendment requiring the Secretary of Transportation to give reasons as to why this decision, in the long run, is in the best interests of the country. I have been notified that if I had offered this amendment it would jeopardize some sensitive negotiations; it would open a can of worms that, because of the importance of this bill, should not be opened up at this time, so I will not be offering it, regrettably, because I question, as many in New Mexico, many railroad workers in New Mexico and other States, I know, that the caboose is shown to be safe, that technology replacing the brakeman, perhaps, may not be the best course of action.

But I will not be offering this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I would just like to have the reassurance of both my friends and colleagues, the chairman of the subcommittee and the ranking member, that they will monitor this issue closely to ensure that this has been the proper decision.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. FLORIO. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman can rest assured that all aspects of safety are the prime concern of this subcommittee and we will certainly be tracking this item, as we will be tracking all other items involving the safety of railroad operations.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I thank the chairman.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LENT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like to join with the chairman in reassuring the gentleman from New Mexico that we have not forgotten the caboose. We share the gentleman's nostalgia concerning the end of the use of the caboose by rail carriers. We know that the caboose is an important element of the landscape in New Mexico. We are asking some of the railroads, that traverse the gentleman's State, if they would please paint the last car of their train red so the gentleman will have some simile, at least, of the caboose.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I thank my colleague.

My concerns are addressed, but I will hope that not only my two colleagues, but the Secretary of Transportation and the unions and management that somehow think that this is the right decision, although many of their workers, the people out in the field, question it, whether in fact we have done the right thing and that we will have the opportunity in future years to redress this decision if it has been a bad one.

Mr. Chairman, I will not be offering an amendment to require that the Secretary of Transportation conduct an investigation of whether the caboose provides sufficient enhancements to rail safety to warrant their continued use on freight trains.

Mr. Chairman, the State corporation commission of New Mexico has concluded that the elimination of the caboose would open the State up to liability suits if a railroad accident within the State was traced to the absence of a caboose. The New Mexico Corporation Commission is considering requiring cabooses on all runs by the Santa Fe and Southern Pacific Railroad, which will soon merge. Mr. Chairman, I would quote Mr. Alex Valdez, assistant counsel to the New Mexico Corporation Commission, who believes that, "the caboose is a matter of health and safety." Mr. Joe Bailey, a union official that represents Santa Fe trainmen notes that while the company says their trackside indicators have taken the place of the man on the caboose:

The problem is that no machine can take the place of an experienced brakeman. Some brakemen smell axle grease overheating before any of the trackside scanners picked up the problem.

Mr. Chairman, before we eliminate the caboose, I feel it is incumbent upon us to ensure that we do not compromise the health and safety of our railroad workers. My amendment would simply direct DOT to examine this concern and report back its findings—it is my belief that in some instances the caboose is not only desirable but that it contributes to rail safety.

THE HOMELY CABOOSE BECOMES FOCUS OF NEW MEXICO DISPUTE

(By Iver Peterson)

SANTA FE, NM, April 28.—The homely caboose, subject of nursery stories and the focus of children's waving hands, has become the object of debate about railroad safety here.

The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway, like most others, is slowly dropping cabooses from its runs, maintaining that modern electronics have eliminated the need for a brakeman and a conductor to bring up the rear of a freight train.

Under an agreement with its unions, the company has already dropped the familiar little car with the cupola on top from about 25 percent of its trips. But New Mexico, under pressure from railroad unions, is considering regulations that would require cabooses on all runs by the Santa Fe and the Southern Pacific Railroad, which are to merge soon.

Railroad officals say that adding cabooses in New Mexico would eat up the savings realized from eliminating them elsewhere. But some New Mexico officials say the state would be open to liability suits if railroad accidents within the state was traced to the absence of a caboose.

MATTER OF HEALTH AND SAFETY

It is a matter of "health and safety," said Alex Valdez, assistant general counsel to the state Corporation Commission, which regulates transportation within the state. "The question basically comes down to the benefit of the caboose versus the technology that is available to do the same job of monitoring railroad safety."

The commission is expected to issue its regulations soon.

Since brakemen first started using barrels as crude observation posts on the roofs of freight cars, sometime after the Civil War, the caboose has been the post for men monitoring the air pressure in braking systems, watching for dragging equipment, looking out for hazardous load shifts and, most important, checking car axles for overheated bearings that can lead to derailments.

Since those days, said Michael Haverty of the Santa Fe's operations office in Chicago, those functions can be better and more cheaply performed by track-side sensors that scan the trains as they pass.

"I used to belong to the union and my dad was a conductor, so I understand the union's position," Mr. Haverty remarked. "But I look at it from a business standpoint, and that is that if you've got something back there that you don't absolutely need, if you've got the electronics that we've been using for 10 years to do the same thing, then you no longer need to haul a caboose along behind you."

But Joe Bailey, an official of the union that represents the Santa Fe's trainmen, sees it differently.

"The company says their trackside indicators have taken the place of the man on the caboose, which would be well and good if their trackside indicators worked," said Mr. Bailey, vice general chairman of the United Transportation Union in Overland Park, Kansas. "The problem is that no machine can take the place of an experienced brakeman."

Mr. Bailey asserted, for example, that some brakemen had smelled axle bearings overheating before any of the trackside scanners picked up the problem.

The Association of American Railroads estimates that it costs 65 cents a mile to operate a 21-ton caboose, and that railroads could save some $400 million a year if they were dropped.

For many years the caboose also served as the conductor's rolling office and as a bunkhouse for the train crews. The railroads argue that computerized record-keeping and the practice of putting train crews up in motels have eliminated those reasons for retaining the 12,000 cabooses railroad association estimates are still in use.

That view was underscored by a special Presidential commission appointed in 1982 to investigate the prospect of caboose-less trains.

The commission was appointed as a part of a mandatory cooling-off period to forestall a threatened railroad strike. It supported the railroads' contention that new equipment would allow a safe operation of trains without cabooses.

Mr. Haverty of the Santa Fe line said the caboose-less trains run since 1984 have traveled "thousands of miles between Chicago and California without incident."

"There's nothing unsafe about it at all," he said, "but when the unions throw in their scare tactics that you're going to have a derailment and all, it can create these problems.

AMENDMENT TO H.R. 2372 OFFERED BY MR. RICHARDSON

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. 12. CABOOSE STUDY.

(a) STUDY.—The Secretary of Transportation shall conduct a study of whether cabooses provide sufficient enhancements to rail safety to warrant their continued use on freight trains.

(b) REPORT.—The Secretary of Transportation shall transmit a report containing the results of the study conducted under subsection (a) to the Congress within one year after the date of enactment of this Act.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I thank both the gentleman from New York [Mr. LENT] and the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. FLORIO] for their work on this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the reauthorization of this bill because I happen to be one of those unlucky Congressmen who had one of the three most recent and worst train accidents occur in my district. Had this bill been law, that accident might not have happened.

On September 28, 1982, in Livingston, LA, in my congressional district, a 100-car Illinois Central Gulf freight train carrying hazardous chemicals derailed, causing hundreds of thousands of dollars in immediate physical damage to property. This accident was the direct result of alcohol abuse; $13.8 million in property damage occurred, making it the most costly alcohol-related train accident in history.

While, fortunately, there were no fatalities, the accident did produce the release of hazardous materials from the breached tank cars that resulted in evacuation of the entire town of Livingston, LA. The evacuation displaced over 3,000 people for more than 2 weeks. It caused untold economic loss to businesses along the site of the derailment, and Livingston is only now, some 3 years later, recovering from that accident.

Investigations into the derailment revealed that the engineer and the head brakeman were indeed intoxicated and had a history of previous alcohol abuse. A railroad clerk unfamiliar with operating a train was at the controls.

On July 31, 1985, the Secretary of Transportation, Elizabeth Dole, announced new safety rules for the railroad industry to prohibit alcohol and drug abuse on the job. It is my belief that these rules address the problem in a responsible fashion, as does this legislation.

It is coincidental that I received a letter just a week ago from a constituent in Livingston, LA, still remembering this accident almost 3 years later, talking about these rules and searching for safeguards. As far as I am concerned, this accident was the result of criminal negligence, to have 2 people intoxicated and operating a 100-car-long train carrying hazardous substances.

It happened. I guess the only thing we can do here in Government is to address that complete stupidity and inexcusable negligence by tightening up the rules and operations of the Nation's railroads. I compliment this legislation for doing that, but I cannot help but agree with this lady. Why do we have to have these rules to begin with? How did this even happen? But once it did, let us move on and try to do the best we can to prevent it from happening in the future.

One very important and commendable aspect of the regulations is the provision whereby an employee with a drug or alcohol problem may seek out one-time treatment without penalty through the employee treatment program maintained by his company. This is a signal to the troubled employee that help is available for the asking without the loss of his job. However, the other tough provisions dealing with abuse incidents let the employee know that he faces a serious responsibility in owning up to his problem, as reporting to work under the influence of any kind of abuse substance will no longer be tolerated.

Therefore, I urge the adoption of this authorization bill so that these very necessary programs can get underway and we can avoid the kind of horrendous accident that occurred in my congressional district 3 years ago.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2372, the Railroad Safety Improvement Act. I would like to commend the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Commerce, Transportation and Tourism [Mr. FLORIO] and for the Congressman from New York [Mr. LENT], the ranking minority member, for bringing this important measure to our attention.

H.R. 2372 presents a comprehensive approach in upgrading rail safety. Improving railroad safety by adoption of this act will help to preserve the railroad as an important option for travelers, shippers, and others for whom automobiles, trucks, and airplanes do not provide a viable means of transportation.

Included in H.R. 2372 is a provision which protects from discrimination those employees who report safety violations. H.R. 2372 provides a remedy in a case where an employee is subjected to a form of discrimination which does not involve pay. In these cases, such as when an employee is subjected to harassment due to his report of a safety violation, an arbitration board may award the employee up to 1 year's pay.

H.R. 2372 further protects employees by prohibiting the FRA from revealing the name of an employee who reports a safety violation, unless the matter is referred to the Attorney General for enforcement. In addition, the bill grants standing to employees to bring civil action against the DOT to perform an enforcement-related act or duty under Federal railroad safety laws.

Employee protection provisions such as these provide a significant incentive for employees to report safety infractions. In this manner, H.R. 2372 is cleverly designed to improve railroad safety by attacking the problem as soon as it occurs. There is no better place to begin with safety improvement than with the employees themselves.

As ranking minority member of the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control, I am especially pleased with provisions in this bill which address the alcohol and drug problem in railroad operations.

H.R. 2372 requires the Department of Transportation [DOT] to take steps which will ensure the prevention of alcohol and drug abuse among those involved in railroad operations, a problem which has been identified as a major contributing factor in several recent rail accidents. I am pleased to note here that the FRA has already implemented a final regulation which addresses the alcohol and drug abuse problem, a welcome signal that the full magnitude of this problem has finally been recognized.

The bill also requires DOT to encourage the establishment by the private sector of a nonprofit corporation which will support and promote peer intervention, treatment of employees, awareness programs, and improved utilization of employee drug and alcohol assistance programs. If such an organization is established within 90 days after adoption of this bill, DOT is authorized to provide up to $100,000 in support. It is my sincere hope that the private sector will cooperate with this initiative, and I urge other industries to follow suit by establishing similar drug and alcohol programs for their employees.

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this important measure.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, each section of the bill is considered as having been read for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

The Clerk will designate section 1.

The text of section 1 is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Railroad Safety Improvement Act of 1985".

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of the bill be printed in the RECORD and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The text of the remainder of the bill is as follows:

SEC. 2. PREVENTION OF ALCOHOL AND DRUG USE IN RAILROAD OPERATIONS.

The Secretary of Transportation shall, within 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act, issue a final rule or regulation to ensure the prevention of alcohol and drug use in railroad operations.

SEC. 3. GRADE CROSSING SIGNAL SYSTEM SAFETY.

Section 202 of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 431) is amended by adding at the end a new subsection as follows:

"(l) The Secretary shall, within 180 days after the date of enactment of the Railroad Safety Improvement Act of 1985, issue such rules, regulations, orders, and standards as may be necessary to ensure the safe maintenance, inspection, and testing of signal systems and devices at railroad highway grade crossings.".

SEC. 4. POWER BRAKE AND FREIGHT CAR INSPECTIONS.

Section 202 of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 431), as amended by section 3 of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end a new subsection as follows:

"(m) The Secretary shall, within 180 days after the date of enactment of the Railroad Safety Improvement Act of 1985, issue such rules, regulations, orders, and standards as may be necessary to define qualification standards for employees who conduct railroad power brake inspections and tests and railroad freight car inspections required under the Federal railroad safety laws, as such term is defined under section 212(e), or under any regulation issued under such laws.".

SEC. 5. DISPATCHER TRAINING.

Section 202 of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 431), as amended by sections 3 and 4 of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(n)(1) The Secretary shall, within 180 days after the date of enactment of the Railroad Safety Improvement Act of 1985, conduct and complete an inquiry into whether training standards are necessary for those involved in dispatching passenger and other trains.

"(2) Upon the completion of such inquiry, the Secretary shall report the results of such inquiry to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate along with the Secretary's recommendations, and if the Secretary recommends that rules, regulations, orders, or standards are necessary, the Secretary shall promptly initiate appropriate rulemaking proceedings.".

SEC. 6. PROTECTION OF EMPLOYEES AGAINST DISCRIMINATION.

(a) EXPEDITED PROCEDURES.—Section 212(c)(1) of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 441(c)(1)) is amended by inserting ", and any proceeding with respect to such dispute, grievance, or claim shall be expedited by the Adjustment Board (or any division or delegate thereof) or any other board of adjustment created under section 3 of the Railway Labor Act so that such dispute, grievance, or claim is resolved within 180 days after its filing with such Adjustment Board or other board of adjustment" before the period.

(b) COMPENSATION.—Section 212(c)(2) of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 441(c)(2)) is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "If the violation of subsection (a) or (b) is a form of discrimination other than discharge, suspension, or any other discrimination with respect to pay, and no other remedy is available under this subsection, the Adjustment Board (or any division or delegate thereof) or any other board of adjustment created under section 3 of the Railway Labor Act may award the aggrieved employee appropriate compensation up to the equivalent of 1 year's pay for such employee.".

(c) DISCLOSURE OF NAMES.—Section 212 of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 441) is amended by adding at the end a new subsection as follows:

"(f)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the Secretary shall not disclose the name of any employee of a railroad who has provided information with respect to an alleged violation of this title, any other Federal railroad safety law, or any rule, regulation, order, or standard issued under this title or any other Federal railroad safety law.

"(2) The Secretary shall disclose to the Attorney General the name of any employee described in paragraph (1) who has provided information with respect to a matter being referred to the Attorney General for enforcement under this title, any other Federal railroad safety law, or any rule, regulation, order, or standard issued under this title or any other Federal railroad safety law.".

SEC. 7. STANDING TO REQUIRE THE PERFORMANCE OF NONDISCRETIONARY ACTS.

The Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 is amended by inserting after section 212 the folowing new section:

"SEC. 212A. CIVIL ACTION BY EMPLOYEES.

"(a) Except as provided in subsection (b), any employee of a rail carrier or any authorized representative for collective bargaining of a craft or class of such employees may commence a civil action against the Secretary of Transportation to compel the Secretary to perform any act or duty which is not discretionary and which is related to enforcement under the Federal railroad safety laws, as such term is defined in section 212(e), if the failure to perform such act or duty creates a danger of serious injury or death to such employee or employees.

"(b) No civil action may be commenced under subsection (a) before the expiration of 60 days after the plaintiff has given notice to the Secretary of the alleged failure of the Secretary to perform an act or duty which is the basis for such action, including specific reference to the alleged violation or violations of the Federal railroad safety laws involved. Notice under this subsection shall be given in such manner as the Secretary shall prescribe by rule.

"(c) Any civil action under subsection (a) shall be brought in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, or the United States district court for the judicial district where the alleged violation or violations of the Federal railroad safety laws has occurred or is occurring.

"(d) When two or more civil actions brought under subsection (a) involving the same issues or violations are pending in two or more judicial districts, such pending actions may, upon application of the Secretary to a court in which any such action is brought, be consolidated for trial by order (issued after giving all parties reasonable notice and opportunity to be heard) of such court and tried in—

"(1) any district which is selected by the Secretary and in which one of such actions is pending,

"(2) a district which is agreed upon by stipulation between all of the parties to such actions and in which one of such actions is pending, or

"(3) a district which is selected by the court and in which one of such actions is pending.

The court issuing such an order shall give prompt notification of the order to the other courts in which the civil actions consolidated under the order are pending.".

SEC. 8. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Section 214(c) of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 444(c)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1) by striking out "and" after "September 30, 1983,", and by inserting ", not to exceed $27,300,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and not to exceed $28,500,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987" before the period;

(2) in paragraph (2) by striking out "and" after "September 30, 1983,", and by inserting ", not to exceed $3,100,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and not to exceed $3,200,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987" before the period;

(3) in paragraph (3) by striking out "and" after "September 30, 1983,", and by inserting "not to exceed $10,400,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and not to exceed $10,800,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987," after "September 30, 1984,"; and

(4) (b) adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4) For the purpose of rail planning for Toledo, Ohio, including planning for improving the safety of rail operations and reducing conflicts between rail and highway traffic, there are authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $100,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and September 30, 1987. The total amount appropriated under this paragraph for both such fiscal years combined shall not exceed $100,000.".

SEC. 9. EMPLOYEE ASSISTANCE PROGRAM EVALUATION.

(a) REPORT.—The Secretary of Transportation shall conduct an evaluation of any employee assistance program with respect to drug and alcohol abuse run by the Consolidated Rail Corporation and shall, after consultation with representatives of the crafts or classes of employees covered by such program and with the Consolidated Rail Corporation, report to the Congress within 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act. Such report shall contain an evaluation of the effectiveness of such program in helping employees with drug and alcohol abuse problems, and shall include any recommendations of the Secretary for the improvement of such program.

(b) SIMULTANEOUS TRANSMITTAL TO CONRAIL.—The report submitted to the Congress under subsection (a) shall be transmitted simultaneously to the Consolidated Rail Corporation.

SEC. 10 ENFORCEMENT OF THE SECRETARY'S ACTIONS.

Section 208(a) of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 437(a)) is amended by striking out "enforce such orders" and inserting in lieu thereof "enforce any orders, directives, and subpoenas of the Secretary under this title".

SEC. 11. ALCOHOL AND DRUG ABUSE ASSISTANCE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF CORPORATION.—To foster the prevention of alcohol and drug abuse within the railroad industry, the Secretary of Transportation shall encourage the establishment of a private, nonprofit corporation, financially supported by individual railroad employees and railroad companies, to support and promote—

(1) vigilant peer intervention to avoid violations among railroad employees of rule G of the Association of American Railroads' Standard Code of Operating Rules;

(2) early identification and treatment of railroad employees addicted to alcohol or drug;

(3) programs to foster awareness and prevention of alcohol or drug abuse within the railroad industry; and

(4) improved utilization of effective Employee Assistance Programs with respect to alcohol and drug abuse.

If such a corporation is established within 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Transportation may provide support, including office space, equipment, postage, printing, and the development of educational materials, of a value of not to exceed $100,000.

(b) OTHER REQUIREMENT MAINTAINED.—The requirement set forth in subsection (a) shall not relieve the Secretary of any requirement set forth in section 2 of this Act.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FLORIO

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FLORIO: Page 10, after line 14, add the following new section:

SEC. 12. UNSAFE FACILITIES.

The Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 431 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 215. UNSAFE FACILITIES.

"(a) The National Railroad Passenger Corporation (hereafter in this section referred to as 'Amtrak'), or the owner of any facility which presents a danger to the employees, passengers, or property of Amtrak, may petition the Secretary for assistance to the owner of such facility for relocation or other remedial measures to minimize or eliminate such danger under this section.

"(b) If the Secretary determines that—

"(1) a facility which is the subject of a petition under subsection (a) presents a danger of death or serious injury to any employee or passenger of Amtrak or serious damage to any property of Amtrak; and

"(2) the owner of such facility should not be expected to bear the cost of relocating or other remedial measures necessary to minimize or eliminate such danger, the Secretary shall recommend to the Congress that the Congress, as a part of its periodic reauthorizations of this Act, authorize funding, by reimbursement or otherwise, for such relocation or other remedial measures.

"(c) Petitions may be submitted under subsection (a) of this section with respect to any relocation or remedial measures undertaken on or after January 1, 1978.".

Mr. FLORIO (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to offer this amendment on behalf of the distinguished gentleman from Florida, the chairman of the Rules Committee.

This amendment is similar to an amendment the House adopted last year on the rail safety bill. It merely provides a procedure where Amtrak or the owner of a facility may petition the Secretary of Transportation for assistance for the owner of the facility where the Secretary determines the facility presents a danger of death or serious injury to an employee or passenger of Amtrak or a danger of serious damage to Amtrak property and the owner should not be expected to bear the costs of remedial measures, including relocation.

If the Secretary believes assistance is justified, the Secretary must then recommend to Congress authorization for such assistance. Congress could then act on the Secretary's recommendation.

I urge support of this amendment.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLORIO. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

This amendment addresses a specific situation in Miami, FL. I believe it is virtually identical to an amendment which was agreed on last year?

Mr. FLORIO. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FLORIO].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DOWDY OF MISSISSIPPI

Mr. DOWDY of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DOWDY of Mississippi: At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. 12. SAFETY FINANCING.

The Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 215. SAFETY FINANCING.

"For the purpose of improving safe rail operations and improving rail safety, the Secretary shall continue to provide financial assistance for facilities rehabilitation and improvement under sections 505 through 510 of the Railroad Revitalization and Regulatory Reform Act of 1976 (45 U.S.C. 825-830) until September 30, 1987.".

Mr. DOWDY (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOWDY of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, today I am offering an amendment to H.R. 2372, the Federal Railroad Safety Authorization Act of 1985. My amendment will reauthorize sections 505 through 510 of the Railroad Revitalization and Regulatory Reform Act of 1976, commonly known as the 4R Act, through September 30, 1987. This program was designed for the purpose of improving safe rail operations and improving rail safety in our Nation.

In its early stages, funding for this program was used to defer maintenance on large class I railroads. The Boston & Maine and the Illinois Central Gulf are just two of the railroads which undertook critical mainline rehabilitation work with these funds which were loaned to them by the Government. In more recent years some railroads have acquired several divested lines which suffered neglect because they did not carry enough traffic to justify even routine maintenance by the larger carriers. Thus these transferred lines are often in bad shape and in need of rehabilitation.

My amendment is directed toward these regional and feeder light density operations which are the key to preserving our national system of rail service.

Currently, Mr. Chairman, there are several regional railroad 505 applications in process, some of them in Iowa. The Hardland Railroad has an application pending for loans for rehabilitation. In Louisiana there are funds for an acquisition of lines from the Southern Pacific by a small railroad. In Maine, the Bangor & Aroostook has an application for funds to be borrowed for rehabilitation assistance. In Michigan, the Detroit & Mackinaw Railroad is nearing completion of an application for loans under 505 funding. The Ann Arbor Railroad has an application pending. In Missouri, there is a requirement for continued rehabilitation for the Missouri-Kansas-Texas line between Ladue and the Kansas border. This might become involved in a 505 application.

In New Jersey, the Susquehanna Railroad is in the final stages of a 505 application for rehabilitation in New York and New Jersey. In New York, the Susquehanna Railroad application is for 505 assistance and was given priority in last year's appropriation under the language by the junior Member of the other body.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, the importance of the railroad to the communities and shippers it serves cannot be underestimated. We also have to consider our Nation's defense needs and the involvement of the railroads there. Because this vital program is due to expire at the end of this month, I would hope that my colleagues would join me in supporting this extension amendment.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWDY of Mississippi. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to support this amendment. The gentleman is correct, rehabilitation of our railroads is a very important part of safety. This is a loan program that needs to be reauthorized. The extension the gentleman seeks is highly desirable, and I am pleased to support it.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWDY of Mississippi. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

On the subject of this amendment, as I read it, it does not require any authorization for increased spending. Presently, there is, as the gentleman, I am sure, knows, $18 million in unobligated funds in the program which will not be available for the rehabilitation of railroads unless the program is extended through the medium of the gentleman's amendment. Is that correct?

Mr. DOWDY of Mississippi. That is my understanding.

Mr. LENT. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to this amendment. I understand that it is going to be very helpful to many of the States in the Northeast, particularly in the event of the sale of Conrail. I understand that there are a number of smaller railroads which might qualify to apply under this program for financial assistance to rehabilitate rail lines.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWDY of Mississippi. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOWDY], and I rise in support of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by my colleague from Mississippi, Mr. DOWDY.

Extending the authorization of the section 505 program from September 30, 1985 to September 30, 1987 will provide the opportunity for Gulf & Mississippi Railroad to secure badly needed funding for a rehabilitation project on its 713-mile rail line. The G&M is such a vital transportation source through the eastern half of Mississippi.

It serves approximately 300 shippers and is expected to haul 80,000 carloads of woodchips, lumber, furniture, chemicals, paper products and other materials each year. It employs 230 people.

Further evidence of its importance is the fact that the area served by G&M has no north-south interstate highway system, nor does it have another rail carrier. For that reason, it is a necessity for the G&M Railroad to secure the funds to improve service by replacing worn rails, ties and ballast that will reduce the likelihood of derailments.

The 3-year program will cost $20 million. G&M already has arranged to borrow $5 million from a private lender. But further funding sources are not available to G&M because lenders are willing to lend only on present traffic levels, not levels projected for the future.

That is where section 505 of the Railroad Revitalization and Regulatory Reform Act of 1976 comes in. The redeemable preference share program was set up for the specific purpose of providing rehabilitation funds for railroad lines. It operates much like a loan program. No funding is provided until it is determined that the firm can repay it.

G&M has applied for $8 million under this program, but the problem is that the program's authority expires at the end of this month. That is why we are proposing a two year extension. The extra 2 years will allow G&M a chance to pursue its efforts to secure funding and begin this rehabilitation project.

Mr. Chairman, the G&M Railroad is a very sound operation and is providing a great service to the communities in my district and throughout eastern Mississippi. Its projected rehabilitation program will enable G&M to modernize its operation so that it can continue to serve in an efficient manner. I urge adoption of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOWDY].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WALKER

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALKER: Page 7, strike out lines 18 through 23.

Renumber the succeeding paragraphs accordingly.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, everyone in the House, of course, is for rail safety and recognizes that there are meritorious sections of this bill and that the overall program does deserve to be reauthorized. The question is whether or not we ought to begin the practice of adding spending that the administration says that it does not want in this program.

I think we have to recognize that this is not an administration that has had a bad record on rail safety; 1984, according to the account I have here, was the best in history for the railroad industry in terms of reported accidents. They were the lowest ever. Yet the administration says that there is about $3 million of spending in this particular bill that it does not need to carry out its program.

It was suggested earlier in this debate that by cutting out some of the spending, as I am suggesting we do, we are going to reduce the number of rail inspectors. That is just not true. What we will end up doing is cutting out the subsidy that we give to the States for rail inspectors. To think that we are going to cut out that number of rail inspectors is to suggest that federalism does not work, the States are irresponsible, and in fact what they are going to do is drop the obligation in this particular case. I do not think that is the case. I think that the States will maintain their ability to conduct rail inspections. They will fund this program, as they should. We are talking about their own people, and they will fund the program.

Look, we are in pretty bad shape economically in this country. We are in bad shape economically because we spend money day after day, week after week, and year after year right here. The States are not in great shape, but they are in a good deal better shape than we are, and we have got to begin to look at what is possible within the limitations that we have.

What my amendment suggests is that we can cut this bill by $3.2 million which the administration says that it does not need. We know that when we brought this bill to the floor, we had to bring it out here under a budget waiver, so we do not know how it impacts on the budget we just passed the other day. By a vote of 244 to 109 we voted to waive the budget here a few minutes ago. Now, these are all the Members in this body who were back home telling their constituents about all their fears about the deficit that is their concern here in Washington. They just voted 2½ to 1 to waive the Budget Act so we could take this bill up.

What I am suggesting is that now that we have brought the bill up under a waiver of the Budget Act, maybe we at least ought to comply with the administration's budget request that suggests there is $3 million in here that we do not need to spend.

Three million dollars does not sound like a lot of money to a lot of people around here. It is a lot of money as far as I am concerned, but in terms of the overall perspective, people say that is not a lot of money. But it is 12½ percent of this bill. It is 12½ percent of the bill that we are considering. That is a good chunk.

That is where we have got to stop. We are not going to stop spending around here incrementally, we are not going to do it piecemeal; we are going to do it by taking out some of the programs that we can no longer justify in terms of their priority. This is the way of doing it without jeopardizing rail safety. We simply hand back to the States that obligation which is theirs, and that is to have rail inspectors that they pay for themselves and who are their own rail inspectors.

That is all my amendment would do. It saves $3 million, and it seems to me to be perfectly in line with what the American people would want us to do. To suggest that this amendment is not something we should do is to suggest that the States are going to be just totally irresponsible. I do not think that is the case. I do not think there is a record of the States being irresponsible on the issue of rail safety. I think the States will maintain their obligation.

The question before us is whether or not we are going to be irresponsible, whether or not we are going to continue to spend money that we do not have in ever bigger chunks, and the message that I think we got across the board from the American people is that they want to stop that spending. They are tired of spending this country into oblivion. They are tired of spending money that we are passing on as bills to our children, our grandchildren, and our great-grandchildren. They are sick and tired of the process in Congress that always finds ways to justify spending.

This program, like every other program that comes up here, sure, it is meritorious. Everything we bring out here is meritorious in someone's eyes. We do not do these things maliciously, but the fact is that everything adds up to an excuse for spending.

Mr. Chairman, this is one more excuse for spending that we have here. We can save $3 million by adopting this amendment, and I would suggest that we ought to save that $3 million.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the gentleman's amendment on a number of grounds, not the least of which is the representation that somehow this legislation is extravagant spending, which is just not sustained by the facts. In fact, as I indicated in my opening remarks, this authorization bill is an absolute reduction from the amount that Congress last year appropriated for these programs.

In 1985 we spent $41.6 million for rail safety programs. This bill authorizes $40.9 million. That is an absolute reduction of $700,000, even discounting the impact of inflation. So to suggest that somehow the bill that we bring to the floor is an increase is just not accurate.

More important than that, as anyone who reads the newspaper knows, there have been a rash of railroad accidents. If anything, we should be providing for an increase in rail safety. A very important part of rail safety are rail safety inspectors. There is no substitute for walking the track. There is no substitute for having people out there with the experience to see how operations are being conducted. We currently have about 400 railroad safety inspectors across the entire country, Federal and State. The gentleman's amendment would have the effect of reducing 25 percent of that railroad safety inspection capability.

I would also suggest that it may very well be that the gentleman's amendment will result in a greater cost to the Federal Government. If the public and responsible officials in DOT see the potential for reducing by 25 percent the number of railroad safety inspectors, it may very well be that they will feel the need, hopefully they will feel the need, to finance the hundred or so safety inspectors that the States are currently paying for at the rate of 50 percent. They will feel the need to adopt all those inspectors into the Federal program whereby the Federal Government will be responsible for paying 100 percent of the cost.

The gentleman has suggested that he hopes that some of the States will pick up the slack and go and hire those inspectors. I would suggest that we have an inadequate number of inspectors right now. I am not prepared to sit here and hope that those inspectors that will be lost will be picked up by someone else.

I think this is a very inappropriate amendment. We cannot be hoping that safety will not be impacted by this amendment.

I would ask the House to reject the gentleman's amendment and go forward with this legislation that provides for an absolute reduction, that some of us are uncomfortable with, by the way, an absolute reduction in the total authorization for rail safety programs, as contrasted with last year's appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently, a quorum is not present. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 2, rule XXIII, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the pending question following the quorum call. Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

The following Members responded to their names:

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 2372, the Railroad Safety Improvement Act of 1975. This legislation authorizes funds for the Federal Railroad Administration Safety Program, the State Safety Participation Program, and rail safety research and development for fiscal years 1986 and 1987. I am pleased that this bill authorizes funding for fiscal year 1986 at a level approximately $700,000 below the amount appropriated for fiscal year 1985. At a time when Federal deficit spending is spiraling out of control, we must be ready to exercise restraint in all areas of the budget.

The bill requires the Secretary of Transportation to expeditiously issue a final rule to ensure the prevention of alcohol and drug abuse in railroad operations. Alcohol and drug use have been implicated in several recent serious rail accidents, and are recognized as major problems in railroad operations. The bill also requires the FRA to examine several other areas of safety concern, such as grade crossing safety, power brake and freight car inspections and dispatcher training.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, this legislation will add important protections for railroad employees against discrimination for reporting safety violations, by prohibiting the Secretary of Transportation from disclosing the name of any railroad employee who reports a potential safety violation, unless the information provided the FRA results in the matter being referred to the Attorney General. Also, the bill allows compensation awards to employees who have been discriminated against or harassed, but who have not been suspended or dismissed. Currently, these employees have no remedy available. This legislation will help to ensure safe railroad operations and protect employees who seek to further safe practices, and I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting it.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no other amendments, under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. WRIGHT] having assumed the chair, Mr. HUBBARD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2372) authorizing appropriations for carrying out the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 250, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 250, I call up from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 1080), to amend the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 to authorize additional appropriations, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. FLORIO

Mr. FLORIO. Mr Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FLORIO moves to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill, S. 1080, and to insert in lieu thereof the text of H.R. 2372, as passed by the House, as follows:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Railroad Safety Improvement Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. PREVENTION OF ALCOHOL AND DRUG USE IN RAILROAD OPERATIONS.

The Secretary of Transportation shall, within 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act, issue a final rule or regulation to ensure the prevention of alcohol and drug use in railroad operations.

SEC. 3. GRADE CROSSING SIGNAL SYSTEM SAFETY.

Section 202 of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 431) is amended by adding at the end a new subsection as follows:

"(l) The Secretary shall, within 180 days after the date of enactment of the Railroad Safety Improvement Act of 1985, issue such rules, regulations, orders, and standards as may be necessary to ensure the safe maintenance, inspection, and testing of signal systems and devices at railroad highway grade crossings.".

SEC. 4. POWER BRAKE AND FREIGHT CAR INSPECTIONS.

Section 202 of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 431), as amended by action 3 of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end a new subsection as follows:

"(m) The Secretary shall, within 180 days after the date of enactment of the Railroad Safety Improvement Act of 1985, issue such rules, regulations, orders, and standards as may be necessary to define qualification standards for employees who conduct railroad power brake inspections and tests and railroad freight car inspections required under the Federal railroad safety laws, as such term is defined under section 212(e), or under any regulation issued under such laws.".

SEC. 5. DISPATCHER TRAINING.

Section 202 of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 431), as amended by sections 3 and 4 of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(n)(1) The Secretary shall, within 180 days after the date of enactment of the Railroad Safety Improvement Act of 1985, conduct and complete an inquiry into whether training standards are necessary for those involved in dispatching passenger and other trains.

"(2) Upon the completion of such inquiry, the Secretary shall report the results of such inquiry to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate along with the Secretary's recommendations, and if the Secretary recommends that rules, regulations, orders, or standards are necessary, the Secretary shall promptly initiate appropriate rulemaking proceedings.".

SEC. 6. PROTECTION OF EMPLOYEES AGAINST DISCRIMINATION.

(a) EXPEDITED PROCEDURES.—Section 212(c)(1) of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 441(c)(1)) is amended by inserting ", and any proceeding with respect to such dispute, grievance, or claim shall be expedited by the Adjustment Board (or any division or delegate thereof) or any other board of adjustment created under section 3 of the Railway Labor Act so that such dispute, grievance, or claim is resolved within 180 days after its filing with such Adjustment Board or other board of adjustment" before the period.

(b) COMPENSATION.—Section 212(c)(2) of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 441(c)(2)) is amended by adding at the end of the following new sentence: "If the violation of subsection (a) or (b) is a form of discrimination other than discharge, suspension, or any other discrimination with respect to pay, and no other remedy is available under this subsection, the Adjustment Board (or any division or delegate thereof) or any other board of adjustment created under section 3 of the Railway Labor Act may award the aggrieved employee appropriate compensation up to the equivalent of 1 year's pay for such employee.".

(c) DISCLOSURE OF NAMES.—Section 212 of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 441) is amended by adding at the end a new subsection as follows:

"(f)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the Secretary shall not disclose the name of any employee of a railroad who has provided information with respect to an alleged violation of this title, any other Federal railroad safety law, or any rule, regulation, order, or standard issued under this title or any other Federal railroad safety law.

"(2) The Secretary shall disclose to the Attorney General the name of any employee described in paragraph (1) who has provided information with respect to a matter being referred to the Attorney General for enforcement under this title, any other Federal railroad safety law, or any rule, regulation, order, or standard issued under this title or any other Federal railroad safety law.".

SEC. 7. STANDING TO REQUIRE THE PERFORMANCE OF NONDISCRETIONARY ACTS.

The Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 is amended by inserting after section 212 the following new section:

"SEC. 212A. CIVIL ACTION BY EMPLOYEES.

"(a) Except as provided in subsection (b), any employee of a rail carrier or any authorized representative for collective bargining of a craft or class of such employees may commence a civil action against the Secretary of Transportation to compel the Secretary to perform any act or duty which is not discretionary and which is related to enforcement under the Federal railroad safety laws, as such term is defined in section 212(e), if the failure to perform such act or duty creates a danger of serious injury or death to such employee or employees.

"(b) No civil action may be commenced under subsection (a) before the expiration of 60 days after the plaintiff has given notice to the Secretary of the alleged failure of the Secretary to perform an act or duty which is the basis for such action, including specific reference to the alleged violation or violations of the Federal railroad safety laws involved. Notice under this subsection shall be given in such manner as the Secretary shall prescribe by rule.

"(c) Any civil action under subsection (a) shall be brought in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, or the United States district court for the judicial district where the alleged violation or violations of the Federal railroad safety laws has occurred or is occurring.

"(d) When two or more civil actions brought under subsection (a) involving the same issues or violations are pending in two or more judicial districts, such pending actions may, upon application of the Secretary to a court in which any such action is brought, be consolidated for trial by order (issued after giving all parties reasonable notice and opportunity to be heard) of such court and tried in—

"(1) any district which is selected by the Secretary and in which one of such actions is pending,

"(2) a district which is agreed upon by stipulation between all of the parties to such actions and in which one of such actions is pending, or

"(3) a district which is selected by the court and in which one of such actions is pending.

The court issuing such an order shall give prompt notification of the order to the other courts in which the civil actions consolidated under the order are pending.".

SEC. 8. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Section 214(c) of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 444(c)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1) by striking out "and" after "September 30, 1983,", and by inserting ", not to exceed $27,300,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and not to exceed $28,500,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987" before the period;

(2) in paragraph (2) by striking out "and" after "September 30, 1983,", and by inserting ", not to exceed $3,100,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and not to exceed $3,200,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987" before the period;

(3) in paragraph (3) by striking out "and" after "September 30, 1983,", and by inserting "not to exceed $10,400,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and not to exceed $10,800,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987," after "September 30, 1984,"; and

(4) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4) For the purpose of rail planning for Toledo, Ohio, including planning for improving the safety of rail operations and reducing conflicts between rail and highway traffic, there are authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $100,000 for the fiscal years ending September 30, 1986, and September 30, 1987. The total amount appropriated under this paragraph for both such fiscal years combined shall not exceed $100,000.".

SEC. 9. EMPLOYEE ASSISTANCE PROGRAM EVALUATION.

(a) REPORT.—The Secretary of Transportation shall conduct an evaluation of any employee assistance program with respect to drug and alcohol abuse run by the Consolidated Rail Corporation and shall, after consultation with representatives of the crafts or classes of employees covered by such program and with the Consolidated Rail Corporation, report to the Congress within 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act. Such report shall contain an evaluation of the effectiveness of such program in helping employees with drug and alcohol abuse problems, and shall include any recommendations of the Secretary for the improvement of such program.

(b) SIMULTANEOUS TRANSMITTAL TO CONRAIL.—The report submitted to the Congress under subsection (a) shall be transmitted simultaneously to the Consolidated Rail Corporation.

SEC. 10. ENFORCEMENT OF THE SECRETARY'S ACTIONS.

Section 208(a) of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 437(a)) is amended by striking out "enforce such orders" and inserting in lieu thereof "enforce any orders, directives, and subpoenas of the Secretary under this title".

SEC. 11. ALCOHOL AND DRUG ABUSE ASSISTANCE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF CORPORATION.—To foster the prevention of alcohol and drug abuse within the railroad industry, the Secretary of Transportation shall encourage the establishment of a private, nonprofit corporation, financially supported by individual railroad employees and railroad companies, to support and promote—

(1) vigilant peer intervention to avoid violations among railroad employees of rule G of the Association of American Railroads' Standard Code of Operating Rules;

(2) early identification and treatment of railroad employees addicted to alcohol or drugs;

(3) programs to foster awareness and prevention of alcohol or drug abuse within the railroad industry; and

(4) improved utilization of effective Employee Assistance Programs with respect to alcohol and drug abuse.

If such a corporation is established within 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Transportation may provide support, including office space, equipment, postage, printing, and the development of educational materials, of a value of not to exceed $100,000.

(b) OTHER REQUIREMENT MAINTAINED.—The requirement set forth in subsection (a) shall not relieve the Secretary of any requirement set forth in section 2 of this Act.

SEC. 12. UNSAFE FACILITIES.

The Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (45 U.S.C. 431 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 215 UNSAFE FACILITIES.

"(a) The National Railroad Passenger Corporation (hereafter in this section referred to as 'Amtrak'), or the owner of any facility which presents a danger to the employees, passengers, or property of Amtrak, may petition the Secretary for assistance to the owner of such facility for relocation or other remedial measures to minimize or eliminate such danger under this section.

"(b) If the Secretary determines that—

"(1) a facility which is the subject of a petition under subsection (a) presents a danger of death or serious injury to any employee or passenger of Amtrak or serious damage to any property of Amtrak; and

"(2) the owner of such facility should not be expected to bear the cost of relocating or other remedial measures necessary to minimize or eliminate such danger, the Secretary shall recommend to the Congress that the Congress, as a part of its periodic reauthorizations of this Act, authorize funding, by reimbursement or otherwise, for such relocation or other remedial measures.

"(c) Petitions may be submitted under subsection (a) of this section with respect to any relocation or remedial measures undertaken on or after January 1, 1978.".

SEC. 13. SAFETY FINANCING.

The Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 215. SAFETY FINANCING.

"For the purpose of improving safe rail operations and improving rail safety, the Secretary shall continue to provide financial assistance for facilities rehabilitation and improvement under sections 505 through 510 of the Railroad Revitalization and Regulatory Reform Act of 1976 (45 U.S.C. 825-830) until September 30, 1987.".

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the Senate bill was amended so as to read: "An act authorizing appropriations for carrying out the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H.R. 2372) was laid on the table.

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON S.1080

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House insist on the House amendments and ask for a conference with the Senate thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

AUTHORIZING THE CLERK TO MAKE CORRECTIONS IN ENGROSSMENT OF H.R. 2372, RAILROAD SAFETY IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1985

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the engrossment of the bill (H.R. 2372) authorizing appropriations for carrying out the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970, and for other purposes, the Clerk be authorized to correct section numbers, punctuation, and cross-references, and to make such other technical and conforming changes as may be necessary to reflect the actions of the House in amending that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, and to include extraneous matter, on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. CHENEY asked and was given permission to address the House.)

Mr. CHENEY. Mr. Speaker, I have taken this time to ask the distinguished majority leader about the program for next week, and will be happy to yield to him at this point.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would yield, this completes the business for the day and for the week. That being the case, we would ask that there be no session tomorrow, and that when the House adjourn today, it adjourn to meet on Monday.

On Monday, we expect to have action on at least two motions to suspend the rules; one on the Central Valley project and water project in California; the other on a Michigan wilderness bill, and it would be our purpose to postpone votes on those until the following day, Tuesday.

We would meet at noon on Tuesday and have any recorded votes required from the preceding day and take up the military construction authorizations for fiscal year 1986. That would be under an open rule with 2 hours of general debate. We would expect to finish that on Tuesday.

Now, Wednesday and the balance of the week we have four bills for consideration. The House would meet at noon on Wednesday, but at 10 o'clock the balance of the week.

We would expect to take up the foreign assistance appropriation bill, the Department of Transportation Appropriation bill, the National School Lunch Program and Child Nutrition Act, and the Federal Trade Commission reauthorization. All of those subject to the granting of a rule, and of course, conference reports could be brought up at any time.

Mr. CHENEY. I thank the gentleman. I wonder, can the gentleman give us any guidance at all with respect to the conference report on the Department of Defense authorizations?

Mr. WRIGHT. We expect to have a meeting within a relatively short time to make a determination as to when that conference report would come. I am sorry that I cannot give you that information at this moment. If the gentleman would stay somewhat in contact with the Speaker or the Leader's office, we may be able to give you some further advice. We are going to meet with the chairman, Mr. ASPIN, and with other Members this afternoon and see if we can arrive at an appropriate time to bring that to the House.

Mr. CHENEY. Finally, Mr. Leader, what about next Friday. Can you give us any guidance on whether or not we could expect votes on Friday of next week?

Mr. WRIGHT. I would be very much surprised if there were any votes. I think no votes next Friday. We will try to, we are endeavoring to put together a sheet that will help Members understand just which days the remainder of this month we would expect votes.

As the gentleman is aware, there are two religious holidays that occur during the month of September, and we will want to make as clear a pattern as possible for the guidance of Members, and that will be available for distribution so that all Members may know what we expect to have votes and what days we do not.

Mr. CHENEY. I thank the Leader.

□ 1245

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1985

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at noon on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Tuesday next it adjourn to meet at noon on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

FARM POLICY LEGISLATION

(Mr. PETRI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, with the miracles of modern transportation and technology, most urban dwellers are accustomed to a constant supply of a wide variety of fresh produce, dairy products, and meats. But, they seem to give little thought to those who labor long hours to provide the food on the table.

Farming is a risky business. It requires more speculation than the stock market, more gambling than a weekend in Las Vegas, and more dedication than the quest for an Olympic medal. The job pays no overtime, nor can a farmer allow bad weather to slow him down. Yet farming has persisted as a way of life despite the hard work and economic difficulties. The economic health of America's hard-working farmers and the farm community are vital to our Nation's economy. When there is a farm credit crisis, the bankrupt farmer is only the first in a long line of bankruptcies to follow.

This weekend, I will be holding meetings with farmers in my district to discuss the farm policy bill we will soon be debating here. I believe that many farmers are more concerned about whether my urban colleagues really understand the special problems faced by farmers, than about receiving more Federal dollars. I urge my colleagues to remember the important contribution farmers make to our national economy and the unique problems of rural communities when we consider farm policy legislation later this year.

ROMANIA DOES NOT DESERVE MOST-FAVORED-NATION STATUS

(Mr. WOLF asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to call to the attention of my colleagues the column by George Will in today's Washington Post which I would like to insert following my remarks.

Mr. Will addresses the issue of most-favored-nation status for Romania which we will be debating soon and he hits the nail right on the head: Romania, which is considered by the Helsinki Watch Committee as "one of the worst human rights offenders in Eastern Europe," in no way deserves the special trade status of most favored nation unless they improve on human rights.

I recently visited Romania and talked with its citizens who showed clear evidence of the persecution, the human rights violations, the antireligious policies, and the pervasive influence of the Soviet Union. As Mr. Will states, the debate in Congress on most-favored-nation status for Romania should not take long. With the evidence so clear, it should be an open and shut case against allowing any special favors by the United States.

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 5, 1985]

DO ROMANIA NO FAVORS

(By George F. Will)

You cannot toss a brick in Washington without conking someone eager to impose economic sanctions against South Africa. That fact should help Congress keep short its forthcoming debate about whether there should be "most favored nation" status for China, Hungary, Afghanistan and Romania.

MFN status involves access to reduced import duties, credits and other preferences amounting to subsidies. China got MFN status in the 1970s and is considered special because . . . well, it is big and therefore. . . . Besides, the regime is only "so-called communist." President Reagan, on the return trip from China, spoke of the "so-called Communist Chinese."

Some State Department officials consider Hungary, which has MFN status, proof that a therapeutic U.S. policy can move a Soviet satellite toward stealthy independence from Moscow. You say the independence is invisible? Silly you. That just proves how stealthy it is. And never mind the fact that Mikhail Gorbachev's policy toward Eastern Europe is neo-(why should America have all the "noes"?)-Stalinism.

Regarding China and Hungary, Washington is, perhaps, incorrigible. But why do we even need to debate a proposal to strip MFN staus from Afghanistan and Romania?

Afghanistan got MFN status before the Soviet invasion and has kept it through congressional inaction. The administration does not oppose removing Afghanistan's MFN status. The decision regarding Afghanistan is economically unimportant. Afghanistan's only significant export is its population, approximately one-third of which is in refugee camps abroad. Romania is a more interesting case, if only because the argument against Romania is not significantly weaker than the argument against Afghanstan, yet a sizable State Department lobby supports Romania.

Recently Romania produced some toilet paper containing Biblical words such as "Esau," "Israel," "Satan." As many as 20,000 Bibles sent to Romania in the 1970s were seized and recycled into toilet paper. Romania has cited its willingness to permit the shipments of Bibles as evidence of its independence, liberality and eligibility for MFN status.

In his 1983 Christmas homily, the Rev. Geza Palfi, 43, protested a goverment edict making Christmas a "day of labor." He was arrested and died three months later of internal injuries. In spite of severe anti-religious polices, church attendance in Romania is higher than in any Eastern European nation other than Poland. This phenomenon, which is evidence of intense dissatisfaction with the regime, is cited by the regime as evidence of its toleration.

In the United States, we debate the registration of guns. In Romania, typewriters must be registered with the police. Psychiatric "hospitals" are used for the tortue of dissidents. To acquire MFN status, Romania formally ended a confiscatory "education reparation tax" on those who wished to emigrate. The tax is not collected, unofficially, in bribes. Concerned about the low birthrate, the government submits women workers to mandatory gynecological examinations.

The Helsinki Watch Committee considers Romania "one of the worst human rights offenders in Eastern Europe." Romanian actions violate, comprehensively, Romanian law and the nation's international undertakings, including the obligation to allow U.S. citizens to exercise inheritance rights to receive just compensation for property held in Romania.

After 3½ years in Bucharest, the U.S. ambassador, David Funderburk, who speaks Romanian and studied there for two years, resigned to express his exasperation with the State Department's unshakable faith that Romania's President Ceausescu conducts a significantly independent foreign policy. The evidence for this "independence" is an assortment of acts, such as Romania's participation in the 1984 Olympics, acts that are, singly and even cumulatively, small beer.

Ambassador Funderburk says his embassy staff "observed a large Soviet presence in Romania that was not welcome news to some officials in Washington. On our own initiative we looked in registries, checked schools, traced license plates and came up with an ungodly number of resident Soviets, including Soviet agents in factories monitoring Romanian exports to the Soviet Union."

Romania's occasional rudeness may annoy the Kremlin, Romania criticized the invasions of Czechoslovakia and Afghanistan, did not break diplomatic relations with Israel after the 1967 war and does not permit Soviet military maneuvers on Romanian soil. But such gestures hardly consittute independence.

They are dust in those eyes, including State Department eyes, that do not want to see Romania's complete compliance with the Kremlin's two paramount requirements—domestic Stalinism and support in the military-industrial complex that is the Soviet Union. The Romanian regime has harshly criticized Poland's Solidarity movement and has integrated its intelligence service with the Soviet's East-bloc network.

Trees, which only God can make, die so that debates, which Congress makes, can be transcribed on paper. The coming debate on MFN status should not cost many trees.

BLACK LUNG: DELAY UNFAIR

(Mr. RAHALL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, during the recent congressional district work period, I took the opportunity to visit every one of the eight counties making up the Fourth District of West Virginia. One of the major, if not the major, topics of concern was the unacceptable backlog of black lung cases within the Department of Labor. I held a meeting with miners awaiting a resolution of their cases in McDowell County, and a number of them gave me letters explaining the circumstances of their cases and how long they have been waiting for a decision. I hope to deliver these personally to the President along with the concerns of the people of West Virginia. Some of them have been waiting in excess of 10 years for a decision, due to a massive backlog at the administrative law judge level.

I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues an editorial from the Register-Herald in my hometown of Beckley, WV. It accurately sums up the feelings of the people of Appalachia as they await their well-deserved black lung compensaton. My district offices or my Washington office receive calls hourly every day from people awaiting a resolution of their case. Black lung compensation is a top priority in my office.

I hope that my colleagues will support efforts to eliminate this crippling backlog and expedite the cases so that these deserving people can receive their just compensation. Justice delayed is, indeed, justice denied.

BLACK LUNG: DELAY UNFAIR

The column by Jack Anderson on the opposite page makes a telling point: Coal miners who suffer from Black Lung or widows of Black Lung victims are not receiving justice from the federal government under its black lung program.

Anderson chose a particular case which illustrates the poignant unfairness of a system which denies compensation due individuals by law because of bureaucratic reluctance to expend funds and because companies can fight the benefit awards in court.

No system is perfect, but it seems ridiculous for there to be a backlog of 21,000 cases which, unless the process is expedited, will take some 35 years to resolve.

Justice delayed is justice denied.

Certainly, justice is denied those black lung retirees who die before the cases are settled. And in many cases, it appears that widows, even though, they live many years longer than their husbands, will also die before cases are adjudicated.

Establishment of the black lung program was fair, because coal miners systematically ruined their health by performing their work.

It could be argued that in the early days of coal mining, the risks to health from coasl dust were not understood or appreciated.

But with the advancement of medical science, the harmful effects of inhaling coal dust were established beyond controversy. Although the coal industry began instituting measures to minimize coal dust, it was too late to help many elderly miners whose last days were filled with pain which accompanied every breath they took.

If there is to be action on black lung, the pressure for action must come from President Reagan or other top officials in the administration.

Yet, as Anderson points out, administration officials are encouraging delays in black lung payments in order to reduce federal expenditures.

This is shameful.

By rights, Robert C. Byrd and Jay Rockefeller should be making speeches on the Senate floor every day until the case backlog has been eliminated.

West Virginia's congressmen should also make black lung their top concern, if it is not already.

True, there may be abuses. Some people who do not suffer the terrible disease may have filed for black lung benefits. Some widows may be seeking benefits to which they are not entitled.

Perhaps, because of this, there is an argument for judicial review of cases in which coal companies contest the award.

But these judicial reviews should be expeditious. The federal government should provide as many judges as it takes to clear the backlog in a reasonable time.

It makes no sense to let these cases drag on until those who needed the benefits are dead and buried.—W.M.

TRIBUTE TO CAROLYN SULLIVAN

(Mr. HUBBARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to my constituent, Mrs. Carolyn Reddick Sullivan of Milburn, KY.

Indeed, it is a pleasure for me to have the opportunity to recognize Carolyn Reddick Sullivan, who recently retired from teaching, a profession which she proudly served for 35 years—first in the Graves County and Mayfield City school systems and then at Carlisle County Elementary School.

Throughout her career, Mrs. Sullivan has been a valuable asset to the field of education. Her dedication to excellence and demand for maximum effort from students gained her immense respect throughout her teaching career from her students, their parents and her peers alike. In honor of her many years of distinguished service to her State, she was recently commissioned a Kentucky Colonel by Kentucky Gov. Martha Layne Collins.

Although Carolyn Sullivan's commitment to teaching is well known in western Kentucky, she also found time to be a family person. Carolyn and her husband Durwood, a real estate broker and former teacher, have one daughter, Gina Carol Sullivan, who lives and works at Oak Ridge, TN.

Carolyn Sullivan retired with the highest praise and respect from her community—Milburn, KY.

My wife Carol and I attended the 1985 Milburn Homecoming earlier this year with my mother, Mrs. Carroll Hubbard, Sr., of Louisville, KY. My mother was born and raised in Milburn, KY, and graduated from Milburn High School in 1930.

Among the proud residents of Milburn who witnessed the ceremony honoring Carolyn Reddick Sullivan earlier this year were her parents, Alvin and Lorene Reddick, two beloved individuals who are longtime favorites of mine.

As Mrs. Ernie (Polly) Johnson of Milburn said at the Milburn Homecoming, "Thank you, Carolyn Sullivan, for 35 years of teaching western Kentucky young people in such an outstanding manner."

OPERATION LIAPP: MICHIGAN'S BLACK HISTORY COMES ALIVE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CROCKETT] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CROCKETT. Mr. Speaker, as I did yesterday, I would like to include in today's RECORD excerpts of the "Michigan Manual of Freedmen's Progress," published in Detroit, MI, in 1915 and chronicling the accomplishments of black citizens in the Michigan community. The manual was first published to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the signing of the Emancipation Proclamation. The manual is now being reissued and updated under the guidance of the Museum of African-American History of Detroit. Under Editor John Green, the reissue is designed to enlighten new generations to the historical contributions of blacks to our State's progress, as well as to update and enlarge on the information in the first manual.

I would like at this time to include some further portions of the original manual for the benefit of my colleagues:

EXCERPTS FROM MICHIGAN MANUAL OF FREEDMEN'S PROGRESS

THE NEGRO IN MICHIGAN

Many interesting incidents have been mentioned arising from the presence, first in the territory from which the State of Michigan was formed, and second, as residents and citizens of this great northern commonwealth, of persons of mixed or of full Negro blood.

We find in such records as are available mention of a "black man who was very pious" in the latter part of the 18th century and several instances in the early part of the 19th century where slaves were brought to Michigan territory are mentioned.

Negro immigration to Michigan in appreciable numbers began in the decade between 1830 and 1840 and assumed largest proportions just prior to the Civil War. The Imigrants consisted of "Free" Negroes i.e. manumitted slaves or their children, also the Negro children of white women. The enumeration of home owners has revealed several colored decendants of Southern white women, born free because of the anti bellum Slave State law that the child followed the condition of the mother. These were supplemented by runaway slaves who were aided to freedom by the famous "Underground Railway."

The Negroes became so numerous in the fifties that considerable hostility began to be manifested and we are told by Mr. Geo. Waterfall, one of Detroit's oldest pioneer citizens, that the Negro population of Detroit in 1861 was about 500. Prior to that time, Southern masters in search of runaway slaves had been mobbed in Detroit and made to leave without their prey, but during the progress of the Civil War the Pro Negro sentiment changed and at least one anti-Negro riot in that city is recorded.

When the Secretary of War authorized Governor Austin Blair to raise one regiment of Negro Volunteers in 1863, Negroes flocked to Detroit from all parts of the State and probably some came from Canada, and soon filled the regiment with 1,500 black volunteers. This regiment acquitted itself in excellent fashion during the remainder of the War and 173 additional black volunteers were mustered in at Detroit and assigned to different regiments during the progress of the War. A complete roster of these black heroes is published in a subsequent chapter of this manual.

Among the early decisions of the Michigan Supreme Court may be found an interesting decision regarding the legal status of the Negro as a voter. The case went up from Detroit where the Negro, a man of very light complexion, had been denied the right to vote. The decision followed the Ohio ruling on the same subject, holding substantially that a Negro followed the condition of his father and where an individual possessed a preponderance of white blood, he was to be regarded as white and therefore a voter. After the war, and especially after the 15th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution was adopted the progress of Michigan's Afro-American citizens has been rapid and certain.

The chapter on Occupations furnished by Mr. Robert A. Pelham, found in another part of this manual together with the chapter devoted to the Michigan Negro in Business clearly shows the rapid rise of the Freedmen during the past fifty years and is full of interest.

The first organization effected to better the condition of Michigan's Afro-Americans occurred on October 8, 9, in 1860, when a convention of colored men met at Battle Creek, Michigan, for the purpose of petitioning the Legislature for the right of suffrage, to consider the intellectual and moral status of the colored people and to devise means to better their condition. This convention elected a permanent committee of the following persons:

James Underwood, Washtenaw county; George W. Lewis, Lenawee; Wm. Casey, Calhoun; George W. Artis, Cass; Josiah Henson, Jackson; Erwin Jeffreys, Van Buren; T. Wilson, Ingham; Mr. Jenkins, Branch; D. Roberts, Kent; T.J. Martin, Cass; E. Owens, Kalamazoo; George De Baptist, Wayne; E.H. Wilson, Kent; John Freeman, Ann Arbor; Walter Duke, White River; Mr. Herod, Ionia.

Mr. T.J. Martin, of Dowagiac, was elected chairman of the convention, and this committee had power to call a convention of Michigan Afro-Americans any time they deemed it necessary to take that step.

Many of this committee had died when in 1884 Mr. Martin consulted the living members and called a convention which was held March 25, 1884, at the same city, at which resolutions were adopted in appreciation of Justice Harlan's dissenting opinion of the United States Supreme Court's decision on "The Civil Rights Act," and also resolutions requesting the Republican party to send a colored delegate at large to the Republican National Convention at Chicago in June. This convention elected a standing committee composed of the following persons, many of whom are still living:

Walter Y. Clark, Walter H. Stowers, of Wayne; R. Wilson, Lenawee; John J. Evans, Calhoun; Joseph C. Ford, Kent; J.H. Baker, Bay; Charles W. Ellis, Saginaw; J. Madry, Cass; J.H. Fox, Washtenaw; Frank M. Thurman, Jackson; George Curtis, Berrien; J.M. Artis, Hillsdale; N. Hamilton, Kalamazoo; L.R. Roberts, Van Buren; W.H. Deigh, Ingham.

In 1876 a Negro of the full blood, John Wilson, was elected to the office of Coroner of Wayne County by the Democratic party. Wilson was a musician and boss barber, operating a ten-chair shop on Griswold street near Jefferson in the City of Detroit, and was probably the first Negro to be elected to public office in the State of Michigan. Closely following Wilson in office was Thomas D. Owens, also elected coroner of Wayne County on the Democratic ticket. Mr. Owens was also a boss barber and one of Detroit's oldest colored citizens, having settled in that city in 1845.

In the early eighties, Negro attorneys appeared before the Detroit courts, Thomas Crisup being the first, quickly followed by D. Augustus Straker, the latter was a University graduate and seemed to become a popular idol of the white people, many commendatory references being made about his court work by the daily papers. He was elected Circuit Court Commissioner for two terms, in the nineties and after the adoption of the primary laws was nominated as a delegate to the State Constitutional Convention in 1908. He was a rock-ribbed Republican of the old school.

In ascertaining the present condition of Michigan's Afro-Americans a question blank was prepared seeking information as follows: Nativity of the person enumerated; length of residence in Michigan; if of mixed blood their nearest white ancestor; occupation; value of real property owned; value of personal property owned; character and value of Exhibits offered; extent of education; whether married or single, and number of children.

Only persons owning real estate, producers of something to exhibit or professional and business persons were enumerated with the following results:

Total number enumerated	1,496
Natives of Michigan	485
Natives of other State or Countries	881
Persons having white ancestry	666
Number of children of mixed blood	1,433
Number of full blooded Negroes	239
Number of children of full blood Negroes	429
Home owners	1,207
Owners of other lands	316
Owners of personal property	979
Number of exhibitors	196
Number of professional persons	98
Number married	1,201
Number educated at common school or better	1,204
Number uneducated	58
Number of occupations in which Afro-Americans are employed	152
Value of real property	$4,219,022
Value of personal property	$1,115,683

A number of lists came in too late for tabulation.

Out of a total of 1496 persons enumerated it will be noted that only 905 answered the question regarding "White Ancestors," probably because of a false modesty regarding the southern manner their white blood was acquired or probably because their dark complexion was so pronounced that they did not think it necessary to answer the question. But the answers given will suffice for the object sought, i.e., whether any inherent physical weakness can be determined as a result of a mixture of blood as claimed by some more or less noted physiologists.

The table discloses 1433 children born to 666 persons of mixed blood and 429 born to 239 of the full blood. Some notable examples of the procreative powers of both classes are recorded in the files of the Commission. Two mixed couples in one township, both farmers, gave birth to 44 children with 30 of them living and healthy, both bodily and morally. While one couple of full Negro blood in Detroit gave birth to 18 children, 11 of whom are living and healthy. All of the farmers were singly born, while the latter couple gave birth to 3 sets of twins.

It will be difficult to reconcile with the figures here given any idea of physical or mental weakness on the part of either mixed or full blood Negroes. One father of 22 children is the descendant of a free born mulatto of Kentucky and is of French, Indian and Negro extraction. This man started as a farmer in 1890 without any capital except a wife and four children and a determination to succeed. Today his estate is valued at $30,000 and he lives in the best house in the township, containing 20 rooms and all modern conveniences including steam heat and he "owes not a dollar to any man," and this particular individual can neither read nor write.

The Allens of Cass County are all of mixed blood. "Uncle Bill," as Wm. Allen is affectionately called, is hale and hearty at 80 odd years and here we find great grandchildren, all healthy, alert, ambitious and industrious citizens who measure up favorably with the best the Nation affords.

Among the mixed blood Afro-Americans in Michigan are found descendants of one former President of the U.S., of U.S. Senators and Congressmen and a leading General of the Confederate Army all from Southern States where inter-marriage of the races has always been prohibited by law, but not by practice, as the complexion of these individuals and the stories told, plainly prove.

The chief object of creating the Commission was to prepare and install a Michigan Exhibit of Freedmen's Progress at the National Half Century Exposition at Chicago, Ill., held in connection with the celebration of the 50th anniversary of Negro Emancipation.

From the number and character of exhibits all expectations have been surpassed. The 196 exhibits listed includes many highly valuable inventions, many beautiful works of art from brush, pen and needle, many articles of handiwork by craftsmen and farm products of all description. True we have been disappointed in listing some of Michigan's best invention, The Dammond R. R. Signal and the Pianola; yet the wisdom of providing for the Michigan Exhibit and this manuel is amply demonstrated.

PARAGRAPHS ABOUT PEOPLE AND THEIR OCCUPATIONS IN DAYS GONE BY

The research for statistical data, for comparative purposes, brought to light a number of interesting facts, relative to Michigan citizens, during the early and succeeding years of the past half century, and are presented here, as occupational data worthy of note.

C. H. Mitchell, graduate of the Law Department at Ann Arbor, was elected Justice of the Peace at Battle Creek in April, 1889.

Dr. S. C. Watson, of Detroit, was born in Charlestown, S.C., in 1832. He received a common school education, attended Oberlin college one year, spent two years at Ann Arbor as a medical student, and afterwards graduated from the Cleveland College of Medicine. He practiced in Toronto and Chatham, locating in Detroit in 1863. He opened a drug store, which business he was engaged in at his death in 1892. He was a member of the Underground Railroad and a close friend of John Brown, Wendell Phillips, William Lloyd Garrison, and their coworkers. Was a member of Board of Estimates in 1876; was elected a member of City Council in 1882, and served two terms. In 1884 was elected delegate-at-large to National Republican Convention which nominated Blaine and Logan. He was the first colored man so honored in the North. He was a commissioner for Michigan at the New Orleans Exposition and was a member of the Jury Commission through appointment by Governor Winans at time of his death.

John H. Freeny, of the Saginaw Valley and resident of Mt. Pleasant, Mich., was born and reared in Camden, N.J. Came to Michigan in 1868 and engaged in barbering at Clare. Later moved to present home and learned photography with the celebrated Goodridge Brothers of Saginaw, after which he opened a photo gallery and a barber shop in East Saginaw. But his yearnings were towards construction, and through real estate investments he soon found himself a dealer in lumber, and in 1883 owned pine land enough to keep him busy for a number of years; also a mill which sawed eight million shingles in 1882. He had three lumber camps, ten teams, four yoke of oxen and 100 men employed. Mr. Freeny was founder and sole owner of the village of Wise, containing about 400 inhabitants and located on a branch of railroad running from East Saginaw to Mt. Pleasant, with two daily mails and in a flourishing condition.

Prof. C.W. Thompson was born a slave to a brutal master in Richmond, Virginia. Through the Underground Railroad he escaped, landing in Philadelphia in 1852, and in 1854 came to Detroit where he settled. Naturally endowed with musical talent, he soon began organizing choirs and choruses and a school of music, having as high as 125 pupils enrolled. He organized the Detroit Philharmonic Society, and even today his influence is felt in his adopted city.

Capt. Obadiah C. Wood was born in New York state in 1815. His parents moved to Rochester, where he received such education as that state provided for its colored citizens in that day. In 1843 he went to Detroit. Mr. Wood was the first person to organize a colored military organization in the state of Michigan. Long before the election of Mr. Lincoln, he had a well organized, drilled and equipped company, and when the war clouds appeared Capt. Wood and his company were among the first to offer their services to the governor of the state, which offer was rejected because the North at that time did not think it needed the Negro's aid in putting down the rebellion. Through Capt. Wood, legal action against the Board of Education, at his own expense, and discrimination having been declared illegal by the Supreme Court of the state he, practically unaided, except by justice, opened the public schools to all colored children in their respective districts in the fall of 1870.

He was the first colored man in Michigan to hold a position under the Federal government, a position he held for twelve years with satisfaction to the Government and credit to himself, and which he resigned on account of ill health. He was also the first colored man elected to a municipal office in the state, being elected a member of the Board of Estimates for two years and commissioned by Governor Bagley as a Jury Commissioner.

Mr. Charles Peterson, of Saginaw, was born in New Jersey in 1822 He settled in several places in New York and Canada before permanently locating in East Saginaw, where he has acquired considerable real estate and a business in draying through hard work and thrift, and was easily worth $50,000 in 1883. His only daughter married Mr. Fountain Bass, the popular caterer of Bay City.

Walter Y. Clark had the first laundry in Detroit. Lack of capital forced him into political life and he held many places of honor and trust.

J.C. Craig, of Grand Rapids, ran a fine barber shop, equipped with electric light and apparatus, as early as 1883.

Mrs. Lucy Thurman, of Jackson, was the first colored woman to lecture and organize branches for the State W.C.T.U. She is also ex-president of the C.W.N.F.C.

Sojourner Truth, noted lecturer, abolitionist, and woman's rights advocate, coworker of Fred Douglass and Susan B. Anthony, made her home in Battle Creek for a number of years and died there.

George W. Lewis came to Lenawee county in 1835, ran leading barber shop in Adrian till 1882, when he became excursion manager for the Wabash Railroad.

Mrs. M.E. Lambert, of Detroit, was not only a splendid elocutionist and rarely gifted in knowledge of literature, but also a writer, having been especially commended for a "Child's Book of Stories" from her pen.

Goodridge Bros., of Saginaw, were for years the leading photographers of Northern Michigan. Their work was not excelled in the state. One specialty was the taking of noted views all over the country.

Richard Shewcraft was the first colored artist to receive a scholarship at the Detroit Museum of Art, which possesses one of his pictures bought by friends before his death and presented to the Museum.

John H. Fox was one of the first colored attorneys in Michigan. In 1883 he was enjoying a lucrative practice in Ypsilanti.

Mr. J.J. Richardson, of Bay City, was well known and appreciated for his newspaper writings and his historical knowledge of early Michigan, which had attracted wide attention in the early 80s. He settled in Saginaw in 1855, when there was only one other colored family in the valley.

Hon. D. Augustus Straker, after becoming a citizen of Detroit in the latter 80s, was the first colored man elected Circuit Court Commissioner. He enjoyed a lucrative mixed practice and the legal books of which he is author are recognized authorities on their subjects.

Frank C. Bradford, of Detroit, was special pattern man of the Fulton Iron Works of Detroit. He was also an inventor.

William C. Swan, of Detroit, attorney, was the first colored man to be nominated on the Democratic ticket for Circuit Court Commissioner.

Hon. J. Frank Rickards came to Detroit in 1865. Was one of the first colored letter carriers, having been appointed in 1879., He is a high mason and an authority on masonic matters.

Dr. Charles Ellis held an honored professional reputation in Saginaw, Michigan, till cut off by death in his early years.

Mr. William Gaskins, of Jackson, has attracted attention all over the state by his expert penmanship.

Miss Dora Grayson was director of music in Tecumseh public schools from 1890 to 1894. She was the first colored woman in Michigan to fill such position.

Mr. Harry Guy composes and arranges high class music for all the best local soloists and orchestras in Detroit.

Detroit Study Club, founded in 1898, by Mrs. Gay Lewis Pelham, is the principal literary club in the state, belonging for seventeen years to the City Federation of Clubs with representation.

Ypsilanti still has colored schools with colored teachers. The pioneer teacher was Rev. Isaac Burdine, known all over the state as a strong race man of splendid qualities.

Preston's Restaurant at Marquette was the leading place of its kind in Marquette in 1890 and Mr. George Preston, proprietor, was counted one of Marquette's most progressive business men.

Mme. Maggie Porter Cole, one of the original Fisk Jubilee Singers, has made Detroit her home since her marriage some years ago. She has organized several choruses and freely lends her talent to charity.

H.F. Snodgrass, of Battle Creek, was foreman for more than 20 years of the blacksmith shops of Nichols & Shepard, agricultural implement manufacturers in that city, with 25 or more race assistants. Wm. Barton was the engineer of the plant for many years.

Isaac N. Jackson, of Charlotte, was at one time foreman of the news room of the Charlotte Republican. This newspaper spoke in the highest terms of him when he was a candidate on the Republican ticket for Town Recorder. He was defeated by only 11 votes.

Miss Lulu V. Childers, of Howell, Michigan, singer, and at present Director of Music at Howard University, received her common school education at Howell and her voice training at Oberlin Conservatory of Music. Miss Childers is an excellent example of a self-made woman, as her training at Oberlin was made largely possible through her own personal efforts.

Dr. L.H. Johnson was born in Union Town, Fayette County, Pa., and settled permanently in Detroit in 1880 after having graduated from Oberlin in a literary course and receiving his degree in medicine from the Chicago Medical College. He built up a fine, lucrative practice, having both colored and white patients—indeed, about 75 per cent of his practice were the latter.

Miss Fannie M. Richards was born in Fredericksburg, Va. The family coming to Detroit in her early days, she is practically a Michigan product. She was appointed a teacher in the public schools at Detroit in 1868 and has taught continuously till 1915, when she was retired upon pension. She was the first president of the Phyllis Wheatly House and known for her charitable deeds as well as her love for literature and her passion for teaching.

Hon. Henry Lincoln Johnson, of Georgia, ex-Recorder of Deeds for the District of Columbia, received his degree in law from the University of Michigan.

The late lamented Dr. John R. Francis, of Washington, D.C., received his degree in medicine from the University of Michigan.

Joseph H. Stewart, of Washington, D.C., honored member of the bar, received his degree in law from the University of Michigan.

Dr. Thomas Wallace, of Adrian, has a celebrated sanatorium and has made some remarkable cures through his special treatment. His Sanatorium with equipment has a valuation of about $20,000.

John Lewis, born in Livingston Co., N.Y., in 1826, came to Adrian with his parents in the fall of 1837. He was a product of the early public school of Adrian and his natural intelligence together with the use he made of his schooling and experience assisted him greatly in acquiring business methods. Economy was his watchword and through this trait about 1857 he bought out his employer's eating house and set about accumulating a competence. His place, "The Verandah," became and remained a land mark in Adrian till Mr. Lewis' death. He was universally respected by all classes of citizens.

Hon. W. W. Ferguson was born in Detroit in 1857. His father, Dr. Joseph Ferguson, was a pioneer of Detroit and city physician for several terms. He was the first boy of his race to enter the Detroit Public Schools, and he graduated with high honors from the High School. He was the first colored member of the Michigan legislature, having been elected in 1892. He was the plaintiff who won the celebrated Ferguson-Gies civil right case, citation of which is made throughout the entire country.

Madame E. Azalia Hackley, the noted singer and musical lecturer, was educated in Detroit, where she taught for a number of years in the public schools. Upon her marriage to Mr. Edward Hackley, Denver, became her home from which place she went forth after hard study to conquer in musical fields and win a world wide reputation in her profession of music.

Among the early teachers who left for Southern fields of labor were Joseph H. Pelham and George Rice, of Detroit in the 70's. Mr. Rice died some years ago in Missouri, where Mr. Pelham remained and taught for more than 40 years. He has two daughters, Misses Mabel and Gladys, now teaching in the Detroit Public Schools, and a son in the Detroit Post Office.

George Young, for many years steward for the "Yondotega" club of Detroit, by special recommendation is now steward of the Country Club, one of Washington's most aristocratic country clubs.

Rev. John A. Williams, rector of St. Mark's Episcopal Church, Omaha, Nebraska, is a Michigan product, educated in the Public Schools of Detroit and becoming a protege of Bishop Worthington, entered the Episcopal priesthood after graduating from the Divinity School at Fairabault, Minn., and is one of the most prominent of the Episcopal clergy.

Ann Arbor has one colored postman and police officer, appointed by Republican and Democratic officials respectively.

Saginaw is credited with one physician.

Grand Rapids has one public school teacher.

Bay City has one public school teacher—has had three.

In 1883 Mr. C. B. Burton was the leading confectioner and caterer of East Saginaw.

Charles Kelly, of Frederick, Crawford county, general store keeper, township treasurer, was postmaster under Harrison and McKinley.

Lieut. Frank W. Cheek was a gallant lieutenant in the Volunteer service in the Spanish-American war.

There has been two race representatives as teachers in the Detroit Conservatory of Music.

Ypsilanti has one colored physician.

In June, 1883, the Wayne County Jury Commission approved the following named among other jurors for the year:

Wayne County Court: Jas. H. Cole.

Superior Court: Montgomery Bell, Wilmont Johnson, Theodore Finney, Joseph W. Shafer, Thaddeus D. Warsaw, Lomax B. Cook, and Dr. Samuel C. Watson.

Recorder's Court: George Sorrel, Henry C. Clark, Obadiah C. Wood and George B. Crisup.

At one time:

Detroit had John A. Loomis, expert stenographer, one of the first to teach stenography in Detroit.

W.H. Vincent was one of Flint's progressive business men, with a fine grocery store.

At Lansing, Mr. Andrew Dungey and Mr. John W. Allen were young contractors and builders.

Alpheus A. Poole was deputy sheriff for Wayne under Sheriff James D. Burns, democrat.

At Lansing, Mr. William Tate, dealer in merchandise.

Ann Arbor, Mr. White, a contractor.

Grand Rapids, Mr. George Miller, pressman.

Lapeer had the well known attorney, S. Laing Williams, of Washington, D.C., the first graduate from Columbia University returning to vote at election time. Mr. Williams is now a citizen of Chicago, Ill.

In Port Huron, Mr. J.E. Bird, counselor and advisor of leading politicians of his district.

Among the well known:

J.C. Ford, of Grand Rapids, a staunch race man and pioneer in all movements for race uplift.

Albert W. Hill, of Detroit, the first Internal Revenue Gauger in Michigan, and a politician of "high degree."

Mme. Frances E. Preston, Detroit, most famous elocutionist and temperance worker.

C.C. Carter, of Port Huron, an influential member of the convention of 1884 and a political force in his locality.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Howard, of Detroit, funeral directors, undertakers and embalmers.

Dr. Sylvester S. Smith, first dentist in Detroit.

Prof. William H. Dammond resigned a professorship at Wilberforce in 1911 to take a position with the Michigan Central Railroad as assistant bridge engineer. While holding this position, Prof. Dammond invented an electric cab signal, an improvement over and destined to supplant the block signal.

Mr. Ray Middleton, graduate of the University of Michigan, civil engineer, with American Bridge and Iron Works.

Edward P. Harper, son of Hezikiah Harper, born in Indianapolis, became a citizen of Detroit at the age of 6 weeks, his parents having moved to Detroit when he was that age. He was the first Ladies' Hair Dresser in Detroit, having for years the only and later the leading place of business in that line in the city. He taught several of his white successors their trade.

Rev. Hezikiah Harper, founder of Ebenezer A. M. E. Church, Detroit, Michigan.

SECTION 302(a) ALLOCATIONS REQUIRED BY THE CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET ACT

(Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, Congress adopted Senate Concurrent Resolution 32, the first concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1986, on August 1, 1985. Since negotiations between the House and Senate conferees continued well into that morning, there was insufficient time for the preparation of accurate section 302(a) allocations of budget outlays, new budget authority, and new entitlement authority to House committees. Such allocations are required by the Congressional Budget Act to be part of the statement of managers accompanying a conference report on the budget.

House Resolution 253, which provided for the consideration of the conference agreement on the budget resolution also provided that the section 302(a) allocations, which I am now inserting in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, shall be the allocations required under section 302(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

Additionally, I would like to briefly note the enforcement procedures which were included in the conference agreement.

Section 2 of the resolution provides reconciliation instructions directing 14 House and 11 Senate committees to report by September 27 legislation reducing the deficit for fiscal years 1986 through 1988.

Section 3 of the resolution provides that if Congress does not adopt a second resolution by October 1, then the spending ceilings and revenue floor set forth in this resolution shall become binding. That section further provides that in the House legislation would not be subject to a point of order for exceeding the aggregate spending ceilings if the legislation would not exceed the committee's section 302(a) allocation of new discretionary budget authority or new entitlement authority for fiscal year 1986. This provision is identical to the procedure which applied in both Houses during fiscal year 1985 except that it is only applicable in the House of Representatives in fiscal year 1986.

The conference agreement revises the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1985, thereby establishing a new spending ceiling and revenue floor for purposes of section 311(a) of the Congressional Budget Act.

Finally, sections 5 through 10 of the resolution contain provisions expressing the sense of the House, or Senate, or both on various issues.

ALLOCATION OF SPENDING RESPONSIBILITY TO HOUSE COMMITTEES PURSUANT TO SEC. 302(a) OF THE CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET ACT—FISCAL YEAR 1986

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

A SYMBOL OF HOPE AND DETERMINATION

HON. ROBERT GARCIA
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, in today's New York Times, Alan Cowell discusses Nelson Mandela and his importance to South Africa's black community. Mr. Mandela is unyielding with his faith in his people and his cause. Mr. Mandela brings a sense of dignity and incredible strength to the struggle of South Africa's majority community to free itself from the bonds of apartheid.

I hope my colleagues find Mr. Cowell's article as inspiring as I did.

NELSON MANDELA

(By Alan Cowell)

JOHANNESBURG, September 4.—Percy Qoboza remembers the days fondly. One of them goes like this:

In the early 1960's the man was on the run from the police, and Mr. Qoboza, a young black reporter, was following the story.

"He would disappear and then turn up, somewhere, at a public telephone, and call in with a statement. Of course the police would trace the call, but by that time, he was long gone. We had our own pimpernel."

Mr. Qoboza is now a prominent newspaper editor. The man he was talking about is Nelson Mandela, the imprisoned leader of the African National Congress, whose days as the pimpernel ran out in August 1962, when he was arrested for sabotage because of his role in the militant wing of the congress. He has been in prison ever since and has become, through incarceration and steadfast defiance from within the prison walls, South Africa's leading black hero, the man, according to a recent newspaper survey, whom 90 percent of the nation's black people want unconditionally freed.

SYMBOLIZES BLACK DETERMINATION

"I think," Mr. Qoboza said in an interview today, "that he symbolizes black determination to be free."

The symbolism, from a black nationalist point of view, is evident. Pollsmoor prison, outside Cape Town, where Mr. Mandela is held, represents the system against which he rebels. His rebellion, from within, is the ambiguous emblem of defiance in a society where the rulers seem to call the shots.

The enigma, however, seems to be that, invisible and unheard, removed by white authority from black political activism. Mr. Mandela has captured the spirit and devotion not only of those who knew him at the time of his incarceration, but also of those who have, in the last year of upheaval, assumed the custodianship of black resistance—the teen-agers who were not yet born when he was jailed.

If Mr. Mandela, 67 years old, was released tomorrow, said Michael Morake, 18, in an interview in Soweto, Johannesburg's sprawling black satellite, "I will probably pass him by because I would not recognize him."

"But it is his ideas and commitment to the struggle that make even us youths regard him as our leader," he said.

REVOLUTION WILL SET HIM FREE

"Anyhow," he added, "I do not worry about not knowing what Mandela looks like right now, because the day has come closer where I will see him with my own eyes."

"If the system does not free him," he said, "the people's revolution will set him free. And that day is not far away."

Mr. Mandela is seen as an inspiration whose physical presence means less than his message and example.

"He is the symbol of our struggle," said Mzwakhe Kubheka, 19, a high school student. "To me he is like Jesus Christ."

"How many people would rather stay in jail than be free at the cost of their integrity," he said.

"For the struggle to go on," he said, "we do not need Mandela to be around. We, the youths, will do the job the way our leader would have wanted. And he knows that we are carrying on from where he left off 23 years ago."

Mr. Mandela was jailed and was supposed to become, thus, a nonperson, banished, initially to the harshness of Robben Island, off Cape Town. But the myth was stronger than the prison walls and it grew across the generations.

SON OF TEMBU CHIEF

There were other heroes, but many have been detailed or otherwise neutralized. Mr. Mandela filled the emptiness at the heart of blacks yearning for leadership.

Who, then, is he?

Mr. Mandela was born in 1918, the eldest son of a chief of the Tembu people, inheriting a mantle of royal self-confidence that defied white relegation of blacks to second-class status. He studied law at South Africa's Fort Hare University, an academy whose alumni include Robert Mugabe, now Prime Minister of Zimbabwe.

As in Mr. Mugabe's case, the university seems to have honed political views. Mr. Mandela is said to have been expelled from it for organizing a student strike.

In Johannesburg, he and Oliver Tambo, now the exiled leader of the African National Congress, formed a law practice. In 1944 Mr. Mandela joined the congress, then far less demanding of white concessions than it is today, and played a leading role in its nonviolent campaigns against apartheid in the 1950's.

Those actions caused him to be detailed, along with 155 others, in 1957, in a four-year treason trial that ended, in 1961, with all the defendants being acquitted. That was the start of the pimpernel whose credentials were strengthened, Mr. Qoboza said, by the fact that Mr. Mandela never chose self-exile to secure comfortable dissent.

KILLINGS AT SHARPEVILLE

It was at this time, too, that a great change came over black resistance in South Africa. On March 21, 1960, the police shot dead 69 black protesters in Sharpeville, a black township south of Johannesburg, and, in the wake of the massacre, leaders such as Mr. Mandela decided to turn to violence.

Mr. Mandela was a central figure in the formation of Umkhonto we Sizwe—the Spear of the Nation—the military wing of the African National Congress, and he became its first commander. On one of his trips outside South Africa, he was said to have visited Algeria, to organize training bases, and to have undergone training. The name of Umkhonto we Sizwe is feted, still, in the songs that young blacks sing at the gravesides of slain township activists.

In August 1962 the authorities caught up with Mr. Mandela and, after the leadership of Umkhonto we Sizwe was rounded up, put him on trial for sabotage. His final address to the court that jailed him for life is burned into the soul of black resistance.

"There comes a time, as it came in my life," he said, "when a man is denied the right to live a normal life, when he can only live the life of an outlaw because the Government has so decreed to use the law to impose a state of outlawry upon him. I was driven to this situation, and I do not regret having taken the decisions that I did take."

THE CHOICE IS NOT OURS

Earlier, when Mr. Mandela launched violent resistance to white rule, a pamphlet was circulated by his organization saying: "The choice is not ours. It has been made by the nationalist Government which has rejected every peaceable demand by the people for rights and freedom."

At his trial, Mr. Mandela talked of "the ideal of a democratic and free society in which all persons live together in harmony and with equal opportunities."

"It is an ideal which I hope to live for and to achieve," he said. "But if need be, an ideal for which I am prepared to die."

Mr. Mandela is visited regularly only by his immediate family. This year, however, the authorities have permitted some outsiders to see him.

He is, said Lord Bethell, a British peer and member of the European Parliament, who saw Mr. Mandela in January, "a six-foot-tall, lean figure with silvering hair, an impeccable olive-green shirt and well-creased navy blue trousers."

"I am in good health," Mr. Mandela said at the time. "It is not true that I have cancer. It is not true that I have had a toe amputated. I get up at 3:30 A.M. every morning, do two hours of physical exercise, work up a good sweat. Then I read and study during the day.

A MEAN LEFT HOOK

The reference to exercise does not surprise Mr. Qoboza. If Mr. Mandela had not become a politican, he said, he would have become a great athlete. "When the world had not discovered jogging, he had," Mr. Qoboza said. "As an amateur boxer, he packed one of the meanest left hooks in the business."

Samuel Dash, Chief counsel to the Senate Watergate Committee and now a professor of law at Georgetown University, saw Mr. Mandela earlier this year and wrote, in The New York Times Magazine, that "he is a tall, slim, handsome man" who appears "vigorous and healthy, with a calm, confident manner and dignified bearing that seemed incongruous in our prison surroundings."

"Indeed, throughout our meeting, I felt that I was in the presence not of a guerrilla fighter or racial ideologue, but of a head of state," Mr. Dash wrote.

Mr. Mandela, he said, lived in a cell measuring 25 by 40 feet, with access to the roof of the building.

President P. W. Botha has sought to depict the African National Congress, and Mr. Mandela, as Communists. The Congress has long entertained an alliance with the South African Communist Party, but Mr. Tambo, its exiled leader, has denied that it is steered by Moscow.

I AM A SOCIALIST

In his interview with Lord Bethell, Mr. Mandela was quoted as saying: "Personally, I am a Socialist and I believe in a classless society. But I see no reason to belong to any political party at the moment."

Mr. Mandela confronts the authorities with a dilemma, one they have sought to resolve for almost a year in a kind of negotiation conducted through newspapers and public statements.

If he were to accept the authorities' terms for his release—that he renounce violence—then he would be discredited and thus neutralized. But, if he stays in prison, the authorities seem to acknowledge, his aura will grow, as will his stature as a rallying point for black resistance.

Last December, he was offered freedom if he went to live in the so-called homeland called the Transkei. He rejected the offer.

The offer was not publicized, but, in January, after Lord Bethell saw Mr. Mandela, the authorities publicly offered to release him if he gave them an undertaking that he would renounce violence as a means of achieving political goals. That offer, too, was spurned.

His reply, in the strange dialogue between captor and captive, was transmitted by his daughter at a rally in Soweto. "My father says I cannot and will not give any undertaking at a time when I, and you the people, are not free," she said. "Your freedom and mine cannot be separated."

WIFE IS UNDER RESTRICTIONS

Mr. Mandela's messages are often transmitted by family members who see him in prison. His wife, Winnie, is a "banned" person in South Africa, banished to a remote corner of the Orange Free State, forbidden from being quoted in the South African press.

Their relationship is seen by many blacks as a symbol of resistance since both, in their different ways, are damaged by white authority, but both refuse to be cowed.

From the authorities' viewpoint, Mr. Mandela's incarceration presents special problems. While visitors say he is in vigorous health, his death in prison would cause a massive black outcry. To release him might, officials said, strip him of some glamour. But to release him without conditions might be seen by whites as a sign of weakness and, moreover, might result in the unleashing of unpredictable forces.

In the latest statement that he has transmitted through Mrs. Mandela, Mr. Mandela has said the only thing left to the Afrikaner white elite is to discuss a handing over of power to the black majority. But he seems to have left open the door to negotiation.

"If the Government abandons apartheid," Mrs. Mandela said after visiting her husband, "lifts the ban on the A.N.C., releases all political prisoners and allows the exiles to return, then Nelson and other A.N.C. leaders would be prepared to sit down and talk."

What inspires the myth of Mr. Mandela seems to be his refusal to compromise.

"All his life has been dedicated to the struggle," Mr. Qoboza said, "and I bet that the first thing he would do if he was released would be to organize a rally in Soweto and re-dedicate himself to the struggle."

In his interview with Lord Bethell, Mr. Mandela said much the same thing: "If I was released, I would never obey any restriction. If they confined me, for instance, to the Cape area, I would break the order and walk to my home in Soweto to be with my wife and daughter."

SPECIAL PROGRAM GOES TO THE HEART OF DISEASE PREVENTION

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to bring to your attention a recently completed program in the 11th District of Pennsylvania to help combat our Nation's No. 1 killer—heart disease. Pennsylvania's Wyoming Valley has a 3.7-percent higher death rate than the national average, so this program was of special interest to our area.

During an 8-week intervention period, the OK Heart Program distributed almost 100,000 publications and brochures as part of a massive education program to let people know how to avoid heart disease through changes in diet and exercize, and what to do in case of a heart attack.

The first phase of this program was a scientific survey of almost 22,000 area residents, which revealed that almost half of the survey group was at a high or medium risk of heart disease. The highest-risk group, representing 707 individuals, received by mail a special confidential advisory from Dr. Edward B. Diethrich, medical director of the Arizona Heart Institute and Dr. Patrick DeGennero of the Luzerne County Medical Society, encouraging these high-risk patients to see their physicians for further evaluation. Almost a thousand residents also took part in a special clinical screening program, to help identify individuals with heart-disease, or a high-risk of developing heart disease.

This project was funded and supported by 490 community groups and organizations who contributed products, services, or money. Many participated in test distribution, and other support services, while 26 groups made contributions of over $440,000.

The tremendous outpouring of assistance and cooperation that marked the OK Heart project shows how the people of the 11th District come together to care for each others' needs. As Dr. Diethrich pointed out in a recent newspaper article on the subject, this is a great point in the history of our community, and a valuable turning point in the lives of many in the Wyoming Valley.

Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to tell with certainty how many lives will be saved by this program. But if the OK Heart project saves just one life, or adds a single year of health and happiness, then the hard work and perseverence that went into this program has served its purpose.

IN SUPPORT OF THE NATIONAL AGRICULTURE COMMISSION

HON. RICHARD RAY

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, the House Agriculture Committee recently adopted the Glickman amendment as part of the 1985 farm bill. This amendment would establish a National Commission on Agricultural Policy to review and examine the current farm situation in this country and make recommendations for consistent, long-term farm policy. The Commission would be patterned after a working group which Governor Carlin established in Kansas.

This is an idea which I have advocated many times in speeches before this House. In fact, I introduced House Concurrent Resolution 131 urging that a National Agricultural Commission be established, and 91 of my colleagues have joined me in cosponsoring this resolution.

I am genuinely concerned that American agriculture as we know it is rapidly deteriorating and the vigorous farm economy that we once enjoyed is disappearing. To handle this growing crisis, I believe that a united effort is needed. Agricultural experts from around the country should be called together to address the long-range concerns of the American agricultural industry.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I support this proposal for a National Agriculture Commission and urge my colleagues to support it, too.

COMMON SENSE FROM A COUNTRY BANKER

HON. RON MARLENEE

OF MONTANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Speaker, the farm income crisis has caused a farm credit crisis, and despite the recent lack of national media attention, neither the farm income nor the farm credit crisis have disappeared.

In fact, the problems surrounding agriculture are as serious and tragic as ever before. Never have American agriculture producers faced such a challenge as they do now.

The same problems pose threats to the farm credit system. I offer to my colleagues the following article by a banker from Scobey, MT. He sheds some light on certain farm credit aspects, and shatters other farm credit myths.

Reprinted here is part one of the article. The rest of the story will be reprinted next week, as the House Agriculture Committee settles its conflicts on the 1985 farm bill.

For the edification of my colleagues, here is part one of "A Country Banker Tells How It Is."

A COUNTRY BANKER TELLS HOW IT IS

During the recent ag task force of Congressman Marlenee and federal agency loan heads, John Witte, a country banker, took time out from his daily affairs to travel around with the group, attending the meetings, to get perspective on the agricultural problems around Montana.

The following also is his prepared message to them, collectively. It should be of considerable interest to readers in this area as well as elsewhere:

I have been in agricultural banking for 35 years, and at the present time I am president and Chief Executive Officer of the Citizens State Bank in Scobey and the Traders State Bank in Poplar.

Last year the current governor of this great state declared quite a few of the counties as fire hazard counties, but took Daniels and Roosevelt County off his list because you couldn't start a fire with a flame thrower. What the drought didn't get, the hoppers did.

I charged off more loans last year than I have in the whole 25 previous years in management and ownership.

Our cattle numbers are now down to about 10 percent of normal, and those numbers will shrink more by this fall. The cow man will sell his cattle on a depressed market. I think the average yield on wheat will be about 10 bushels per acre over the past seven years, compared to 25-30 bushels in a year of normal rainfall.

Our farmers are selling the little they have for less than they did forty years ago—not even taking into account the additional ravages of inflation.

In that same period, the price of diesel fuel has gone from a dime to a dollar per gallon, and everything else the farmer and rancher buys has gone up accordingly.

There is an old definition of banking that is as true today in the country banks as it was one hundered years ago: "The purpose of a bank is to gather in the surplus funds of a community, to safeguard and protect them for its customers; to loan them out into the community to help the community grow and prosper, and to make a profit for its stockholders."

We are now sitting in the middle of a fight for survival for rural America . . . not only for the banks, but for the farmers and ranchers and all of the things they support: The main streets, the schools, the hospitals, the local, county, state and federal governments, and on and on.

"It has been accurately stated that before the cities and towns there were farmers and ranchers. When the farmers and ranchers are gone, so will the cities and towns".

But what will happen when American agriculture goes broke? It is rapidly headed in that direction.

To keep up with our demands, farmers and ranchers have borrowed . . . and have also poured many hundreds of thousands of their own dollars back into their operations to make them more productive.

As productivity increases, fewer farmers and ranchers are needed to provide food for the nation, as many young people are no longer staying on the farms . . .

And in years of prolonged drought, the "independent" farmer finds his family gone, his equity gone, his bank closed, and the folks he has been feeding have turned their backs, so that now for him, "independence" means "alone".

I go back to one of my previous questions and one of our problems in today's agriculture. What will happen to the food on the industrial worker's table when the American farmer and rancher go broke?

It is easy to criticize, but if we were not suffering this prolonged drought I wouldn't be here . . . but what is the Answer?

The PCA'S have played an important part in the agricultural economy. They have been good honest competitors, good lenders, and as far as I am concerned, they've done an admirable job. The PCA borrowers now are coming to us.

Good ag lending executives are hard to find and develop and in today's world I think that anybody who wants to get into it should see a psychiatrist.

We have dedicated people in the banks and PCA'S, and I think we know agricultural lending, but we need some help.

Let me review for you my experience over the past 25 years with the FmHA.

It was not created, as often referred to, as the lender of last resort and the bail out for the banks and PCA'S.

It was created to help the young beginning farmer, and the struggling farmer who needed more close supervision and help, and lower interest rates than the country banks and PCA's could afford to give.

In three specific instances in my lifetime, in visiting with the FHA supervisor, I told him about some of my problems. We reviewed the loans and he took the loans over.

Two or three years later after his close supervision he came back and said "John, they're too good for me, take them back". I did, and twenty years later, I still have them.

The FHA got involved in low interest housing, when we already had the Federal Housing Administration and Veterans Administration.

They also got involved in business and industrial loans when we already had the SBA with qualified people. Then there was another change in the thinking of FmHA and to my mind a disastrous change.

It was a change, similar in line to what my argument is today, "the preservation of rural America"—but it went too far. The FmHA did take some of the banks and PCA problem loans, but did more harm than good.

Again in my case, I know of three different borrowers that I was tired of fighting with, and I told them I would not finance them any more . . . that the best thing they could do was sell out before they went broke. They still had good equities.

Rather than listen to me, and I'm not God, none of us are, they went to FmHA and wound up with new equipment, new pickups, and 3 and 4 mortgages on their land.

Today they are flat broke, and the Federal government has taken a big loss. Not all of rural America can be saved and some of them are not entitled to be saved.

But, gentlemen, there are still a lot of good, honest, hard-working people out there. Still keeping their old equipment in good shape, driving old pickups and cars, and hoping and praying that the rains will come, the grasshoppers will die, and they will eventually get a decent price for their product.

These are the people who are going to pay income taxes, personal property taxes, real estate taxes . . . who are going to keep the hospitals, schools, and main streets of our rural towns open.

LAURENZO'S ITALIAN CENTER: NORTH DADE INSTITUTION

HON. WILLIAM LEHMAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, at a time when most Americans do business almost daily with big, impersonal multinational corporations, family-run business is alive and well in north Dade County. The best example is the Laurenzo family and Laurenzo's Italian Center in North Miami Beach.

Before I was elected to Congress, our family automobile dealership was right next door to the Laurenzo family grocery and restaurant. We sold many cars to customers over a cappuccino at Laurenzo's. Since that time, the Laurenzo family business expanded and grew. Typically, they shared their success with the entire community.

Laurenzo's means smiles, good will and, to me and my family, a long-time friendship. Not many can combine joy with economic success, but the Laurenzos have done it. The Miami Herald recently ran an article on this remarkable family, and I would like to share it with my colleagues.

To my friends, the Laurenzos, "Buona Fortuna" and congratulations for a job well done.

A FEAST OF FOOD AND FRIENDSHIP

(By John Sherwood)

Abe Rosenbaum has been there almost every day, seven days a week, for the past 12 years, patiently waiting outside for Laurenzo's "Italian Center" to open at 7 a.m. He is there for more than the coffee and rolls hot from the bakery.

"Abe is one of the family. If he doesn't show up, we worry about him and call," says head chef and baker Ralph Perrotta, a highly regarded member of Laurenzo's "family of workers," which can number as high as 120.

There since 5:30 a.m., Perrotta has started the Laurenzo food gears moving by lighting four huge revolving ovens, 12 feet high, that can bake 600 loaves of bread at a time. He also begins supervising the massive fresh and frozen food preparation that pours out of the kitchen, enough to feed 500 people a day in the cafeteria-style cafe in the center of the store.

Perrotta is the first to greet Rosenbaum, 75, who always sits in the cafe under the fake grape arbor at the same table, same chair, facing the steam table. "If I can't make it for the daily opening," Rosenbaum says, "I worry about them worrying about me and I call. I shop here, too, because everything is so fresh and it's nice and quiet early in the morning, which is not true of the afternoon. I come for the employees, too. I come because they make me feel like family."

This feeling of a close community and personalized service pervades the 25,000-square-foot, one-story building at 164th Street and West Dixie Highway, which has become an institution in North Miami Beach. The prevailing mood here is inspired by a long line of cookaholic Italian women who, traditionally and lovingly, have worked at Laurenzo's and slaved away in kitchens at home, celebrating their talents to a pots-and-pans chorus of: Eat! Eat! Eat!

"Our 50-seat cafe evolved from one table and some chairs that we assembled for husbands who waited while their wives shopped," says Ben Laurenzo, 56, who opened the store 21 years ago. His parents had retired to Florida from upstate New York and the rest of the family soon followed. Over the years, many of them have worked at the market including his late mother, Esther; his wife, Millie; and his brother, Achilles, called "Kelly" by the family.

"The cafe just grew and expanded from serving Danish and coffee to serving wine, beer, sandwiches and then hot plates," Laurenzo said. "Now, we have a full line of Italian dishes. Part of the chalkboard menu changes every day, but there are some items like lasagna—cooked by our Antoinette Michicichi for the past 13 years—that we would dare not go without. We have people who come here for breakfast Danish, lunch and dinner.

As plain and drab as Laurenzo's looks from the outside, inside it has all the frantic warmth, heady aroma and Old World fresh food offerings of an Italian street festival in an urban Little Italy. Those enamored of specialty foods, who like to be addressed by name, are at home here and many come weekly from other parts of South Florida to eat, shop and fill their coolers.

But a warning is in order: Do not go into Laurenzo's on an empty stomach, or with too much money in your pocket, because there is no turning back. Self-discipline is the key, but surrender usually is the fate.

Fill up your stomach before your food cart by heading immediately to the cafe. A bit tacky it may be, with all the boffo plastic festoonery of fruit dangling overhead, but the food is served in such large portions that two people often are seen sharing one less-than-$4 entree. They feed football players here, as well: ex-Dolphin Jimmy Cefalo, current Dolphins Kim Bokamper, Mike Kozlowski, Bob Baumhower, and equipment manager Bob Monica among others.

At the entrance, onlookers immediately are drawn to an open, fresh pasta assembly line, where eggs delivered fresh three times a week are broken by the tens of dozens, mixed with flour and then placed into a machine where other ingredients are added and pasta comes oozing out in ordered shapes and sizes. Trays full of 15 kinds of fresh pasta are on display near the machine. Opposite, Italian dishes cooked in the kitchen are stacked in tall frozen food cases, packed under the "Laurenzo" label in a staggering array.

As the shopping cart quickly fills, watch out for the next stop, the enticing realm of the bakery, where you are presented with still more judgments to make. Just try to pass up the dozens of hot, crusty loaves of bread and rolls that seem to roll out every hour, along with all sorts of tarts, cakes, pies, puffs and other pastries.

The first food trail dead-ends at the bakery, and a hard right leads to the next pungent aroma identifying the deli, managed by Barbara Lee. Here, one is further bewitched, bewildered and bamboozled by the choices of meats, salads and a hundred kinds of domestic and imported cheeses—four of which are freshly grated three times a day.

The meat counter is next, the first in the long line of refrigerated cases, where they sell three tons of veal a week, three kinds of Italian sausage that are stuffed on the premises, and the regular run of chops, steaks, ribs and standing roasts. Opposite the meat cases are freshly packaged meats for those who prefer not to wait with their take-a-number in hand for the personalized service.

The next stop, at the far end of the building, is the seafood department. It is managed by Robert Laurenzo, 22, son of founder Ben; brother of store manager David, 32; of Carol, 30, who works in the office; and of Danielle, who can handle a cash register at the age of 11.

Robert, always wearing rubber boots because of his damp surroundings, picks up his own seafood about 6 a.m. at Pompano Beach wholesale fish markets. He often has 20 kinds of fish laid out on ice, as well as other delicacies such as fresh conch, sardine, octopus and squid. Cod from New England is one of his best sellers.

Behind these counters, the real action is hidden backstage, where the churning of the food mills is heard almost until closing time at 7:30. This is where the Laurenzo style of "food from scratch" begins its long procession from the blasting heat of the bakery/kitchen, where flour-powered bakers punch, pull and prod, to the arctic climate of the meat rooms, where the bloody-aproned butchers chop, cut and grind.

The middle of this bustling market is filled with shelves of canned, jarred and packaged speciality foods, most of it imported, along with a surprisingly well-stocked selection of wine, also managed by David. Add to this such delicacies as whole frozen heads of lamb, sun dried tomatoes from Italy packed in "extra-virgin olive oil" and even Italian toothpaste.

Heads of lamb, you say? Perrotta, relaxing in the cafe the other day with a glass of white wine, is used to handling special requests because this is the sort of place where one goes for the difficult. Two young men came in needing a 90-pound pig, roasted whole "with the head and all," they said, a bit puzzled.

"That's no problem," said the boss chef in a soft and sweet Italian accent. He has baked as many as 300 turkeys here for Thanksgiving. "I marinate it overnight with spices and seasonings, stuff it with sausage, and cook it for six hours," he explained with a toss of his hand, as if he were talking about grilling a burger." Then you come and take it away and eat it, OK?"

Fast running out of room, Laurenzo's has expanded into a fresh vegetables market across from its parking lot. And in the back of the Italian Center, the family has put up a two-story, Mediterranean-style building that houses a fancy, newly opened Italian restaurant, the 125-seat Cotillion, with an Italian chef from New York, Ernesto Novero.

They also have expanded their catering operation. And every Wednesday evening, they feature ballroom dancing in their 9,000-square-foot ballroom above the restaurant.

Perrotta dreams of the day when Laurenzo's adds a floor for a massive pasta assembly line that would turn out pasta for all of Florida and beyond.

"It can be done," says David, the ambitious store manager. "It can be done."

COX CABLE TIDEWATER, INC.

HON. G. WILLIAM WHITEHURST

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Speaker, in April of this year, the Governor of Virginia, the Honorable Charles S. Robb, presented a Certificate of Recognition to Cox Cable Tidewater for their community service programming. Mr. Irvine B. Hill, director of communications for Cox Cable Tidewater, has provided me with a summary of their public service activities during the past year, and I am pleased to share this information with my colleagues at this point in the RECORD, and to add my own commendations to those expressed by our Governor.

Besides the achievements listed by Mr. Hill, Cox Cable Tidewater has also aired the first of what will be a series of programs to acquaint the citizens of our area with the growth and development of the Virginia Zoological Park in Norfolk, and individual members of the Cox family have actively participated on a personal basis in many of the community projects.

Mr. Hill and Cox Cable Tidewater are indeed to be commended for their continuing active involvement in improving the quality of life in the Hampton Roads area of Virginia.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Richmond, VA, April 10, 1985.

Mr. IRVINE B. HILL,
Unit Manager and Director of Communications, Cox Cable Tidewater, Inc., Norfolk, VA.

DEAR MR. HILL: On behalf of Governor Robb, I would like to thank you and your staff for your continued efforts to provide quality public service programming to your viewers in Tidewater, Virginia. In addition to providing valuable public services to your viewers, your efforts have helped support the Governor's initiatives and objectives to improve the quality of life for all Virginians.

In recognition of these outstanding achievements, the Governor is pleased to present Cox Cable Tidewater with the enclosed Certificate of Recognition. Cox Cable has provided an invaluable service to its viewers and all Virginians, and your efforts are to be commended. We are looking forward to more fine public service programming in the future.

Thank you again and congratulations.

Cordially,

BETTY J. DIENER.

CERTIFICATE OF RECOGNITION

By virtue of the authority vested by the Constitution in the Governor of the Commonwealth of Virginia, there is hereby officially recognized: Cox Cable Tidewater, Inc.

Whereas, Cox Cable Tidewater, Inc. has been active in providing its viewers with high quality consumer-oriented public affairs programming which provides valuable information on important economic, environmental and social issues; and

Whereas, this programming has offered valuable support and assistance to the goals and objectives of this Administration for improving the quality of life in Virginia; and

Whereas, the outstanding contributions of Cox Cable Tidewater, Inc. are worthy of the attention of all Virginians;

Now, therefore, I Charles S. Robb, Governor, do hereby recognize Cox Cable Tidewater, Inc., and I salute their continuing efforts to provide the citizens of Tidewater Virginia with such high quality community service programming.

CHARLES S. ROBB,
Governor.

MARCH 1985—WCOX IN REVIEW

Over the past twelve months, Cox Cable Tidewater has continued to exert itself in the role of a dynamic and highly respected corporate citizen in the South Hampton Roads community. Again WCOXTV-11 can properly accept much of the credit for successfully positioning and maintaining this positive corporate profile through our affirmative approach to the needs, problems and issues of the communities we serve.

During the past year, WCOXTV-11 has sustained this positive thrust for the company through maintaining a quality reputation of providing unique issue and people-oriented community programming. Our affirmative action approach has, most recently, taken the form of a "swamping strategy" in an effort to step-up our already heavy community involvement, as well as counter some unfortunate negative publicity of which Cox has been the victim of late.

As a brief overview, Cox Cable Tidewater through the operations of WCOXTV-11, has achieved the following community-programming successes:

Cultural.—Any cable company who is seriously seeking to establish itself as an involved and interested corporate neighbor must first actively seek out and produce programming which touches the cultural needs and interests of a community. In addition to the 60-minute special program WCOX produced on the Virginia Opera Association last June, Cox Cable Tidewater has been active on two other cultural fronts in recent months:

(1) The ODU Dance Company.—Just prior to the Christmas Season last December, Cox CAble Tidewater produced a special 30-minute program on the ODU Dance Company and their up-coming ballet presentation of "The Nutcracker Suite".

(2) The Chrysler Museum.—Cox Cable Tidewater has found it to be very advantageous to regularly tap the individuals and resources connected with the Chrysler Museum. Since last October, there have appeared on WCOXTV-11 special programs on Walter P. Chrysler, the benefactor of the Museum, and his recently deceased wife, Jean Outland Chrysler, who was a mover and influential member of the Tidewater Community as well as founder of their renowned Chrysler Museum Library.

In addition to being actively aware and involved in the community's cultural and artistic interests, Cox Cable has also found that providing programming which celebrates the religious and spiritual life of the community is equally important. With this in mind, WCOXTV-11 highlights each traditional religious season with an appropriate program such as the special "Christmas Pageant" taped and shown of The Church of the Good Shepherd, and the Easter Program we are presently working on with Monumental Methodist Church in Portsmouth.

Educational.—As part of Cox Cable Tidewater's sincere desire to present programming that touches the community in a variety of areas, education and citizen awareness programs are a major part of our programming fare on WCOXTV-11. Some of the most successful and effective use of local programming can be attributed to our efforts in this category.

(1) "Saving America's Bay" was a 30-minute educational documentary, completed last January in cooperation with the prestigious Virginia Institute of Marine Sciences, which dealt with the ongoing efforts to identify and solve the major ecological problems presently threatening the life of the Chesapeake Bay.

(2) "Consumer Guideposts" represents the most indepth consumer programming commitment by any cable system in the country. For the past year our ongoing involvement in consumer affairs programming has been massive. By working in close cooperation with the state and local offices of consumer affairs, Cox Cable has produced eighteen 30-minute programs focusing on a variety of consumer-oriented topics. For our efforts to date, we have been recognized by the Honorable Virginia Knauer, Special Assistant to President Reagan for Consumer Affairs.

(3) The Lynn Fischer health show is a limited series of 10 programs wherein various health topics were discussed with physicians, and health experts. Lynn Fischer, local personality and an expert on health issues in her own right, co-produces the series and helps to direct the discussion.

Cox Cable Tidewater is especially proud of our commitment and involvement in the area of educational and instructional programming. In this category, we are excited to point out that the above educational programming efforts have been nominated as a 1985 NCTA ACE Award candidates.

Minority Affairs.—Certainly any successful attempt at maintaining a balanced local-programming effort must include serious projects concerning minority affairs. In this realm Cox Cable Tidewater has consistently gotten high marks. Recent samples of such programming are:

(1) Urban league of Tidewater.—"Building Bridges", a half-hour overview of this socially-conscious organization was produced last November and received a tremendous as well as enthusiastic area reception. The object of the program was to raise the viewer's awareness while de-mystifying the role of the Urban League in the community.

(2) NAACP.—The NAACP is an important organization to be associated with in any successful effort toward total community involvement. Last October WCOXTV-11 covered the annual meeting and membership dinner held in Norfork. Cox Cable produced this special program and aired it over Channel 11 as a "Community Special". We presently are working on the ground-work to produce a special documentary on the organization schedule to air in the late summer of 1985.

(3) The Philippino Community.—WCOXTV-11 has aired the semi-annual Philippino festivals for the past three years. The special ethnic segment of our community has established itself as an asset to the Tidewater community. In 1983, Roger M. Pierce was recognized by the Philippino Ambassador for Cox Cable Tidewater's involvement in producing this series of special programs.

Public Affairs.—Last, but by no means the least, of the affirmative community programming efforts pursued by Cox Cable Tidewater, centers on our commitment to produce programs dealing with local issues and public affairs. This block of programming which regularly airs on WCOXTV-11 makes up a large bulk of the positive thrust which is or goal. Some of the recent special programs for which Cox Cable has received much positive recognition are programs for and about The United Way, The Sanctuary, (an area home for young and unwed mothers): American Heart Association, Crime-Solvers and Crime Line, Catholic Family Services, Tidewater Council on Alcoholism, The Joy Fund, (a local charity organization benefiting less-fortunate children at Christmas time); "The Tidewater Clean Community Commissions, and last, but not least, our much heralded series highlighting the Great Citizens of Tidewater, to name but a few.

All of the above mentioned locally-produced programs are merely a sample of the work generated by the WCOXTV-11 staff and crew in the past twelve months. This is simply the foundation upon which Cox Cable Tidewater builds its credibility in the community and much more, can be, and is, being done on an ongoing basis. In conclusion, Cox Cable Tidewater is committed to total community involvement. The on-going accomplishment of WCOXTV-11 help to build, maintain and support that goal. As our theme, accurately describes, we are the "station that touches Tidewater", and through these sincere and consistent efforts Cox Cable Tidewater can seriously realize their position as a concerned, involved and highly respected member of the Tidewater community.

Respectfully submitted,

IRVINE B. HILL,
Director of Communications.

PLAN FOR A REPUBLICAN WAR ON POVERTY

HON. NEWT GINGRICH

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, Frank Gregorsky has outlined some major steps in the right direction for an effective struggle to end poverty. Every Member of the Congress should take note of it.

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 2, 1985]

A PLAN FOR A REPUBLICAN WAR ON POVERTY

(By Frank Gregorsky)

Item: On June 3, a study by the Children's Defense Fund sketched a crisis for black children. The CDF called for more jobs for teens, more subsidized housing, and more birth-control clinics. A CDF staffer priced the desired agenda at $14 billion.

Item: Last week the Commerce Department confirmed the sharpest one-year drop in poverty in 16 years. It was tied to last year's 6.8 percent surge in real GNP growth, which was induced by tax reduction rather than by make-work or social welfare programs.

Is the glass half empty or half full? Those taking the half-full view could cite additional indicators: infant mortality rates below their 1980 levels; stepped-up collections of child support from delinquent fathers; one of every five new jobs since 1982 going to a black person.

Then again, some of what the CDF said should shake us up: "Only 67% of America's black children have an employed parent, compared to 86% of white children . . . In 1982, over 55% of all births to black women were out of wedlock . . . Among black women under age 20 the proportion was 86% . . . Eight out of every 10 white children live in two-parent families; only 4 out of 10 black children do . . . Black children are . . . four times as likely to be murdered . . ."

High GNP growth will not be enough. To judge from new data on the ineffectiveness of much welfare spending, neither will ambitious federal programs. What we will have is an irresistible force—economic growth—eventually meeting an immovable object—hard-core poverty, and a culture of dependency that Franklin Roosevelt called "a narcotic, a subtle destroyer of the human spirit."

When it comes to poverty, conservatives and administration supporters say the glass is half full, while CDF and its liberal allies blame the president for a glass half empty. What should be discussed is whose agenda is more likely to fill the glass.

The glass could be filled by an agenda that promotes individual enterprise, public safety and traditional values. Indeed, 20 years after the launching of the Great Society, it is surprisingly easy to envision a Republican war on poverty. It might consist of:

Tax Relief: The president's tax-simplification package would drastically reduce the federal tax burden on the under-$15,000 group. For helping low-income working families, it was the only tax plan to earn a perfect rating from the House Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families. It helps to make work more rewarding than welfare.

Enterprise Zones: Owning a small business is one of the greatest work incentives and family-strengtheners in history. Enterprise zones have twice passed the Senate and even won Walter Mondale's blessing. But the House blocks them.

Job Training: The administration, with the Job Training Partnership Act, replaced leaf-raking with skill-making. Over half the trainees find permanent jobs in the private sector. This approach can be expected: Bob Woodson of the National Center for Neighborhood Enterprise suggests making relief payments available in lump sums for training programs or as risk capital for starting a business.

Youth Opportunity Wage: Willing workers age 16-21 should not be subject to regular minimum-wage laws when looking for temporary summer jobs. The National Conference of Black Mayors agrees, recognizing that the chance to begin learning the skills and attitudes of job-holding means more in the early period than how much one gets paid.

Public Housing: The most responsible tenants should get to manage the properties, with the chance to buy them over time. In experimental cases, drugs, vandalism and vacancies have dropped sharply. Look to England: Margaret Thatcher's Tories have a housing strategy that has created anti-property tax and pro-free market political support among lower-income, former Laborite voters.

Stopping Crime: Serious crime was falling even before the effects of the anti-crime legislation pushed through Congress in 1984 were felt. But it will always be worst in poor neighborhoods. No group that speaks out "for the poor" is too credible if it lacks a plan to further cut crime rates. Yet how many Republicans think to market their tough stance on crime as real concern for poor America?

There would be universal support for a crackdown on violent juveniles. Their offenses at present do not count toward a "police record." That means hardened criminals don't technically start their hardening until age 18. But stiff sentences early prevent crimes later. This is called "targeted sentencing," and innocent poor children would be alive today if there were more of it.

When it comes to welfare-state approaches to poverty, the liberals are intellectually bankrupt. The government is just plain bankrupt. Fighting poverty these days means accommodating both fiscal reality and human nature. The new poverty numbers should be the foundation from which Republicans innovate—using approaches they already happen to be comfortable with.

LATIN AMERICAN DEBT CRISIS

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, today's New York Times had an insightful article by Mexican writer, Carlos Fuentes. He has succinctly identified the real crisis in Latin America today. I submit Mr. Fuentes article for my colleague's perusal.

The article follows:

THE REAL LATIN THREAT

(By Carlos Fuentes)

The United States should be concentrating its attention on the Latin American debt crisis, not on the arming of contras against Nicaragua. The price riots in the Dominican Republic, the invasion of supermarkets in Rio de Janeiro,, and the waves of strikes everywhere in Latin America poses a far greater threat to United States security than do the politics of three million Nicaraguans.

Over the past 40 years, Latin America has managed to expand economically and extend certain limited benefits of health, housing and education to its people. The present crisis endangers even those modest gains and puts the future of modern Latin America at risk.

Per-capita production fell by nine percent last year, bringing us back to the level of 1977—eight years wiped out in one! Prices rose by 163 percent in 1984. The region's foreign debt is more than $350 billion, yet our export earnings have decreased to $95 billion a year. Latin America is scheduled to pay more than $45 billion in annual interest. That means that we have become a net exporter of capital to industrialized nations exactly at the moment when we need capital most. It also means there is very little capital left for economic development, and even less for basic social programs.

Meanwhile, the middle classes are restlessly undergoing a revolution of lost expectations. The rural areas are growing increasingly poorer as prices for agricultural products decline. Foreign trade continues its downhill ride. Exports from the third world to the industrialized world declined by $42 billion last year. The disruption of trade also hits the industrialized world. United States exports to Latin America fell from $38 billion in 1981 to $20 billion in 1983. This cost the United States economy 300,000 jobs.

Clearly, not only the United States, but also the whole world, and certainly Latin America, face what the economist Eliot Janeway has called "a financial Pearl Harbor." The millions of urban marginals in Latin America's great cities are depoliticized, with nothing to lose, festering in the ciudades perdidas, the lost cities, preparing their assault on the citadels of wealth and privilege.

Latin America could explode with almost medieval resonance. Bereft of political structure, movements would be quickly coopted by messianic demagogues who would seek to exploit our traditions of religion and violence. These traditions are ingrained in the culture of Latin America. They do not have to be taught. And in the end, present trends, if unchecked, will strengthen another Latin American tradition—the authoritarian use of power. Our political institutions run the gravest risk of being wiped out.

We should be listening to men like Mayor Andrew Young of Atlanta, Felix G. Rohatyn of New York, Pedro-Pablo Kuczynski of Peru and Lord Lever of Britain when they argue for a new Bretton Woods—a new set of monetary and trade arrangements that, instead of perpetually rescheduling debt, would seek to change the nature of that debt. In Lord Lever's proposal, this would be done by deferring current interest for the sake of future profit through new zero-interest securities which would transform short-term debt into medium- and long-term instruments to finance productive investment.

We should also be listening to the voices of two men from opposing ends of the political spectrum: Henry A. Kissinger and Fidel Castro. We must listen to Mr. Kissinger when he warns that the Latin democracies might not survive "in the face of dramatically falling standards of living that appear to be imposed from the outside." We must listen to Mr. Castro when he warns that Latin America is "financing the economies and development of the richest industrialized countries in the world with impressive sums of money."

Mr. Kissinger proposes the equivalent of the Marshall Plan—a hemispheric development program that would replace the "financial minuet" of quarterly crisis meetings on overdue interest payments. Mr. Castro flatly asserts that the debt is unpayable. To prevent the immense damage that national defaults would mean for the United States and the international banking system, Mr. Castro proposes that the governments of the industrialized countries assume the debts owed to private banks.

Mr. Castro has said these things dramatically, as is his wont, by capturing the imagination of the housewife, the wage-earner, the pensioners, the bureaucrat, the shopkeeper—the menaced middle class of Latin America. In fact, the debt crisis has permitted Mr. Castro to re-enter Latin American society on his own terms while the United States plays ancient soap operas on Radio Marti.

Democracy and economic progress do not come naturally to a region where the bywords, for centuries, have been political authoritarianism, archaic violence, patrimonialist whim, crumb-lifting from the table of capitalism. The future of Latin America, and of the United States, depends on economic solutions, not on printing spy booklets on how to neutralize the Sandinistas.

ACID RAIN

HON. GERRY SIKORSKI

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. SIKORSKI. Mr. Speaker, acid rain is potentially the most serious environmental threat facing our Nation in the 1980's and it is an issue which commands the immediate attention of the American public. Through a barrage of studies, we have learned that acid rain is poisoning our Nation's lakes and marine habitat, our drinking water, our crops, and our forests. Recently the Environmental Defense Fund reported for the first time an explicit 1-to-1 relationship between sulfur dioxide and acid rain after observing the effects of smelter emissions in the Western United States.

With a direct causal relationship established, our Canadian friends are drawing attention to the implications of this environmental hazard on our public health. I wish to enter a recent article from the Twin Cities' St. Paul Pioneer Press describing a study undertaken by Canada to examine the health implications of acid rain on the health of schoolchildren. Scientific evidence already indicates that acid rain may be linked to several forms of human brain degeneration, particularly Alzheimer's disease. Other research has uncovered links between sulfur dioxide and premature deaths in up to 50,000 human beings. The Canadian study reemphasizes that acid rain not only strikes at our environment but also our human health.

ACID RAIN AND LUNGS

For the most part, debate over acid rain has centered on the phenomenon's threat to lakes, forests and buildings. A Canadian study, set to begin this fall, will shift the focus to people. Depending on results, the study could confirm growing fears among scientists that the air pollutants that trigger acid rain also damage the lungs of those forced to inhale them.

According to an official of the Department of National Health and Welfare in Ottawa, some 5,000 elementary school students will participate in the study. Students in five southwestern Ontario communities that receive heavy doses of acid precipitation will be compared to students in five Saskatchewan towns that are mostly free of acid pollution.

Like acid rain, the study's impact will drift far beyond national boundaries. If Ontario students show unusual lung damage, the United States must shoulder some responsibility because an unhealthy portion of the sulfur dioxide that causes Ontario's acid rain is produced by smokestack industries in the Ohio Valley.

Moreover, establishing a positive link between acid rain and damaged lung tissue would put increased pressure on the Reagan administration and foot-draggers in the electric utility and coal industries to ease their steadfast opposition to emission-control legislation. That, in turn, could inspire a so-far gutless Congress to take the action it should have taken last year, when acid rain control measures were high on the Capitol Hill agenda.

If—whew—all that happens, those in the United States who fish, love forests, appreciate historical buildings or breathe with lungs will owe Ottawa a note of thanks.

A TRIBUTE TO TOM KEATING

HON. ANDREW JACOBS, JR.

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Speaker, when we Hoosiers think of the Indianapolis Star Columnist Tom Keating, we think of decency, talent, modesty, pathos, common sense and funny stories. We also get misty because of his untimely death long before his life saw autumn.

Tom Keating's spirit will survive as Ernie Pyle's spirit has survived. One thinks of the profound line in the film "I Never Sang for My Father":

Death ends a life, but it does not end a relationship which continues in the minds of the survivors * * *

The beautiful tributes which follow tell a lot about the goodness of Tom Keating, but they do not and could not tell all of it, which will go on and on as long as people can read the printed word.

[From the Indianapolis Star, Aug. 24, 1985]

TOM KEATING

The death Friday of former Star columnist Thomas R. Keating at 45 is a tragic loss, not only for the family and friends who loved him so much, but for Indianapolis and Indiana, whose people and places he so celebrated.

Before leaving The Star in January to become director of communications for Lilly Endowment, Mr. Keating had written a daily column which appeared for 14 years in the left hand column of the newspaper's "split page," the first page of the second section.

Many readers had the habit of beginning their day with that column and no wonder. It was the reflection of a remarkable man, one who stepped up to life with uncommon zest and enthusiasm, one who dealt sincerely with others with candor and compassion, one who as a writer never lost the human touch.

He told his stories in the crisp, clear style of such newspaper giants as Red Smith, Ernie Pyle and Damon Runyon. His work was widely reprinted and had been published by a variety of magazines, including Reader's Digest.

He won numerous awards but preferred to talk about his other collections—charitable causes and friends—or of his many interests, including sports, books and serious ideas of all kinds.

Throughout his adult life, Mr. Keating, a devoted father, gave unselfishly of his time and talents to help young people, especially in sports, where he coached in church and little leagues, and in journalism, where he taught feature writing at Indiana University, Purdue University at Indianapolis, greeting any discovery of new writing talent with great glee.

Tom Keating was an extraordinary newspaperman and an exceptional human being whose important work at Lilly Endowment has now been cut short by the tragedy of an early death.

It is true that many in Indiana will mourn his loss but it is also true that we are all better off for having known him.

[From the Indianapolis News, Aug. 26, 1985]

THOMAS KEATING

It's often not easy to remain objective about one's competitors, but one didn't have to be objective to respect Tom Keating. Day in and day out, he was one of the best newspaper columnists this city has seen.

Keating died in the early morning last Friday at the age of 45. He died less than nine months after leaving his desk and daily column with The Indianapolis Star behind to become director of communications with the Lilly Endowment.

For 14 years, from 1971 to the beginning of this year, Tom Keating's column was regular reading for much of Indianapolis and Central Indiana. His gift was for searching out the "little" stories in the lives of "everyday" people that were actually bigger than the day's front-page headlines.

His spare and economical style of writing and down-to-earth way of telling a story made a reader feel he or she was chatting with Keating over coffee rather than reading a newspaper. Other writers won readers; Tom Keating made friends.

That's why he will be missed—by his family, his friends, his co-workers and former readers. And, of course, by his competitors.

[From the Indianapolis Star, Aug. 24, 1985]

TRIBUTE TO TOM KEATING: A TREMENDOUS SOURCE OF INSPIRATION

(By John Shaughnessy)

(John Shaughnessy's column regularly appears in The Star Monday, Wednesday and Friday. This special column is a tribute to his friend Tom Keating.)

It was the fourth column I had ever written and, in response, The Star's switchboard was lighting up like a pinball machine. The callers were not pleased; in fact, they were hostile. And their overall opinion of me seemed to be expressed in a message left by one of the callers: "I love The Star and I loved Tom Keating, but this Shaughnessy is terrible!"

I was shaken, so I turned to the writer whom I respected more than anyone. I phoned Tom Keating, who two months earlier had left The Star to accept a job with Lilly Endowment.

"Hey, Tom, do you want your old job back? After today, I know there are a lot of people who want you back." Tom asked what I meant, and after I told him about the calls, he replied, "I thought that was the best column you've written so far. Don't worry about what people say, just keep writing the way you always have and you'll be fine."

That conversation was among the first things I thought of when I was told that Tom died Friday.

There are people who knew Tom better than I. The roots of their friendship extended for years, and their bonds were stronger and deeper. But I'm among those who owe the most to him.

I first met him five years ago when I enrolled in a writing course that he was teaching at IUPUI. He liked some of my work and asked if he could show it to The Star's city editor. He then arranged an interview for me, and when I was hired, he seemed as happy as I was.

Four years later, he would be in my corner again. When he decided to stop writing his column after 14 years, he recommended that I be chosen to join Dan Carpenter as one of the two people to write a column three days a week.

As much as I appreciated Tom's support and ability, I appreciated him much more when I began to write a column. Writing a column three days a week is the hardest thing I've ever done. When I think that Tom wrote the column skillfully and often beautifully five times a week for 14 years, I am in awe.

But I am even more impressed by the quality that marked his life, a characteristic that was often displayed in subtle ways.

Earlier this year, Tom met Dan and me for lunch to answer any questions we had about writing a column. When Tom arrived 10 minutes late, he apologized, saying that the midday Mass at St. John Catholic Church was longer than usual that day. Attending church was a regular part of Tom's life.

When we went to the 1983 Notre Dame-Purdue football game together, Tom picked me up at my house. Since we were running late, I moved toward his car when he arrived. But Tom wasn't in a hurry. He had been watching his youngest son play football, and now he was taking time to talk with my wife and our two sons.

He also had an Irishman's appreciation of life, combining a willingness to occasionally drink a few beers with the ability to share stories that would leave you in tears from laughing or crying.

In the end, talking about Tom comes down to the impression he left on others. People who neither met him nor talked to him noticed the decency and quality of his life in his columns. And for those of us who knew him, we can only add that we are thankful for having had that opportunity.

As I write this, several letters addressed to Tom are on my desk. They arrived Friday, similar to the many others that have been sent here, even though Tom left this office more than eight months ago. It was obvious that some people still had information they wanted Tom to know, they still had stories they wanted to share with him.

Maybe it was their way of saying that they wanted Tom back, that they wanted to still be able to count on him.

Today, I and a lot of other people share that feeling.

A PUBLIC TRIBUTE TO TOM KEATING, WHO WOULDN'T HAVE STOOD FOR IT

Now it's my turn.

If anyone besides Tom Keating were involved, I doubt I would bother to follow all the elected officials, newspapers executives and other personages who have poured out their tributes during the past couple of days.

People with access to printing presses and microphones have a tendency to abuse their privileges for selfish sentiment, and newspaper columnists (Tom Keating being a notable exception) are the worst offenders.

Besides, when the guy on the street reads and hears all these panegyrics about famous people who have died, he is rightfully skeptical. When Ronald Reagan dies. The Washington Post will miraculously find a dozen nice things to say about him.

The difference with Keating is that it's all true. All the eulogies about his feel for the common man, his nose for a tasty story, his devotion to family and friends, are based in hard fact.

A cynic or a charlatan could not have done what Tom did, five days a week for 14 years. He would have blown his cover, or his top, in fairly short order and gone off to something easier or more lucrative.

Tom, of course, did leave newspapering at a shockingly young age, relinquishing a position that is the stuff of dreams for the average kid in journalism school. But he left this business for a new challenge and a line of work that wasn't entirely different for a person of his character. It was logical that Tom Keating and the city's most prominent charitable foundation would find each other.

That's really a major league marriage, isn't it? Keating and Lilly Endowment Inc. Hard to find a more droppable name in these parts. Just being able to say I knew Keating, had lunch with him, was one of my biggest thrills when I joined The Star eight years ago.

What I came to like most about Tom was, he hated all that. Being a celebrity, an institution. The picture in the paper, the fact that he was better-known than almost anyone he wrote about—it amounted to a hair shirt he wore as penance for the pleasure of telling other people's stories.

I'm not sure exactly how to say this correctly, but Tom did not make a big deal of what he did. He knew he was at the top of a wonderful craft. Everyone wishes he could write, and Keating made writing look easy. But at the same time, he was achingly aware of the limitations of daily deadline journalism. As long as there were other kinds of writing, other tests of talent and will, he would not rest with being a columnist, even a famous one.

By and large, newspaper people I have met are not well-read. We are more likely to know the weekend anchor on Channel 2 than the title of the third book in the Alexandria Quartet. Keating, who was at home with cops and coaches and plumbed the poetry of their lives would sooner chat about good books than almost anything else.

Wise as he was to the hustlers and demagogues who populate the world of the journalist. Tom retained a child's sensitivity to the mystery and heroism of "ordinary" life. He had the great, elusive gift of humility, denied to all but the best of us.

Last year, Tom's friend Bill Kuntz, a revered youth leader in the city, died after a terrible struggle with cancer. One day, as Bill lay in the hospital, Tom remarked to me that we never seem to get around to telling people we love them until it's too late. "So I did," Tom said. "I went to the hospital and I told him." Doing so meant at least as much to Tom as the lovely eulogy he wrote in his column a few days later.

I would not presume to say I had that kind of closeness to Tom. I am proud to say we were friends. I had tried, clumsily, to express my admiration, my affection, and my indebtedness, back when I thought he was going to live forever. The guy would always cut me short. So now, I'll have to do what Tom never would have stood for—tell everybody else.

TRIBUTE TO A COMRADE

(By David Mannweiler)

I never gave much thought to mortality until five years ago, when I was 38.

It was five years ago this month, to be exact.

I was rummaging through a file folder in a desk in my home when I found a yellowed clipping of my father's obituary from an August 1949 newspaper.

The opening paragraph said my father was 36 when he died.

"My God," I thought, shocked by the thought. "I have outlived my father."

A similar thought flashed through my mind Friday when I learned Tom Keating had died.

All the cliches applied: At 45, Tom Keating was too young to die. He had too much to live for. He had so much more to give.

But I also remembered how Tom and I occasionally had shared the reckless disregard that all young men harbor toward death.

We had laughingly wondered what the one-paragraph obituary would say about us in newspapers we didn't know in cities we didn't know when we died old and forgotten and retired.

Newspapers in this country have a habit of printing one-paragraph obits on old journalists who die in other cities.

Tom's paragraph, or paragraphs, came too soon.

I can't say I knew Tom as well I would have liked.

We shared some bar time at the Press Club and some lunches and speaking platforms, but we didn't socialize.

We both knew we couldn't. We were colleagues, but we were competitors, too.

Five days a week for more than a decade, Tom in The Star and I in The News went head-to-head challenging each other to come up with the best column. It was fun, and it was frightening.

We traded compliments on columns printed but never discussed columns planned.

On those rare occasions when he stopped by my desk or I at his, we could talk about sports or politics or our families but not our friendly competition.

When my son was born, he was one of the first to offer congratulations.

We both thought it remarkable that, except for the 500-Mile Race, we so rarely crossed paths while searching for a story.

Twice, maybe three times, in all those years, we both showed up at the same event with notebooks in hand.

I envied Tom's talent with words, his inventive mind and his enormous range of contacts. The man was good. One of the best.

Through his columns, Tom became an institution in this city. Through his columns, he became a presence in our lives. I missed his column when he left The Star in January to join Lilly Endowment.

When a collection of Tom's columns was published in 1982, I told Tom I wanted him to autograph my copy, and add an inscription.

It became a running joke between us.

Whenever I ran into Tom, I would ask him when I'd get my book. He always said, with a smile, "I haven't decided yet what to write."

The last time we talked, about three weeks ago on the phone, I wanted some information from Lilly Endowment. Tom cooperated.

But then he held the call. He wanted to talk about newpapering, about changes he had noticed in the papers and how strange it was to read the papers in a different light, now that he was on the outside.

I ended that call by asking Tom where my book was.

He said he hadn't decided what to write.

Tom's columns will have to speak for him now.

KEATING'S PROSE TOUCHED MINDS AND EMOTIONS

(By Bob Collins)

Tom Keating was the best newspaper columnist ever in this state.

He combined a reporter's curiosity with a storyteller's skill. Usually understated, always well-written, his columns touched minds and emotions.

Keating saw things the rest of us didn't or ignored. He mined gold from slag. He elevated the ordinary to the interesting.

He found stories in improbable places. The city was his beat; its citizens his reporters. He had a rare talent for drawing people into conversations, getting quotes a man with a notebook or tape recorder never would hear.

Tom was a shy man, but he wasn't humble. There are no humble people in this business.

Though he was aware of his power, he never was comfortable with it. But he accepted, however reluctantly, the fact that he was a strong force in this community. He used his clout prudently.

He was a man of firm opinions, often voiced forcefully. But they never appeared in his column. His column belonged to the people. So he wrote them, entered their home in the morning and told them interesting stories. He just sort of sat down and had a cup of coffee with us.

You glanced at the headlines, then you turned to Keating. It was a Hoosier habit for 14 years.

The words seemed to flow like a gentle stream. But it wasn't that easy. Tom wore out his share of carpets and water fountains en route to a deadline.

In the last year of his life, diabetes was a constant concern. And the stomach-churning rigors of doing a daily column were not helping his physical condition.

He talked often of leaving. I never believed him. He was a professional newspaperman, married to the job.

But he found another outlet for his considerable talents—the Lilly Endowment. And it must be noted that he simply moved on to a better opportunity to help people in the city he loved.

If this be blasphemy, make the most of it. But I believe God is publishing a much better newspaper today.

IN MEMORY: "LIKE ALL REAL HEROES, HE GAVE MORE THAN HE GOT"

(By Patrick J. Traub)

Robert L. Cotter has a scrapbook of newspaper articles and pictures of his Indianapolis Public School 27 "Masters of Disasters" national championship chess team.

Inside the book is a picture of Cotter, the team and President Reagan.

"That picture means more to me than any other," Cotter said Friday. "It also shows what Tom Keating meant to the team."

That placement captures the public career of the late columnist who told the stories of Indianapolis and Indiana for 14 years through more than 3,500 columns.

The chess team, a group of sixth-grade pupils from an innercity neighborhood, had won the Indiana chess team championship. A trip to the national championship was available, but the money wasn't.

"He wrote one column and the world was opened to us," Cotter recalled. Contributions poured in to pay for the trip to the national championship, which the team won.

The team became national media stars, eventually meeting the president in the White House. Mr. Keating chronicled each step.

It was that type of daily column that caused Lawrence S. Connor, managing editor of The Star to remark as Mr. Keating left the paper, "How does he expect us to start the day without his column? It is worse than being taken off coffee."

Robert P. Early, the former managing editor of The Star who turned the daily column over to Mr. Keating in 1971, recalled that he was "a man of sterling character who used his many talents wisely and positively, especially as a newspaper columnist. He will be missed but long remembered."

A frequent subject of the daily columns was Center Township Small Claims Court Judge John Hesseldenz. The last regular column written by Mr. Keating was about Hesseldenz's courtroom.

"He would walk in and sit down on the bench for 10 or 15 minutes and leave. I never thought anything happened, but he was so adroit at the human interest story that when I would wake up the next morning, there would be a wonderful story.

"It was an honor to be his last column. I had to leave the bench when I heard about the death," Hesseldenz said.

Another frequent "rainy day" column for Mr. Keating was the Indianapolis Police Department vice squad and its commander, Lt. Mack Crockett.

Crockett said, "He added something to the cosmopolitan nature of the city, being able to spotlight the individuals of the area and allow them, through his column, to let us know them better.

"He would call every so often, and I would keep a list of the things that happened in our work that he had the knack of seeing. Tom saw things we didn't."

Gov. Robert D. Orr said, "Tom Keating's unique insight into people was a treasure to our community. His special gift of moving us to care about other people made Indianapolis a better place to live. Like all real heroes, he gave more than he got."

U.S. Sen. Richard G. Lugar, R.-Ind., who was on the Indianapolis Board of School Commissioners when Mr. Keating started at The Star, described him as "a warm and loyal friend with whom I shared most of public and private goals and experiences. His love for all the people who live in Indiana was reciprocated each morning by thousands of friends who read his column before they started a new day.

"I talked to Tom on Wednesday and he was filled with enthusiasm for a great new project boosting Indiana.

"I cannot believe that he has left us so soon with so many good stories left to be written."

Rep. Andy Jacobs Jr., D.-Ind., recalling that Mr. Keating once recruited a nephew to play football, said, "Tom was talent and decency rolled up into one."

Three times a month, Mr. Keating telephoned Marion County Sheriff James L. Wells, checking for possible column ideas. The two met when Mr. Keating was first assigned to The Star's police beat in 1966.

"I remember when Tom first started as a police reporter. He used to come to the old jail in the late '60s and shoot the breeze. He was a common, down-to-earth guy. This is a loss, not only of his talent but quite a loss to the community. The community will suffer from Tom's death."

Thomas H. Lake, chairman of Lilly Endowment, Inc., said. "Tom Keating made a major contribution to the work and insight of the Lilly Endowment. He enjoyed a special friendship with so many people.

"He was a professional journalist of the highest order. The quality of Tom's life and work has been an inspiration to those who knew him and learned from him. He had an unusual ability to see the best in everyone and to bring the best out of his associates.

"He was a decent and caring person with a strong belief in God."

Mr. Keating had taught a feature writing class at Indiana University-Purdue University at Indianapolis since 1978. Howard B. Schaller, executive dean and dean of faculties, said. "Tom Keating's death is an unbelievable shock to his thousands of friends and colleagues. We here at IUPUI share in the grief, because Tom was an adjunct faculty member in the School of Journalism here. For several years each spring he taught feature writing, sharing his vast knowledge and remarkable talent with those just entering the ranks of journalism."

SAINT MARY'S NATIVITY CHURCH CELEBRATES CENTENNIAL

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I bring to your attention a historic event in the Wyoming Valley. Saint Mary's Nativity Church in Plymouth, PA, will celebrate its centennial on September 8, 1985.

One hundred years ago, the Most Reverend William O'Hara, D.D., first bishop of the Scranton diocese, gave permission for the establishment of the Blessed Virgin Mary Parish in Plymouth. The Reverend Lawrence Spryszinski was chosen as the first pastor.

The original church was a simple wooden structure, which served alone until August 1903, when Bishop Michael J. Hoban set the cornerstone for a new chruch. Fire badly damaged the original church on June 14, 1903. But by May 30, 1905, the new structure was completed and dedicated by Bishop Hoban.

Soon after the new church was completed, Father Smelsz initiated plans to renovate the original wooden church into a modern parochial school. Two years later, the Bernadine Sisters were invited to teach the children of the parish, and they later were assigned to the parish.

On December 26, 1910, the Reverend Stanislaus A. Drier assumed the pastorate of St. Mary's. In June 1911, a new rectory was completed, and by 1918 the parish church was remodeled; its interior walls and ceilings were beautified, making St. Mary's an archetectural treasure of the Wyoming Valley.

On February 26, 1919, fire again badly damaged the church. It was restored in stages, under the direction of Father Drier. By 1920, mass was being offered in the church basement, and on September 8, 1921, the new alters were blessed. In the following 6 years, additional work was done on the bell towers, the interior of the sister's convent, and the parish rectory.

In the early 1930's, land was purchased in Plymouth Township to serve as the site of a new cemetery. A beautiful grotto was built at the entrance, and services were conducted there several times throughout the year.

Another fire in the St. Mary's School in 1949 led to the construction of a new building on the same site. On September 9, 1951 a new school building opened to accept students.

Father Drier passed away on Ash Wednesday, February 23, 1955, after 44 years as pastor. On October 3, 1955, the Right Reverend Monsignor John J. Podkul was named pastor.

By this time, many parish societies had formed, giving parishoners greater opportunity to publicly practice their devotion to God and their parish. In the 1940's the Junior and Senior Sodalities were organized; St. Stanislaus Auxiliary was founded in 1941, as was the Usher's Club. In 1951, the Confraternity of Christian Mothers was formed, and in 1956, the Holy Name Society held its first meeting.

Rev. Joseph F. Kalinowski began his assignment as pastor in January 1972, just months before the devastation of Hurricane Agnes. Church services were held at the Plymouth Armory until the basement of St. Mary's School was readied for use. Volunteers worked steadily to salvage spiritual objects. The restoration and redecoration resulted in a magnificent church, the pride of St. Mary's parishoners.

St. Mary's welcomed its new pastor, the Right Reverend Monsignor Stanley W. Piorkowski in April 1977. Under his direction, renovations began in 1981, including construction of a new sacristy, confessional rooms, a votive room, a bapistry, the restoration of the pipe organ, and renovation of the sanctuary. The church was further beautified by the construction of a new brick bell tower.

In June 1982, the Right Reverend Monsignor Edmund S. Penkala became pastor. It was during his pastorate that the centennial project was completed. On June 22, 1982, a new marble altar with the relics of St. Stanislaus, bishop and martyr, St. Adalbert, St. Andrew Bobola, and St. Maris Boretti, was blessed and dedicated.

Mr. Speaker, the centennial of this historic parish will be celebrated in a jubilee mass by His Excellency, the Most Reverend James C. Timlin, bishop of Scranton, on September 8, 1985. Following the liturgical and spiritual observance, a banquet will be held at Convention Hall in Pittston. I know I speak for many in the Wyoming Valley in expressing my pride and joy in the passing of this important milestone in the history of St. Mary's Nativity Church.

TOM DIAZ ON CZECH LINK TO NICARAGUA

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, the Soviet KGB has proven astute at subcontracting out many important foreign operations to its trusted and carefully trained Eastern European subordinates. East German security operatives police the police in Ethiopia, Angola, and Mozambique, and reportedly handle internal security for Fatah, the military arm of the PLO. The Czech services have been no less effective.

Recently a Canadian-headquartered Czech exile organization, the Czechoslovak Federal Council, charged that dozens of Sandinista security personnel have been attending police schools in Czechoslovakia. This can be explained in part, the spokesmen say, by the long associations the Czechs have with Cuba, itself closely involved with Nicaraguan secret police work and covert operations. The statement recalls earlier testimony by Ladislav Bittman, an important defector from the Czech secret service, that Czech agents were working with Fidel Castro as early as 1959, nearly a decade before the Cuban intelligence network was competely subordinated to the KGB.

A fascinating account of the allegations by the Czechoslovak Federal Council has been given by Washington Times reporter Tom Diaz, and I wish it to be entered into the RECORD so that my colleagues have an opportunity to read it:

CZECHS TEACHING SANDINISTAS TERROR

(By Tom Diaz)

Sixty-five Sandinista security officers have been attending a secret police school and participating in interrogation of political prisoners in communist Czechoslovakia over the last eight months, a group of Czech exiles has charged.

The Nicaraguans have been taking advanced training in interrogation techniques from the Faculty of Interrogation at the University of State Security and Forces of Internal Order in Vokovice, a suburb of Prague, according to Jiri Kotas, chairman of the Czechoslovak Federal Council in Exile.

A State Department official said he believes the report is probably true but could not confirm it after checking with intelligence sources.

"We do not have hard intelligence of that training. However, we would not be surprised because it fits a pattern of other Eastern bloc countries training Nicaraguans," he said.

"We've seen it with the Bulgarians and East Germans. The Czechs train everybody else [officers assigned from other client states in the Soviet bloc], so there is no reason to think they are not training the Sandinistas," he said.

A Central Intelligence Agency spokesman said the agency would have no comment on Mr. Kotas' charges.

Mr. Kotas said the Sandinista officials also have helped in interrogation of prisoners in two of "Czechoslovakia's most notorious prisons"—at Ruzyne, near Prague, and Valdice, near Jicin.

Mr. Kotas said the two prisons are reserved for especially dangerous criminals and for "the most dangerous opponents of the communist regime," including human rights activists, clergy and soldiers who have taken or attempted to take weapons.

"Our information comes from a highly placed source within the Czechoslovak power structure," Mr. Kotas said in a telephone interview.

"We know that it is accurate," he said. "It came from an identical source which in several other instances has given us information which has later been confirmed by official U.S. authorities. The source is beyond reproach."

Mr. Kotas said that his group's source "gave us information about the Soviet nuclear deployment in Czechoslovakia" before the Soviet Union first said in 1983 that it had deployed nuclear weapons in Warsaw Pact countries.

The Czechoslovak Federal Council, with headquarters in Canada, is a group of young refugees, 90 percent of whom "escaped from Czechoslovakia in the early 1980s," Mr. Kotas said.

He said he fled Czechoslovakia in 1979 and was formerly employed by the Czechoslovak Academy of Sciences in Prague.

Mr. Kotas described the secret police university to a reporter, saying that "if you looked at it only for the architecture, it looks very nice for a communist country."

He said the school is "highly penetrated" by Russian officials, "as in other [Czech] institutions of that caliber." He specifically emphasized "Russian" as opposed to other Soviet nationalities, and said care is always taken to be sure that the Russian presence never amounts to a majority in such institutions.

The university exists, said Mr. Kotas, specifically to train Czech state police and internal security personnel.

"They [the Sandinistas] are attending this school to learn the method of 'cold terror,'" he said.

Mr. Kotas said the "cold terror" method of interrogation had been developed since the 1960s. He described it as "much more sophisticated" and less directly brutal than the methods used by communist regimes during the 1950s. Earlier methods emphasized beatings and other physical violence. The new "cold terror" method relies more on psychological methods to confuse the subject as to who his enemies and friends are.

"Now you succumb more easily," he said. "The [former method of] beatings built a wall between the prisoner and the interrogator. But now to draw the line [between friends and enemies during interrogation] is very, very difficult."

Mr. Kotas said it was not known for sure from which Nicaraguan agency the trainees have been drawn but they are believed to be from the Ministry of Interior, which is responsible for state police activity under the Marxist Sandinista regime.

There would not necessarily be a language barrier that would hamper Spanish-speaking Nicaraguans involved in the interrogation of Czechoslovakian prisoners, Mr. Kotas said.

He said a number of Nicaraguan exiles studied in Czechoslovakia during the Somoza regime and became fluent in Czech, that many Czech functionaries speak Spanish because of the regime's long association with Cuba, and that Russian is also a fairly common tongue among both Czechs and Nicaraguans.

TAX REFORM BILL SHOULD PUT AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF FINANCIAL PROFESSIONALS OUT OF BUSINESS

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, the following advertisement appears in the latest issue of Eastern Airline magazine.

It is such bad tax advice under current law that I suspect the IRS will be auditing most of the people who attend these vacations. Under my bill, H.R. 1228, a foreign trip for this vacation break that's also a tax break would be denied any tax deductibility. The effective date of the bill is February 21, 1985—the date I intend to urge when this matter is considered in the tax reform markup beginning September 16.

Eastern Airlines should be more careful about accepting ads from con artists.

SOME VERY INTELLIGENT PEOPLE WOULD LIKE THE IRS TO SEND THEM AWAY

This year, take a vacation break that's also a tax break.

Come to Los Angeles, Phoenix, Orlando, San Jose, Costa Rica; Panama City, Panama; Interlaken, Switzerland or London, England, with the American Association of Financial Professionals, and you'll be able to write off the cost of your airfare on Eastern Airlines, your hotel bill and just about everything else but the suntan lotion.

You'll also learn how to write off a lot more than your vacation; because the American Association of Financial Professionals will offer hundreds of hours of intensive tax strategy workshops devoted to the keeping of most of your money.

So plan on attending one of the upcoming AAFP investment and tax strategies conferences this year. Just send in the coupon, and we'll send you a brochure with more information.

After all, you've given the IRS plenty over the years. Isn't it time they gave you something in return?

FINDING A CURE FOR AIDS

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to submit for the RECORD an op-ed piece which appeared in the New York Times on August 22, 1985. It was authored by Harry Schwartz, a former member of the New York Times editorial board who is an expert on health issues. As the number of AIDS cases continues to grow, we have put greater resources into Federal activities to combat this tragic disease, with the hope of developing a treatment for AIDS soon, and eventually a cure. The following article raises some noteworthy points regarding research into treatments for AIDS, and I commend it to my colleagues' attention.

FINDING A CURE FOR AIDS

(By Harry Schwartz)

SCARSDALE, NY.—Public awareness of the AIDS epidemic is now greater than even before. The numbers explain why.

More than 12,000 cases have been diagnosed to date and more than 6,000 Americans have died of the disease. The great majority of AIDS victims are young men in the prime of life, not elderly citizens.

In this situation the clamor for a medicine to cure AIDS is naturally mounting. And so is the number of Americans who—like Rock Hudson—are going abroad to try medicines that are unavailable here because of Food and Drug Administration rules. The F.D.A. insists that its rules are intended to protect sick people; the AIDS victims running to Mexico, France and other countries obviously believe the F.D.A. rules are too strict.

What this means, clearly, is that despite the great public uproar over AIDS, we have not yet focused attention on the key questions: How do we discover new medicines to help sick people and what can we do to encourage and speed up such discoveries against AIDS and other killing and crippling ailments?

Recently, an influential member of the House of Representatives sneered publicly when told that the average cost of research and development for a new drug now approaches $100 million. The figure, he said, must surely be grossly inflated to justify the profits of the pharmaceutical industry.

Oddly, this same Congressman has a relatively high number of AIDS victims among his constituents. Would he cavil, one wonders, at appropriating hundreds of millions of dollars to find a cure for AIDS?

The great majority of new and effective medicines are discovered by the private pharmaceutical industry, which is under constant attack. An endless stream of critics complain that drug prices are too high, that medicines have too many side effects, that many drugs permitted on the market are really unsafe, and so on. The fact that therapeutic drugs contribute enormously to the improved health and longevity of our people usually goes unmentioned. So does the fact that these medicines are usually the most cost-effective therapies known.

This climate of discussion hardly encourages pharmaceutical executives to invest tens of millions of dollars looking for a remedy for a disease like AIDS, where much of the basic science required is still unknown.

Neither Congress nor the general public has any idea of what an army of chemists, pharmacologists, toxicologists and other specialists is required in the typical modern hunt for a new drug. Nor is there any understanding of how many years and how many tens of millions of dollars can be—and often are—spent fruitlessly because the desired medicine cannot be found. The harsh realities are suggested by the fact that corporations that spend $300 million or $400 million a year on pharmaceutical research do well if they average even one marketable, newly discovered drug every two years.

Pharmaceutical research is always a gamble, even when there is a far better background of scientific knowledge than we now have about AIDS. The huge financial risks of this research make wildcat oil exploration seem tame by comparison.

This background suggests that the tragic AIDS epidemic could have a positive by-product if it produces a new look at the conventional wisdom in the drug field.

AIDS victims understandably want a cure, not a compound that is guaranteed never to have a harmful side effect on anybody under any circumstances. Shouldn't we take a new look to see whether F.D.A. rules are loaded too heavily in favor of unattainable perfect safety while underemphasizing the needs of the sick and the dying? And shouldn't Congressmen who specialize in attacking the pharmaceutical industry worry about their impact upon discouraging investments in research to try to find new cures for killer diseases?

Perhaps AIDS victims and their families might bring these heretical ideas more forcefully to the attention of the F.D.A. and its Congressional masters. Such pressure might help increase the volume of industrial research on AIDS and thus increase the likelihood of finding the remedies so desperately needed.

TRADE WON'T SOFTEN AN ADVERSARY

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, the time has come for the United States to cease financing the inhuman and reprehensible activities of the Soviet Union. By permitting direct, bilateral trade between the two countries, and with aid and loans from our official lending institutions and governmental agencies, the United States is in effect party to the atrocities perpetrated by the U.S.S.R.

We should remember the words of Soviet defector Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn, who stated: "I think, gentlemen, that we should at last permit this socialist economy to prove its superiority. Let's allow it to show that it is advanced, that it is omnipotent, that it has defeated you, that it has overtaken you. Let us not interfere with it. Let us stop selling to it and giving it loans." If we do this, Solzhenitsyn counsels, "* * * the Soviet economy will no longer be able to deal with everything, [and] will have to reduce its military preparations * * * to feed and clothe its own people. And the system will be forced to relax." By loaning them money and bailing them out in times of economic crisis, we "are merely helping them to rearm * * * helping the Soviet police state."

If we continue to conduct trade, and finance the Soviets and those countries within their sphere of influence, the consequences may be grave indeed. As Solzhenitsyn concludes, "* * * if, in the frenzied competition of one company with another they [the West] will continue to rush in loans and advanced technology, if they will present earth-moving equipment to our grave-diggers, then I'm afraid that Lenin will turn out to have been right." He had said: "The bourgeoisie will sell us rope, and then we shall let the bourgeoisie hang itself."

As Joseph Finder argues in his article, "Trade Won't Soften an Adversary," the idea that doing business with the Soviets can lead to improved relations is a frightening misconception. Before we in Congress allow ourselves to fall for this rhetoric, I urge my colleagues to consider the points made in Mr. Finder's article. The article follows:

TRADE WON'T SOFTEN AN ADVERSARY

(By Joseph Finder)

The Reagan administration has embarked upon its most concerted effort yet to improve trade relations with the Soviet Union, and it is based on a serious misconception: that doing business with the Russians can lead to improved relations.

Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Balrige met in Moscow last week with Mikhail Gorbachev to discuss ways of increasing East-West trade. "It is high time," the Soviets declared after the meeting, "to defrost the potential of Soviet-American cooperation and to freeze or—to be more precise—to stop the arms race and the escalation of hostility." Secretary Baldridge said recently, "The President is doing his best with the Soviets to establish a better working relationship. Trade is one of the ways." Both sides are speaking of trade as a means of ameliorating political tensions, but I suspect neither side really believes its own rhetoric.

During the height of the most recent detente one heard much about the "web of interlocking relations" theory, which held that commerce locks nations into a relationship of mutual dependency that can somehow keep peace in the world. The most eloquent advocate of this theory was Norman Angell, who argued in his book "The Great Illusion" (1913) that the "elaborate financial interdependence of the modern world" made war senseless. The book was a best seller in the U.S. and Europe just before the outbreak of World War I—an ample refutation. Soviet-American trade never reached gargantuan proportions—a peak of less than $5 billion in 1979—but even so, it did nothing to stem the rapid deterioration in relations largely brought about by the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan at the end of that year.

In 1969, faced with trade-with-Russia-will-bring-peace arguments, Richard Nixon, according to his memoirs, told a meeting of the National Security Council, "I do not accept the philosophy that increased trade results in improved political relations. In fact, just the converse is true. Better political relations lead to improved trade." (His opinion seems to have changed several times since.)

In one sense alone is there a direct link between trade and politics: emigration. Realizing the importance to the West of heightened emigration of Soviet Jews, the Kremlin has unsubtly offered to permit more Jews to leave if trade with the West improves. The chairman of the State Bank of the Soviet Union, Vladimir S. Alkhimov, recently assured Undersecretary of Commerce Lionel H. Olmer that if the U.S.-Soviet trading relationship improved, 50,000 Jewish emigres a year would be "no problem." Compared with the few hundred emigres the Russians allowed out last year, the figure is remarkable.

Apart from emigration, though, the only real link between East-West trade and East-West political relations is in the realm of symbolism. Our allies seem to perceive commerce with the Russians as a sign of healthy relations, as a portent of less tension to come. In the four years since entering office, President Reagan has come to realize this, and so his administration has, despite an ongoing feud between the Commerce Department and the Pentagon, begun to speak of business links with the communist world as one more peace initiative. An unidentified administration official recently insisted to reporters that there is "an implicit link between the trade and the disarmament talks." This is nothing more than rhetoric, an attempt to achieve the appearance of improved relations in the absence of any substance.

Which is not to say that the White House is alone in making such claims. The Soviets, who desire Western equipment and grain, speak of trade with the West as a great panacea. Their assertions are precisely what a lot of people in the West would like to hear. It has not escaped their attention that many Western political leaders are swayed and mollified by displays of apparent conciliation.

"Men willingly believe what they wish," Julius Caesar remarked. And perhaps a little pretense is not such a bad thing. As long as we bear in mind that our oil-drilling machinery will not buy Soviet docility in Nicaragua, or Geneva, or anywhere else for that matter, let us trade with the Russians without deluding ourselves that we can thereby bring about peace. The expression "business as usual" may signify international comity to us capitalists, but to the communists, who are less convinced of the palliative effects of commerce, the phrase does not mean as much.

IN MEMORY OF PHILLY JOE JONES

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call my colleagues' attention to the passing of the beloved Philly Joe Jones, who died August 30, 1985, at his home in Philadelphia at the age of 62. He was an extremely talented musician whose warmth and compassion for his fellow men touched everyone. He leaves behind his wife, Eloise, his son, Chris, and many thousands of fans who will cherish his memory always.

Mr. Jones began his musical apprenticeship playing in bands and combos in the Philadelphia jazz clubs. In 1950, he became the house drummer at Birdland on Broadway in Manhattan. These experiences enabled him to meet and play with the likes of outsanding musicians such as Charlie Parker and John Coltrane.

In 1952, he became a member of the Miles Davis Quintet. His hard-hitting style established him as a force within this group which included Paul Chambers, Red Garland, and John Coltrane. Roy Brooks, a good friend and a fine drummer from Detroit, told me recently that perhaps the finest example of percussion rhythms he has heard is found on an album recorded by this group in 1956 called Cookin' with the Miles Davis Quintet.

Jones musical relationship with Davis continued until 1958 when he moved on to become a leader or sideman with Jackie McLean, Lee Morgan, and McCoy Tyner. Jones rejoined Miles Davis in 1962, but the reunion was short lived. He spent much of the mid-1960's freelancing in Los Angeles and San Francisco. From 1967 to 1972 he lived in Europe where he taught drums with percussionist Kenny Clarke who was himself a pioneering jazz drummer.

During the early 1950's, Philly Joe Jones performed periodically with Tadd Dameron, a prolific composer and arranger known for his contributions to the development of bebop. Dameron's work was to have a lasting influence upon Jones, who in the early 1980's formed Dameronia, a repertory group that recreated music of Dameron.

With a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts, Philly Joe Jones was able to see to the reconstruction of many of Tadd Dameron's charts. Most of them had been lost and had to be transcribed instrument-by-instrument from old recordings.

This past June, I had the pleasure of seeing Philly Joe perform with Dameronia at the Capital City Jazz Festival in Washington, DC. With the able assistance of Frank West and Cecil Payne, he led his nine-piece group through the music of Dameron, originally written for a small band but arranged and performed in a manner which filled the hall with the sounds of a full orchestra.

Within the ranks of jazz artists, Philly Joe Jones will long be remembered as an electrifying percussionist who established the drums as a frontline instrument. Not content to keep time and play rhythms, he knew how to make the drum play melodies by creatively using his sticks, brushes, tomtoms, and symbols.

Philly Joe Jones' contributions to the development of jazz have won him recognition around the world. The international jazz community I know is deeply saddened by his loss. I urge the Members of the U.S. House of Representatives to reflect upon his musical legacy, one that this Nation should always treasure.

H.R. 10

HON. HAROLD E. FORD

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the House passed H.R. 10, the National Development Investment Act which amends the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965 and the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965.

What particularly appeals to me about this legislation is that it encourages cooperation among communities in different States and urges, where such communities desire, their respective governments to bring their own resources to bear in support of local interstate efforts. It also encourages the cooperation of various jurisdictions, such as associations of counties and/or of communities, where various units of local government agree to pool their resources to the mutual benefit of all. This bill attempts to coordinate all available funding sources to promote economic development.

Many communities across the Nation are confronted with high unemployment, financial instability and a shortage of available capital. Some of our regions, counties and communities are in such poor economic condition that even at times when Government spending for social insurance programs has increased the level of poverty has sharply risen.

We are a nation of regions, interdependent on one another for a strong national economy. A strong national economy depends on the cooperation of self-sufficient and productive local and regional economies—economies that have some stability yet sufficient flexibility to deal with the technological and structural changes which accompany and facilitate national growth.

H.R. 10 is designed to permit the Federal Government, in cooperation with the States, to assist distressed local and regional communities to take actions to achieve lasting economic improvement and prosperity. Under the act, new local employment opportunities would be created by developing and expanding public works projects and other facilities and resources. The bill specifically assists distressed communities by helping them to construct public facilities and improve the basic framework necessary to support development. Assistance is continued by facilitating economic adjustment, by promoting economic diversification, by effectively responding to sudden and severe economic dislocations and by encouraging and supporting local economic planning. This legislation will attempt to provide some relief by making funds available for business expansion and retention through locally administered revolving loan funds.

Economic progress is likely to occur where all levels of government and the private sector are firmly and actively united in a long-term commitment to achieve economic self-sufficiency.

Mr. Speaker, while I am aware of our need to reduce the Federal budget and to reduce the growth of Federal spending I feel that legislation of this nature will lead to reduction of the national debt. It has been reported that the Federal money provided by these programs has generated billions of dollars in private capital and returned billions more in taxes annually to Federal, State, and local treasuries.

Therefore, I thank my colleagues for support of this legislation—legislation that is beneficial to the economic development of this Nation.

PINELLAS COUNTY RESIDENTS UNITE TO FIGHT HURRICANE ELENA

HON. C.W. BILL YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, as Hurricane Elena gained strength last weekend and approached the coast of Florida, local officials and volunteers planned for and executed the evacuation of much of Pinellas County. The evacuation began in the middle of the evening and involved more than 300,000 residents, half of whom spent at least 2 days in public shelters.

Although the eye of the hurricane bypassed Florida, the storm stalled just off of our coast in the Gulf of Mexico and for more than 40 hours pounded Pinellas County with its powerful southwesterly winds and heavy rain. Sea walls were reduced to rubble, the beaches seriously eroded, power lines downed, and homes and other buildings destroyed. Work is continuing to determine the exact extent of the millions of dollars of damage to property and businesses. We were fortunate, however, that the orderly evacuation of local residents prevented a catastrophic loss of life and personal injuries.

The many individuals who gave of their time in official and unofficial roles during the storm attests to the spirit and determination of the people of Pinellas County who were united in their fight to offset the potentially devastating effects of Hurricane Elena. Local and county officials worked around-the-clock to successfully implement their preplanned evacuation program. Red Cross and numerous other volunteers manned public shelters, providing food and bedding for as many as twice the number of expected evacuees.

Police officers, firemen and National Guardsmen braved the weather throughout the weekend and were out in full force to direct traffic and patrol the streets. In the storm's aftermath, they protected unoccupied property from looting and directed the orderly return of residents to their homes.

There were many examples of people helping their neighbors in need throughout the weekend. When the evacuation notice was first given, many residents went through their neighborhoods to make sure the notice was heard and that transportation was available, especially for the elderly and handicapped.

Restaurant owners and store mangers kept their businesses open extra hours to provide food for individuals and shelters. People took the time to provide food and hot drinks for officers patroling the streets. Doctors, nurses and pharmacists worked extra hours to provide medicine and medical care.

These efforts did not end when the storm subsided Sunday. Local officials and volunteers continue to pitch in to help Pinellas County residents clean up in the wake of the storm assess the damage and begin rebuilding severely impacted areas.

The weekend provided a glowing example of Americans once again helping their neighbors in need. It's a characteristic of our Nation emphasized in times of disaster, but no less apparent on a daily basis, especially in Pinellas County. Hurricane Elena not only provided us with new respect for the fury of such a storm, but a deeper understanding for the spirit and compassion of our neighbors.

THE DISTORTED WORLD SUGAR MARKET

HON. WILLIS D. GRADISON, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues an editorial on the international sugar market which appeared in the Economist on August 10, 1985:

ENSLAVED BY SUBSIDIES

Two hundred years after enslaving people to work on sugar plantations, rich countries are enslaving them again by ruining those same plantations and the poor countries that rely on them. The price of sugar on the world market is below four cents a lb—in real terms probably the lowest price ever fetched and a third as much as it costs the best producers to produce it. If cars that cost $6,000 to make had to be sold at $2,000, all the world's motor manufacturers would go bust, starting with the least efficient ones. Unfortunately, so dreadful is the muddle in the sugar market that the only growers going out of business are the most efficient ones, in Australia, Brazil and Fiji.

It is important to end this idiocy, and replace it with a freer market that encourages sugar to be grown where it is produced most efficiently. Many tropical countries depend heavily on sugar for their economic development, and with it for their political stability. They are victims of an extreme example of what is happening in agriculture throughout most of the world: a drive for self-sufficiency that stops short only of growing bananas under glass.

TAXING THE RICH TO RUIN THE POOR

The European common market pays its farmers 20 cents—ie, more than five times the current world market price—to grow each lb of sugar. With such rewards, European farmers have increased annual production from 10.8m to 13.3m tonnes since 1977, when the EEC began to export more sugar than it imported. To avoid adding a sugar lump to its beef, butter and grain mountains, the EEC has "sold" 38m tonnes of sugar in the past eight years. The difference between the 20 cents a lb farmers are paid for it and the four cents or so it fetches on the market is paid for by European taxpayers, who at present lose about $350 on each tonne unfortunately sold.

In the United States, sugar farmers are getting 17¾ cents a lb, or about four-and-a-half times the world price, with similar results. American sugar imports have fallen from 6m tonnes a year a decade ago to less than 3m tonnes now. Though America is at least not dumping sugar on the world market, it foolishly keeps domestic prices very high. This has made every kind of alternative to sugar artificially competitive.

In consequence, a sugar substitute made out of maize, and called high-fructose corn syrup, has captured about half the import market. With ludicrous logic, this has now set grain growers from the cornbelt to lobbying alongside plantation owners from the deep south for continued high rigged prices for sugar.

The problem is compounded because many poor countries are proving nearly as inward-looking as the rich ones. They also pay their own farmers more than the world price for sugar consumed domestically. Colombia, for instance, pays its farmers 21 cents a lb. Some of this subsidised production naturally spills on to the world market and underwrites chronic over-supply.

Market forces do not help much to mitigate this, because the world sugar trade is so cartelised. Around a third of all the sugar traded internationally is not sold at world market prices at all but under fixed contracts—Russia guaranteeing a market for Cuban sugar, America for its third-world friends and the EEC for former British colonies and others. Since the importers pay the same high prices for these captive imports as they pay their own farmers, this might seem a good deal for the favoured exporters. It is not. Cuba and Mauritius apart, none of them sells much more than half its sugar exports under these arrangements. This means that they virtually have to give the rest of the stuff away on a world market that is damaged further by these "good deals". The countries that lack a sugar daddy—Thailand, Australia and the Philippines—are hurt most, but almost everybody suffers. Markets dominated by import quotas, export subsidies and guaranteed prices provide no incentive for efficient production.

Sugar is too important for this to be tolerable, and not only because the value of the world crop is over $11 billion a year. As Professor Sidney Mintz notes in a new book (see page 51), in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries sugar marked an early stage in Britain's development into a modern economy—a stage now being reached by many countries in the tropics. For sugar is an industrial as well as a farming business. Refining the stuff is more complicated than processing wheat, coffee and other crops, and because it is advantageous to have refineries near to the plantations, sugar often provides a country with its first taste of industrialisation. It also brings with it a main sign of development—changes in diet. Sugar is often the first food to break the pattern of subsistence peasant meals, based on a single staple crop.

Sugar consumption starts to take off when a country's gross domestic product reaches about $400 a head. It keeps on rising until gdp reaches $6,000 a head, by which time sugar is the biggest single source of fat men's calories. If Chinese and Indians ate as much sugar as Britons, world production would have to double. So, hard though this is to credit in the diet-conscious west, world demand for sugar is set to expand.

For it and other agricultural sectors to develop efficiently, Gatt rules against dumping of manufactured goods will have to be extended to agriculture. That will take time, and multilateral trade negotiations, but the EEC has a great chance to begin making sugar a less wildly inefficient market before then. Next year, its sugar regime runs out. Why not replace it with one that increases the market for developing countries? The EEC pretends its dumping has no impact on the price ("we just sell what we can at world prices") and claims the sugar regime is a model for the common agricultural policy because taxes on imported and domestically produced sugar pay for export subsidies. This is a lie. Last year, the regime cost European taxpayers and consumers around $2 billion. The EEC sugar regime is a parasite, damaging the commodity it feeds on. It is a system that deserves no single taxpayers support.

RESPONSE TO ADMINISTRATION'S REFUSAL TO HELP THE AILING FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY

HON. DON SUNDQUIST

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. SUNDQUIST. Mr. Speaker, I was extremely disappointed that President Reagan recently accepted the poor advice of some of his advisers and declined to take action to stop the flood of cheap shoes into the United States.

I was particularly saddened to see this decision come after the members of the President's Cabinet who know the most about trade issues advised him to rule in favor of the domestic footwear industry.

The International Trade Commission, which is a conservative and free-trade oriented agency, had recommended earlier this summer that the President take strong action to give our domestic industry some temporary relief to allow it time to regain its competitiveness.

Unfortunately, however, there are others in the administration who confuse foreign policy with economic policy, and don't appreciate the urgency of our massive trade imbalance. They don't understand the need to take responsible administrative actions to give our industries some breathing room so that they may have at least a chance of survival.

Those advisers won their way with the President on this issue. In light of this negative decision, I have taken two actions in response. First, as chairman of the House Republican Trade Task Force, I will be supporting legislative efforts for an immediate remedy to address the footwear issue.

Second, I support the creation of a Cabinet-level Department of Trade. The negative footwear decision convinced me that trade issues have not received the attention they deserve under the present executive-branch framework. It is time that we treat trade concerns as seriously as our competitors. In fact, in many foreign countries Trade Ministers are a part of the top four or five executives in the administration.

Although the retail industry has argued in opposition to any restrictions, the long-term effects of the President's decision will not be to their advantage. By eliminating the domestic footwear industry, imports will eventually monopolize the market which will result in higher prices.

Further, I deeply regret that the President's decision will trigger a rash of protectionist legislation in the Congress. The footwear issue presented the administration with a golden opportunity to take administrative action to head off this mood of protectionism. I am extremely fearful that this sentiment will only bring about an era of bad trade policy. Protectionism is not a good policy; we are all aware of that. The administration should have been taking action to avoid a new batch of sweeping laws. Instead by ignoring the ITC decision and recommendations in this particular case our trade statutes credibility is seriously questioned.

COLONEL QADHAFI: NORTH AFRICAN MEDDLER

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, once again, Col. Mu'ammar el-Qadhafi is threatening the peace and stability of his neighbors in North Africa. The bully of Tripoli is now violating the borders of peace-loving Tunisia while rudely expelling thousands of Tunisian guest workers who have been laboring in Libya. The colonel recently massed his troops on Tunisia's eastern border and threatened to invade. Diplomacy by intimidation and terrorism appears to be his style.

His name has become synonymous with terrorism. Libya watchers in our Government can recount long lists of Libyan plots and operations directed against Tunisia and other pro-Western nations. A few years ago, the colonel engineered an attack on the Tunisian town of Gafsa. Libyan agents have attempted assassinations in Egypt and routinely execute opponents of Colonel Qadhafi in Europe and in other countries around the world. Numerous terrorist training camps are located in Libya and some of the world's most infamous terrorists have been trained there.

Qadhafi has assisted the brutal former ruler of Uganda, Idi Amin, and succeeded in occupying a valuable mineral-rich strip of land along the northern border of Chad. He has assisted marauding bands of Polisario rebels in the Western Sahara and has sprinkled mines throughout the Red Sea in order to disrupt navigation through the Suez Canal. A few years ago, Libyan intelligence agents infiltrated into Saudi Arabia disguised as religious pilgrims while carrying a healthy supply of Soviet-made AS–47 assault rifles. These and other incidents serve to make Qadhafi the "enfant terrible" of the Middle East and a great source of embarrassment to many moderate Arabs who see the insanity of his maneuverings. He is no fool, however, and his actions are clearly designed to attain Libyan foreign policy goals. In this connection, I am deeply disturbed by recent Libyan threats against Tunisia.

With these concerns in mind, I commend the following article on Libya to my colleagues in the Congress.

[From the New York Times, Aug. 27, 1985]

UNITED STATE AFFIRMS SUPPORT FOR TUNISIA AS TENSIONS ON LIBYAN BORDER RISE

(By Bernard Gwertzman)

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.—The United States today affirmed its support for Tunisia's security, amid a sharp rise in tension between that North African country and neighboring Libya.

Tunisia, which has longstanding ties to the United States, asserted on Sunday that Libyan fighter planes had violated its airspace and that Libya had massed forces along the Tunisian-Libyan frontier, after days of charges and counter-charges. Today, the State Department said Washington stood by a pledge made by President Reagan to President Habib Bourguiba of Tunisia on June 18 at the White House of American backing for Tunisia's security and territorial integrity.

The latest tensions between Libya and-Tunisia arose two weeks ago when Libya suddenly ordered the expulsion of Tunisian workers, many of whom had been there for years. So far, about 23,000 Tunisians have been forced over the border into Tunisia, many of them without their property and documents.

Smaller numbers of Egyptians and other foreign nationals have also been expelled from Libya. The official Libyan explanation was that this was done for economic reasons because of the drop in Libya's oil revenues.

In retaliation, Tunisia has expelled more than 200 Libyans from Tunisia, accusing them of subversion.

SUBVERSION OF TUNISIA CHARGED

But Tunisian officials have said that they regarded the Libyan moves as part of a broader plan by Col. Muammar el-Qaddafi, the Libyan leader, to subvert Tunisia, whose President is an 82 year old and in poor health. On several occasions, Colonel Qaddafi has talked of uniting Tunisia to Libya. Because of previous tensions between the two countries, the United States has in recent years become an arms supplier to Tunisia, selling Tunisia a dozen F-5 fighters, M-60 tanks and C-130 transport planes.

When Mr. Bourguiba was in Washington in June, the main concern of the Tunisian side was what it felt was the threat from Libya. The United States has pledged repeatedly since President Reagan took office that it would help any nation threatened by Libya. American officials said that they do not believe that Libya is actually planning an outright invasion of Tunisia, but that Colonel Qaddafi does seem interested in seeking to cause turmoil there.

They said that Colonel Qaddafi seems to have been heartened by his one-year-old treaty of union with Morocco, despite Morocco's ties to the United States, and by the friendly relations he has struck with the new military Government in the Sudan.

SUPPORT FOR "TERRITORIAL INTEGRITY"

Today, Charles E. Redman, a State Department spokesman, said that he wanted to reiterate "for the record" the American attitude toward Tunisia.

"That position was made clear publicly during the visit of President Bourguiba to the United States," he said. "It remains unchanged. President Reagan said at that time that the United States remains firmly committed to the sanctity of Tunisia's territorial integrity and to the principle of noninterference in its internal affairs."

"He also said that Tunisia can rely on the continuing support and friendship of the United States," Mr. Redman said.

The spokesman said that "we have been in close diplomatic contact with the Tunisisans, as always, an odd friend and ally."

The United States has no formal security pact with Tunisia, but, as with other nations believed to be threatened by Libya, the Administration has offered assistance. Two years ago, the United States and France provided backing to Chad, which had come under attack by Libyan forces and rebels backed by Libya.

In recent days, France has conveyed its support for Tunisia and Morocco and Kuwait have offered to mediate. Algeria, which has a friendship treaty with Tunisia, has conferred with the Tunisians, but has said little publicly, State Department officials said. Relations between Algeria and Libya are strained, in part because of the trip to Washington made earlier this year by President Chadli Benjedid of Algeria.

BELLEROSE COMMONWEALTH CIVIC ASSOCIATION CELEBRATES ITS 50TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend and congratulate the Bellerose Commonwealth Civic Association of Queens County, NY, on the occasion of its 50th anniversary, which will be celebrated on September 8, 1985.

The civic association has dedicated itself to enriching the community life in Bellerose, and all of its residents have reaped the benefits of the organization's hard work and concern.

Mr. Speaker, the association began as a social group that arranged annual picnics and sponsored a Red Cross center during World War II, and has played an active, vibrant role in Bellerose ever since its conception.

Today, the Bellerose Commonwealth Civic Association is integrally involved in programs to promote community awareness and public safety. It reaches out to our young people in Queens through a good-citizenship program that honors the winners at special school assembly meetings. Through this effort, children learn the value and joy of serving others and of achieving their very best.

The association's many successes in alleviating traffic-safety problems have been some of its finest achievements. The community was plagued for years by a small hill at a major intersection in Bellerose that blocked the vision of approaching drivers. The civic association immediately began to work on this serious safety hazard. Through the association's efforts, the hill was leveled, and a traffic light was installed at a nearby intersection. The Bellerose Commonwealth Civic Association, by taking the lead and demanding safe driving conditions for Bellerose residents, has saved lives and prevented countless traffic-related injuries.

The fine officers and members of the association have spearheaded many vital neighborhood programs that enhance the area's safety, stability, and quality of life. The men and women of this organization helped solve a property tax assessment crisis that threatened to displace residents—including elderly homeowners who had lived in the neighborhood for many years. With the strong support of the civic association, another plan was implemented, and residents were able to stay in their homes.

The organization also has worked tirelessly to insure adequate police protection for Bellerose residents.

Mr. Speaker, I take great pride in informing you of the outstanding achievements and accomplishments of the Bellerose Commonwealth Civic Association. I would like to commend its fine officers: Richard Hellenbrecht, president: Peter Condon, vice president; Ross Fertitta, treasurer; Lorraine Anzlone, corresponding secretary; and John Reh, recording secretary. I would also like to acknowledge the distinguished board of directors: James Delaney Bernard Wechsler, Howard Slaney, Robert Costagliola, Sebastian Platania, Melanie Ngai, and George Wolf. These and the other members who have dedicated their time and energy to the safety and betterment of Bellerose deserve our warmest congratulations.

The civic association has many reasons to celebrate this year, and its September 8 gala will be highlighted by a parade, music, food, and a crafts fair.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask all of my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives to join with me now in paying tribute to all of the people who have made possible the Bellerose Commonwealth Civic Association's fine work, upon the momentous occasion of its 50th anniversary.

NATIONAL NEEDLEWORK WEEK

HON. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a resolution today which would designate the week beginning September 22, 1985 as "National Needlework Week."

Needlework has been a part of American culture since the birth of our Nation, and today still has an impact on our society. Family ties are strengthened and people of diverse backgrounds are brought together through the practice of this art. As an art form, needlework is used to create tapestries, portraits, linens, and to beautify clothing. Needlework in its simplest form is used for the therapy and pleasure of the aged in their homes, churches, and nursing homes. As an industry, needlework has created new jobs in manufacturing, specialty shops, and teaching.

National Needlework Week will create a new awareness of this important aspect of our heritage. It will focus public attention on the need of preserving the beautiful needlework created by our ancestors, as well as encourage people of all ages to develop their talents in all phases of this art.

I invite my colleagues to join me in showing support for this art form by cosponsoring this resolution.

GIVING AGRICULTURE EQUAL TREATMENT IN MULTILATERAL NEGOTIATIONS

HON. TOBY ROTH

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, given our overall 1984 trade deficit of $123 billion, we should pay attention to our most profitable export—agricultural products. Last year alone, the United States exported $38 billion in farm goods and imported only $18.9 billion. As the world's largest exporter of agricultural products, the United States as a whole, and farmers in particular, would benefit from freer trade.

Last year I proposed a four-point plan to boost agricultural exports. As the second point of my proposal I urged congressional action to ensure that agriculture be given equal treatment with other export interests in multilateral negotiations. Agriculture should not be treated like the poor stepchild of the American economy.

Since the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade [GATT] was first negotiated, agricultural interests have been placed on the back burner. The United States can no longer afford to play the role of innocents abroad. It is past time that agriculture be given a position on an equal footing with other products. The present high level of agricultural protectionism contrasts so sharply with trade liberalization in other areas that it behooves the Congress to act promptly.

I have introduced legislation which calls on the President to negotiate with our GATT trading partners to revise current rules which make an artificial distinction between agricultural and manufactured products. Agricultural export subsidies would thus be treated in the same manner as tariffs, and agricultural products would be treated the same as manufactured products. A unified treatment of tariffs and subsidies would clarify trading rules for market participants and simplify trade negotiations. In a market free of distorting influences, the American farmer would fulfill his role as a competitive producer.

The agricultural sector of most countries is highly protected from foreign competition. Tariffs, quotas and export subsidies are all widely used instruments of protection. The case of the European Economic Community is a glaring example. That body of countries should be a net importer, but by using certain tools it has been able to become a net exporter. Import restrictions on dairy products, sugar, meat and other products have led the United States to request a GATT waiver every year since 1955. Japanese trade policy has caused the price of basic food items to be well above the level of the rest of the world.

Because of the high current level of protection, the potential gain from more liberal agricultural trade is substantial. A 1980 study shows that a 50-percent reduction in agricultural protection by 17 Western nations would increase world trade by $8 billion per year. Conversely, the practice of excluding the agricultural sector from multilateral trade negotiations has had a considerable economic cost. Potential benefits from trade liberalization were lost when agricultural trade and nontariff barriers were eliminated from the Tokyo Round negotiations.

In order to avoid an all out agricultural trade war we need to start negotiations to establish an atmosphere of fair trade now. Hard-line bargaining will be necessary to break down the trade barriers of our major trading partners. The purpose of GATT is to promote freer international trade. We can work through this framework to assure fair treatment of the American farmer.

The exclusion of agricultural trade has had a particularly adverse effect on the United States, which has a comparative advantage in agriculture. If we can place agriculture on an equal footing with other multilateral export interests we can both help the American farmer and citizens of a hungry world, and we can reduce the trade deficit to benefit our entire economy.

RULE ON H.R. 3128, DEFICIT REDUCTION AMENDMENTS OF 1985

HON. DAN ROSTENKOWSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to inform my colleagues that the Committee on Ways and Means recently favorably reported to the House of Representatives H.R. 3128, a bill to make changes in spending and revenue provisions for purposes of deficit reduction and program improvements, consistent with the budget process.

I wish to serve notice, pursuant to the rules of the Democratic Caucus, that I have been instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to seek less than an open rule for the consideration of this bill by the House of Representatives.

POLITICS OF PROTECTION

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, in the wake of President Reagan's decision to deny the domestic shoe manufacturers relief in the form of quotas or tariffs on imported footwear, I am fearful that Congress will retaliate by passing a plethora of protectionist legislation ranging in nature from across-the-board import surcharges to quotas and tariffs on specific goods.

One such bill that would have a devastating impact both domestically and internationally is H.R. 3035, legislation that would impose a 25-percent import surcharge on countries that have a substantial trade surplus with the United States. While Japan is the main target, Korea, Taiwan, and even Brazil would be adversely subjected to this surcharge. As Robert J. Samuelson points out, "Protectionism may satisfy an urge to punish foreigners, but it threatens to reduce economic growth and worsen our economic problems." In his article, "Politics of Protection," he further notes that, "the trade deficit by itself is not the trade problem." Instead, he views the problem as a result of violent swings in our trade balance that harms those industries dependent on exports or vulnerable to imports.

I find Mr. Samuelson's analysis correct, and further believe that it is the strong U.S. dollar in relation to foreign currencies that plays a major role in the disparity in current trade balances between the United States and foreign competition. The U.S. Congress, with its record budget deficits and high interest rates, can be held responsible for this strong dollar. Until the Congress exercises some fiscal responsibility, the overall situation for American businesses forced to compete with lower priced imports is unlikely to improve. Recent legislative action aimed at reducing the Federal deficit and lowering interest rates would contribute greatly to reducing the value of the U.S. dollar. Thus, rather than punishing our foreign competition, we in Congress should be focusing our attention on our Federal deficit and our high interest rates. Until we get our house in order, we should not be taking out our frustrations on our foreign trading partners.

For more insights into the complex trade position that the United States currently finds itself in, I urge my colleagues to read the following article by Robert J. Samuelson. The article follows:

POLITICS OF PROTECTION

(By Robert J. Samuelson)

A remarkable thing about America's huge trade deficit—$107 billion in 1984 and growing—is that it hasn't yet led to demands for across-the-board protection. That may soon change. Three powerful Democratic congressional leaders have proposed legislation requiring the president to slap a 25 percent tariff on countries with "inequitable" trade surpluses. Trade may be about to jump onto political center stage, dangerously jeopardizing America's post-World War II open trade policies.

Normally, new bills are a yawn. They're a congressman's way of saying "I care"—and little more. Less than 5 percent ever become law. But this bill indicates that protectionism has attained a new respectability and that senior Democrats think it can be turned to partisan advantage. More than that, it reflects a growing feeling that our postwar trade policies no longer serve the national interest and need a fundamental overhaul.

Writing in "Public Opinion" magazine, political consultant Kevin Phillips argues that trade could move "to the front rank of political issues for the first time since the great tariff debates" early in this century. The public has long been sympathetic to protectionism; in one recent poll, 70 percent of respondents supported import limits. What's changing, Phillips contends, is that opinion-making elites—especially business executives are increasingly disaffected with open trade.

He may be right, but if so, we are playing with poison. Protectionism may satisfy an urge to punish foreigners, but it threatens to reduce economic growth and worsen our economic problems. American protectionism might inspire protectionism elsewhere—aimed at the United States and other countries. This would create uncertainty and undermine investment. Lower growth would intensify everyone's trade problems. Until recently, most protectionist measures aimed to help specific industries. The new Democratic proposal and some others hit entire countries—a direct violation of trading rules championed by the United States after World War II. Japan is the main target, but other countries (Korea, Taiwan, Brazil) could be affected. The justification is that these countries have huge surpluses with the United States and need to open their markets.

These proposals rest on a vast misunderstanding of what our trade problem is and how it might be cured. Although other countries' restrictive practices are irritating and hurt some industries, they are not a major source of the trade deficit. Indeed, the trade deficit by itself is not the trade problem. If it were, there would be an easy cure: have a recession. Imports would fall sharply. The last trade surplus occurred in 1975, which was also a recession year of high unemployment.

Actually, permanently large trade deficits, if possible, would be a good thing. They would enable us to consume more than we produce—to raise our living standards. But they aren't possible. Other countries will not indefinitely ship us more than we ship them. Our true trade problem is that the violent swings in our trade balance harm industries dependent on exports or vulnerable to imports. But protectionism cannot cure this instability.

Since 1980, America has had both record postwar trade deficits and record postwar protectionism. Among others, the steel, auto and textile industries have been heavily protected. But these measures have been swamped by other forces. High American economic growth and low growth elsewhere spurred imports and hurt exports. The high dollar has reduced our competitiveness. And the Latin American debt crisis has crimped exports.

In an interdependent world of floating exchange rates and multinational companies, control of a country's trade becomes virtually impossible. The evolution of open world financial markets (which allow countries to borrow to cover trade deficits or to reinvest surplus abroad) perpetuates trade imbalances. Exchange rates do not adjust immediately to eliminate deficits or surpluses.

And multinational firms respond to changing costs in different countries by shifting production. "More and more American multinationals have gone to global product planning," says U.S. trade official Geza Feketekuty. "Each new product is a separate decision as to where it will be designed and produced." The American shoe industry now wants import protection, but U.S. shoe manufacturers themselves account for 30 percent of our imports.

None of these changes was anticipated at the end of World War II when Americans abandoned their traditionally isolationist and protectionist policies. It was assumed that American global economic superiority and relative self-suficiency would continue. Countries' trade would remain relatively balanced, and an open trading system—in contrast to the preferential arrangements that existed before World War II—would promote world peace and a strong anti-communist alliance. Even political consultant Phillips is not certain how the new politics of protection will play out. The worse the economy gets, he argues, the more potent the issue. Its appeals are obvious. The helpful trade actions Congress might take are difficult. High budget deficits prop up interest rates and, therefore, the dollar's exchange rate. So do aspects of the tax code. Both could be changed, but the dividends would be distant and uncertain. By contrast, protectionism offers instant gratification.

Surely that is the message in the Democratic legislation. The main sponsors are all in the party's mainstream: Rep. Dan Rostenkowski of Illinois, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee; Rep. Richard Gephardt of Missouri, head of the House Democratic Caucus; and Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, ranking Democrat on the trade subcommittee of the Finance Committee. None considers himself a protectionist. Their endorsement of so protectionist a proposal reflects a conviction that it's a respectable and even imaginative economic policy.

But, ironically, the politics of protectionism may be as empty as the economics. The prospect for partisan advantage may be slight. In the Senate, Republican John Danforth of Missouri is already pushing a measure to retaliate against Japan. With rising protectionist sentiment, Republicans and Democrats might compete to see who can be more pro-American. To keep from being isolated, the White House might take its own measures. At home and abroad, protectionism is a game that everyone can play—and lose.

CONGRATULATIONS TO AMERICAN LEGION POST 186 BASEBALL TEAM

HON. THOMAS J. BLILEY, JR.

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments this morning to offer my hearty congratulations to the baseball team from American Legion Post 186 from Midlothian, VA, for winning the American Legion World Series in Kokomo, IN, on Monday, September 2. With little fanfare and no threats to strike, the American Legion baseball teams met in Indiana for their annual competition. Midlothian Post 186 advanced to the final day of the series by beating Omaha, NE, 3 to 2 and then took on the team from Sacramento, CA, to win the final game of the series 3 to 2 on Monday night. My warmest congratulations to the team from American Legion Post 186. All of Midlothian and the Richmond area are proud of your accomplishments and look forward to seeing you defend your title next year.

CATCHING MUMPS CUTS COSTS

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 5, 1985

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce that MUMPS is spreading throughout the Federal Government and around the world. This disease has proven to be an extremely effective antidote to the fatal ailments big budgetitis and cost overrunus extremus. What's more, this antidote was developed within the walls of an often criticized Federal agency—the Veterans' Administration.

So often we hear of how much the Government wastes; from golden fleeces to $91 screws. Can't the Government be run effectively? Well, I'm glad to report the VA has saved taxpayers millions of dollars and simultaneously improved service to the country's veterans simply by implementing a new, efficient, automated data processing system.

On February 18, 1982, the VA's Department of Medicine and Surgery was given a directive to develop a Decentralized Hospital Computer Program [DHCP]. One of the key provisions of this plan was the choice of softwware systems—the Massachusetts General Hospital Utility Multi-Programming System [MUMPS]. This system was chosen because it is user friendly; needs much less computer space than other language with comparable functions. The cost of implementing this system, including hardware, through fiscal year 1985 is only $100 million, as compared to the $2 billion to $3 billion cost estimated by commercial firms. Not only has the VA implemented the DHCP internally and for much less than expected, but only 2 years after the inception of the DHCP in 1982, the initial MUMPS software was fully operational in 169 VA hospitals.

MUMPS software has also been adapted by hospitals in Japan, Europe—including the largest hospital in the world in Finland—by HHS's Indian Health Service, and the Department of Defense—still immune to MUMPS—is assessing the feasibility of using MUMPS in military hospitals. It is high time that the VA, particularly the Department of Medicine and Surgery, be recognized and commended publicly for its outstanding job in implementing the DHCP and MUMPS software. Implementation of MUMPS in the VA has already saved taxpayers millions of dollars. Imagine the possible savings if MUMPS were to spread to other agencies. I for one am proud of the VA's accomplishments and applaud their fine work.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Monday, September 9, 1985

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Open our eyes, O God, to see the beauty of the world as well as the pain; open our ears to hear the words of joy, as well as the sounds of defeat; open our minds, O God, to understand the mysteries of life and love, and always to be instruments of Your healing and care. We thank You, gracious God, that You have given us responsibility to be Your people in our day and time, and we most earnestly pray for strength to be faithful to that calling. In Your name we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Chirdon, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

On August 2, 1985:

H.J. Res. 164. Joint resolution to designate August 4, 1985, as "Freedom of the Press Day."

On August 5, 1985:

H.R. 2378. An act to amend section 504 of title 5, United States Code, and section 2412 of title 28, United States Code, with respect to awards of expenses of certain agency and court proceedings, and for other purposes.

On August 9, 1985:

H.J. Res. 251. An act to provide that a special gold medal honoring George Gershwin be presented to his sister, Frances Gershwin Godowsky, and a special gold medal honoring Ira Gershwin be presented to his widow, Leonore Gershwin, and to provide for the production of bronze duplicates of such medals for sale to the public.

On August 15, 1985:

H.R. 2577. An act making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 2908. An act to amend title XI of the Education Amendments of 1978, relating to Indian education programs.

On August 16, 1985:

H.R. 2068. An act to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for the Department of State, the U.S. Information Agency, the Board for International Broadcasting, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 2370. An act to amend the Public Health Service Act to extend the programs of assistance for nurse education.

WATCH WHAT WE DO, NOT WHAT WE SAY

(Ms. KAPTUR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, in listening to President Reagan's statement this weekend on international trade, I was reminded of an old line from a former President, which said "watch what we do, not what we say." Suddenly, after 4½ years, the President says he is concerned about our Nation's trade crisis. After all of these years of blindly swearing allegiance at the altar of free trade, the President now says he is for fair trade. Mr. President, it's too little, too late. Two weeks ago, you rejected the recommendation of the International Trade Commission to limit the number of shoe imports coming into this country. You slammed the door in the faces of America's footwear workers and manufacturers and left it wide open for their competitors in Korea, Taiwan, and Brazil. Last March, you did much the same to America's automobile industry.

Mr. President, tough talk won't stop the flood of foreign imports—from computer chips to shoes—dumped on our markets. No, only a strong, comprehensive, and far-reaching trade policy for our Nation will help us regain our competitive edge in world trade. We in Congress are ready to move ahead quickly on legislation which puts American workers and American businesses first. We urge you Mr. President, to put aside the press releases, roll up your sleeves, and join us.

AMERICA CAN BE PROUD OF BASSETT ARMY HOSPITAL

(Mr. NICHOLS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, in recent months the American public has been reading a number of accounts relating to medical problems in our military hospitals.

As chairman of the Investigations Subcommittee of the House Armed Services Committee, we have looked into many of these allegations and, in all honesty, I must report to the Congress that military hospitals are not immune from matters relating to care of patients and the quality of medical attention, but neither are civilian hospitals for that matter.

Over the August recess period, I had occasion to be closely associated with Bassett Army Hospital located at Fort Wainwright, AK. Mr. Speaker, Bassett Army Hospital is a small 40-bed hospital located adjacent to the city of Fairbanks and which, I would suppose, is as remote a military post as we have in the entire continental United States.

During a long-planned vacation to Alaska, my wife developed a rather serious kidney infection necessitating that I locate medical care, which I found after driving some 300 miles from the Valdez area. I cannot speak too highly of the excellent medical care she received in that remote military hospital, and despite the fact this small hospital did not have all the latest equipment found at the Bethesda Naval Hospital or Walter Reed, the personal attention provided by doctors Jake Allen and Frank Floyd, and by nurses Helen Schotz, Marilynn Harasich, and Holly Buchanan more than made up for these deficiencies.

I have never been prouder of military medical care than that which I witnessed during my wife's 5 days at the Bassett Army Hospital from the dedicated doctors and nurses who, much like the television serial MASH, perform their daily duties in combat boots and camouflage olive drab attire.

America can be just as proud of Bassett Army Hospital and of its counterparts throughout the continental United States wherever American military men and women serve.

PRESIDENTIAL SOMERSAULT

(Mr. O'NEILL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, faced with bipartisan repudiation of his "constructive engagement" policy toward South Africa, the President now says that he will take action by Executive order. Unfortunately, the proposals announced this morning are chock full of loopholes.

He said that he will end loans to the Government of South Africa, but exempted any program directed toward the nation's 24 million blacks, even if that program strengthens apartheid. He can use the money to develop and maintain segregated housing or segregated education or segregated nationhood Bantustans.

He suggests that he will end imports of the Kruggerand, and says that he will await the approval of our major trading partners. Since when does the United States need to seek such approval for such steps. Certainly we did not do it in the case of Nicaragua.

Third, the President has eliminated the threat of future sanctions contained in the congressional bill. Those sanctions would have put South Africa on notice that Americans are deadly serious about ending apartheid.

This package may play in Pretoria. It will be seen for what it is worth by the people suffering under the yoke of the Government of South Africa.

AN ATTEMPT BY THE PRESIDENT TO CIRCUMVENT CONGRESSIONAL ACTION ON APARTHEID

(Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I am deeply disturbed this afternoon because of the remarks of the President of the United States with regard to the bipartisan coalition in the House and the Senate on South Africa. Unfortunately, the President has come forward with an ill-disguised, ill-advised attempt to circumvent an overwhelming bipartisan consensus in the Congress.

If the President were truly interested in having our Nation speak with one voice instead of continuing to support the apartheid regime in South Africa, he would sign the legislation that a broad cross-section of Republicans and Democrats have put before him. I fear that the President's tragic refusal to support the compromise legislation will only undermine those moderate forces in South Africa who seek nonviolent reform of apartheid.

In essence, the President has said, "I am going to allow loans by our banks to the apartheid regime as long as they say it is going to help the majority." Second, he is going to go to GATT to ask for permission on a prohibition of Krugerrands. This is the first time we have done our foreign policy by a Gallup poll of other nations rather than acting on what Americans believe in—our values and our interests.

Finally, he has said that there is to be no future sanctions despite the fact that over a thousand of the citizens of the majority have been brutalized and killed in the last few months by the apartheid regime.

Mr. Speaker, it is a sad day for all Americans, and I hope the Members of the other body will have the courage and the strength to continue the bipartisan coalition and approve the compromise legislation in the conference on the Antiapartheid Act.

EXECUTIVE ORDER PROHIBITING TRADE AND CERTAIN OTHER TRANSACTIONS INVOLVING SOUTH AFRICA—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 99-103)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

(For message, see proceedings of the Senate of today, Monday, September 9, 1985.)

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 2936

Mr. GRAY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my name be removed from the list of cosponsors of the bill, H.R. 2936.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5, rule I, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on the motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 4 of rule XV.

Such rollcall vote, if postponed, will be taken on Tuesday, September 10, 1985.

COORDINATED OPERATION OF THE CENTRAL VALLEY PROJECT AND THE STATE WATER PROJECT IN CALIFORNIA

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3113) providing for the coordinated operation of the Central Valley project and the State water project in California.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3113

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. PROJECT OPERATION POLICY.

Section 2 of the Act of August 26, 1937 (50 Stat. 850) is amended by—

(a) inserting at the beginning "(a)"; and

(b) inserting the following new subsection:

"(b)(1) The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to operate the Central Valley project, in conjunction with the State of California water project, in conformity with State water quality standards for the San Francisco Bay/Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta and Estuary unless the Secretary determines that operation of the project in conformity with such standards is not consistent with the congressional directives applicable to the project. Should the Secretary of the Interior so determine, then the Secretary shall promptly request the Attorney General to bring an action in the court of proper jurisdiction for the purpose of determining the applicability of such standards to the project.

"(2) The Secretary is further directed to operate the Central Valley project, in conjunction with the State water project, so that water supplied at the intake of the Contra Costa Canal is of a quality equal to or better than the water quality standards contained in the Water Right Decision 1485 of the State of California Water Resources Control Board, dated August 16, 1978, except under drought emergency water conditions pursuant to a declaration by the Governor of California.".

SEC. 2. NONREIMBURSABLE COSTS.

Section 2 of the Act of August 26, 1937 (50 Stat. 850) is amended by inserting the following new subsection:

"(c)(1) The costs associated with providing Central Valley project water supplies for the purpose of salinity control and for complying with State water quality standards over and above existing water quality objectives identified in the water rights exchange contract dated February 14, 1968, shall be considered nonreimbursable project costs.

"(2) The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to undertake a cost allocation study of the Central Valley project, including the provisions of this Act, and to implement such allocations no later than January 1, 1987.".

SEC. 3. COORDINATED OPERATIONS AGREEMENT.

Section 2 of the Act of August 26, 1937 (50 Stat. 850) is amended by inserting the following new subsection:

"(d) The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to execute and implement the "Agreement Between the United States of America and the Department of Water Resources of the State of California for Coordinated Operation of the Central Valley Project and the State Water Project" dated May 20, 1985: Provided, That—

"(1) the contract with the State of California referred to in subarticle 10(h)(1) of the agreement referred to in this subsection for the conveyance and purchase of Central Valley project water shall become final only after an Act of Congress approving the execution of the contract by the Secretary of the Interior;

"(2) if the Secretary determines there is a shortage in the quantity of Central Valley project water available to meet the project's contractual commitments for water and the State water quality standards enacted pursuant to the procedures specified in article 11 of the agreement referred to in this subsection, the Secretary shall apportion available water among the water users capable of receiving water from the project by reducing deliveries to all such water users by the same percentage, unless the Secretary is prohibited by existing contracts, existing law, or has determined that some other method of apportionment is required to prevent undue hardship; and

"(3) the Secretary of the Interior may exercise the termination provisions of the agreement referred to in this subsection only after the Secretary has submitted a report to the Congress and one hundred and eighty days in which Congress is in session have elapsed. The report must outline the Secretary's reasons for terminating the agreement, and include the views of the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency and the Governor of the State of California on the Secretary's decision.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. PASHAYAN] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3113 represents the culmination of nearly two decades of negotiations on an agreement to coordinate the operations of the Federal Central Valley project and the California State water project.

I believe that my colleagues from California—Congressman TONY COELHO and Congressman RICHARD LEHMAN—would join me in describing H.R. 3113 as one of the most important bills ever considered in Congress affecting water policy in the State of California.

H.R. 3113 is not simply a piece of legislation. It is a peace treaty which can help to end the water wars which have crippled our State's resource program for over a decade.

In 1960, California prepared to launch its State water project and the Federal Government had just approved a substantial expansion of the Central Valley project. My father, then a State senator, wrote the State Delta Protection Act which clarified the obligation of the State project to provide an adequate water supply for the delta and to operate the State project to prevent the intrusion of ocean salinity which degrades the quality of that water supply.

Today, 25 years later, H.R. 3113 makes it clear that the CVP must be operated so that the water supply and water quality of the San Francisco Bay/Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta and Estuary are protected first, before surplus waters are diverted to users in other areas of the State.

Mr. Speaker, water users in California have been in a state of paralysis for over a decade. We've demonstrated that when we are in disagreement, nothing can happen. Now, a new generation of political leadership intends to demonstrate that when we work together we can make great progress.

I want to publicly say that the compromise embodied in H.R. 3113 would not have been possible without the active involvement and the honest determination of my colleagues and cosponsors, Congressmen TONY COELHO and RICK LEHMAN. They deserve a great deal of credit for this legislation.

H.R. 3113 has the broad support of nearly every group in California, including the Governor, State senators and assemblymen, delta interests, environmentalists, and water contractors from both the State and Federal projects.

Mr. Speaker, the singular goal of this legislation is to resolve, once and for all, the obligation of the Federal Central Valley project to meet State water quality standards for the San Francisco Bay/Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta and Estuary.

This bill clarifies that the Secretary of the Interior, at a minimum, must operate the CVP so as to meet the standards established from time to time for the bay and delta by the State water resources control board, through the board's formal administrative processes.

It is particularly noteworthy that this provision includes the San Francisco Bay, as well as the delta. Protection of the bay has been too long overlooked by the State water resources control board, and we expect that it will be included in the next standards issued by the board. H.R. 3113 makes it clear that the Congress intends for the Federal project to be operated to meet those bay standards should they be promulgated.

It is also important to note that the Federal obligation to meet State water quality standards will exist even if the coordinated operations agreement [COA] becomes inoperative for some reason. Thus, we have for the first time, firm assurances that bay and delta water quality standards will be met regardless of the future of the COA.

Compliance with State water quality standards by the CVP as required by this statute is not intended in any way to prevent or restrict a judicial determination by a court of competent jurisdiction that the CVP has an obligation to maintain water quality standards in the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta and San Francisco Bay Estuary which exceed and are better that the standards specified in the coordinated operations agreement, and its exhibit A, as directed in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, an important safeguard is provided in H.R. 3113 to the 300,000 customers of the Contra Costa Water District—the first CVP contractor. The bill provides to these customers a guarantee they have never before enjoyed under Federal law: An assurance that specific water quality standards, at least as good as those contained in D-1485, will be maintained at the district's intake at Rock Slough.

Those standards may not be waived unless we confront a catastrophic drought of the sort which affected California in 1976-77, and then, only after complying with California State law and following an emergency drought declaration by the Governor of the State. This waiver of the water quality requirement for Contra Costa will only be invoked on a temporary basis and only in the most extreme conditions where no prudent alternative exists to meeting the State water quality standards.

Mr. Speaker, protecting the delta provides benefits not only for residents of the bay/delta region, but for the customers of the Cental Valley and State water projects. The delta serves as the point of export—the "switching station", if you will—for the State and Federal projects. Maintaining high quality water in the delta is necessary to assure Cental Valley and southern California customers satisfactory water for their crops, their ranches, and their cities.

Maintaining and improving delta water quality benefits a wide variety of other interests as well, including fish and wildlife, salinity control and river and harbor maintenance. It is impossible to enumerate all of the beneficiaries or to send a bill to them for the benefits provided by the project.

Therefore, this legislation makes nonreimbursable all costs associated with providing salinity control and for complying with State water quality standards in excess of the so-called Tracy standards.

It is important to note that making these costs nonreimbursable is not a new idea. The Department of the Interior has been following that same policy since 1978, when the decision was first made voluntarily to comply with State water quality standards.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3113 authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to execute and implement the coordinated operations agreement dated May 20, 1985. This agreement, which has been negotiated by representatives of the Bureau of Reclamation and the California Department of Water Resources, provides an additional framework for the management of both water projects and for the benefit of all.

H.R. 3113 authorizes and directs the Secretary to implement the agreement, but only if three statutory conditions are met. We believe these conditions are essential to assure an agreement that permanently resolves the controversies addressed by the COA and H.R. 3113. These provisions are also essential because we do not believe that agreements of this magnitude ought to be entered into or voided without deliberate consideration by the Congress of the United States. There is no better way to protect the Federal investment—which now exceeds $2 billion—in the Central Valley project.

The first statutory provision provides that the contract with the State of California for the conveyance and purchase of Central Valley project water referred to in article 10(h)(1) of the agreement will become final only after an act of Congress. We believe this contract will be critical to the long-term resolution of the controversies addressed by the agreement and H.R. 3113. It will also fundamentally affect the future of water resource development and management in California for decades. It is for these reasons that H.R. 3113 provides that Congress must approve the contract before its execution.

We want to note specifically and emphatically, that when the Secretary signs contracts for the sale or delivery of CVP water, the full force of Federal reclamation law remains in effect. This bill in no way changes existing law with respect to the contracting and delivery of water.

The second statutory provision provides that when the Secretary determines that there is a shortage in the amount of project water available to meet both the contractual commitments and the State water quality standards, the Secretary shall apportion reductions in deliveries to all users. Exceptions to this rule would be allowed under terms of existing contracts, existing law, or upon a determination that some other method of apportionment is required to prevent undue hardship.

When rare shortages do occur, water diversions and deliveries must inevitably be curtailed, as they were in 1976–77. As was the case during that drought, we anticipate that the first responsibility for enduring reductions will come from agricultural contractors before reductions are imposed on municipal users who lack available alternative sources of water for essential human health and safety needs.

This is not a matter of regionalism or favoritism; it is a recognition that when disaster strikes, plants must suffer before human being. This is the basis upon which the project has been operated in the past, with the cooperation of all parties, and it is a sound priority system for future operations as well.

For we in the delta, who have watched our water quality deteriorate as a result of the export of the two projects, it is essential that this legislation provide us fundamental assurances that a baseline of quality has been established which will not be undermined with the signing of new water delivery contracts, or with the construction of additional units of the CVP.

We intend that section 3(d)(2) provide that long-term assurance by establishing that water sold under future contracts be recallable when necessary to meet State water quality standards. Surplus water will remain available for sale under this law.

But water which is needed to meet lawfully established bay-delta water quality standards is not surplus, and must remain available to meet this fundamental project purpose.

The third and final provision added by H.R. 3113 provides that the Secretary may exercise the termination provisions of the agreement only after the Secretary has submitted a report to the Congress and 180 legislative days have elapsed. The report must outline the Secretary's reasons for terminating the agreement, and include the views of the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency and the Governor of California on the Secretary's decision.

There are several issues which we were not able to address in this bill. Among the most important is the lack of a sufficient water supply to adequately protect California waterfowl. It is my sincere hope that the Department of the Interior will make this problem a top priority so that waterfowl populations in the Central Valley are not further jeopardized. This is a critical issue, and we in the Congress will be looking closely at this problem in the coming months.

Mr. Speaker, the time has come to move forward to end the suspicion and the stagnation which has impeded sound water policy in California for too long.

I firmly believe H.R. 3113 provides the framework for accomplishing that goal, and I hope my colleagues will join me in support of my motion to suspend the rules and pass this important bill.

Finally, I want to publicly thank several people who worked very hard to make this legislation possible. We are all indebted to the hard work of Tom Graff, Cressey Nakagawa, Dave Schuster, Stuart Somach, Bob Will, and Dave Kennedy who have worked tirelessly to forge the compromise that is H.R. 3113.

Mr. Speaker, under my unanimous-consent request, I include herewith several editorials and letters in support of H.R. 3113:

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
GOVERNOR'S OFFICE,
Sacramento, September 5, 1985.

Hon. GEORGE MILLER,
Member of Congress, House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR GEORGE: I support H.R. 3113, which would provide for the coordinated operation of the Central Valley Project and the State Water Project in California, and am writing to request your assistance in obtaining the passage of this legislation when it is considered on the House floor.

H.R. 3113 is the culmination of over 25 years of negotiations between the California Department of Water Resources and the Bureau of Reclamation on the Coordinated Operations Agreement (COA). The COA is essential for orderly and efficient functioning of California's two largest water resources development projects, the Federal Central Valley Project (CVP) and the California State Water Project (SWP). The two projects are operated as separate entities by the Bureau and the Department, but their operations are interrelated, their waters are commingled, and their effects on the environment occur jointly in many instances.

The COA will accomplish several objectives. The Bureau of Reclamation will be required to meet the same Delta protection criteria that the Department of Water Resources meets in operating the State project. The COA will also define the respective quantities of water supply of the two projects and thus provide a basis for the Bureau to resume its contracting program. Finally, the COA will provide the basis for negotiating a wheeling and purchase agreement between the two projects such that the CVP can use extra conveyance capacity in the California Aqueduct and the SWP can use interim water available from the CVP until it is needed in CVP service areas.

H.R. 3113 currently has broad statewide support from water interests, environmentalists, State and Federal water contractors and elected officials. Enactment of this legislation is widely viewed as a significant step in resolving California's longstanding controversy over water development.

Thank you for your consideration of my request.

Most cordially,

GEORGE DEUKMEJIAN.

Representative GEORGE MILLER,
Capitol One DC:

California Round Table urges support H.R. 3113 enabling legislation for Federal-State water project coordinated operations agreement. Remaining issues requiring clarification can be resolved through process. COA/HR3113 are major positive steps for California water policy. Urge yes vote on September 9.

LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS
OF CALIFORNIA,
Sacramento, CA, August 19, 1985.

To: California congressional delegation, House of Representatives.
From: Linda Broder, LWVC president.
Re: The coordinated operations agreement and H.R. 3113.

The League of Women Voters of California (LWVC) is pleased to support the proposed Coordinated Operations Agreement (COA) and its reauthorizing legislation, HR 3113, as passed by the House Sub Committee on Water and Power Resources on July 30, 1985. We urge adoption of HR 3113 when it comes before Congress this fall.

Many individuals and organizations in California have expressed great interest in the COA, an agreement to coordinate exports of water through the Delta by the Central Valley Project (CVP) and State Water Project (SWP). LWVC members participated in an Ad Hoc Group that met informally to examine the COA and discuss their differing opinions. The starting point for compromise was the common belief that increased cooperation by the two water projects is essential for improved water quality and management of the Delta. The League commends all participants in this group, which included representatives from state and federal contractors, labor, business, environmental and civic groups, for their willingness to reach for greater accord on the issues involved. The result was an increased understanding of the scope and complexities of the COA and increased respect for each point of view. We believe this process greatly contributed to the successful passage of HR 3113 from the Sub Committee on Water and Power.

We also applaud the work of the Sub Committee in drafting language in HR 3113 which strengthens the commitment of the federal government to water quality protection. While we recognize that the resolution of federal adherence to future standards is uncertain, we are sure that the reference in the bill to the San Francisco Bay/Sacramento San Joaquin Delta is a vast improvement. This recognizes the necessity to expand water quality protections to an area larger than the Delta. The operation of both the CVP and SWP must recognize this responsiblity. This is—and should be—a statewide and national concern.

HR 3113 addresses and satisfies two League concerns: the termination clause, and the requirement that Congress approve the contract that is provided for in the COA. We accept these provisions as passed out of committee in HR 3113.

Two reservations still exist, however. One concerns the new wheeling contract provided by the COA. We urge that conservation measures and an adequate water supply for fish, wildlife and instream uses be included in the contract. Because of the probable inadequacy of Delta standard, D-1485, these goals are as important as the need to fulfill contractual obligations. Water conservation measures should be required and implementation begun before extra water is made available for agricultural contracts. The LWVC discourages water contracting and marketing policies which build up demand and establish rigid patterns of distribution and use. Instead of increasing reliance on exports, the LWVC would prefer to see the COA emphasize greater cooperation and coordination between the two export projects with increased efficiencies in the use of existing supplies.

We hope the new COA will foster these goals. It seems regrettable that the proposed agreement does not mention water conservation (as meaning the saving of water), or fish and wildlife needs, or the desirability of off-stream storage, conjunctive use of ground and surface supplies and the necessity for groundwater recharge.

Emerging economic trends necessitate that the new contract look at factors other than financial gain from the sale of more CVP water through new contracts. Some experts predict that agricultural irrigation demand in the Central Valley will decline due to higher costs and acute drainage problems. Water trading between districts could become another economical option and a source of additional supply. Because the League wishes to discourage rigid patterns of contracting, we hope the forty year CVP contract will become a thing of the past. It is imperative that Congress recognize economic change when it evaluates the wheeling contract as these factors may significantly impact the amount of water available for export for both projects.

Basically, the LWVC is concerned how the additional CVP water will be used including its allocation between urban and rural users. The League will watch the development of the contract closely. You will receive comments from us again at the appropriate time during the EIS process and Congressional review.

Federal compliance with future state water quality standards is the second major LWVC concern that was not settled in the COA or in its enabling legislation. As stated earlier, the League is pleased with the strengthening language in HR 3113. We are highly gratified also that the COA requires the federal government to accept its share of responsibility for mitigating Delta water quality up to the existing standards, D-1485. This interim standard is under review, however, and has been challenged in courts as inadequate. We had hoped that HR 3113 would show an even greater commitment to water quality as one of the purposes of the Central Valley Project. The League accepts the compromise as written as political reality. We will continue to work for high water quality standards in relation to Delta exports for both public health and environmental reasons. We believe that states may set standards higher than minimum federal standards.

The job before us now is to work for passage of the proposed COA, and for HR 3113 without any weakening amendments. In spite of our concerns we recognize that the COA is an historic accord which has the potential to significantly improve water resource management in California.

LOS ANGELES AREA
CHAMBER OF COMMERCE
Los Angeles, CA, August 28, 1985.

Hon. GEORGE MILLER,
House of Representatives, House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MILLER: When Congress reconvenes in September, one of the critical issues before the U.S. House of Representatives will be HR 3113 (by Congressmen Miller, Coelho, and Lehman) authorizing implementation of a Coordinated Operations Agreement (COA) between the State of California and the federal government. The Los Angeles Area Chamber of Commerce urges your support of HR 3113.

The COA, which has been in negotiation for nearly three decades, establishes a partnership between the federal Central Valley Project (CVP) and the State Water Project (SWP) for the efficient export of water from the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta.

Through efficiencies created by this agreement between the state's Department of Water Resources and the Bureau of Reclamation, such a partnership will go a long way toward increasing the supply for those who contract for water from either project. Additionally, the delta itself will benefit through a more certain water supply, especially in dry years, resulting in improved water quality and wildlife conditions.

The Southern California area will grow by more than three million people by the turn of the century. Many of those people will depend on the greater Los Angeles area to provide jobs, housing, and recreational opportunities. All of these things depend on an assured supply of water. Most of this region is heavily dependent on water imported from other areas, including the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta.

It is this Chamber's policy to actively pursue those activities that both reasonably augment and conserve our water supply and which improve the operation of those importation systems on which we depend. The COA helps accomplish these goals by making the federal government partially responsible for releasing water to maintain delta water quality standards, removing some of that burden from the state. The COA also provides a mechanism for the interim sale of some CVP water to the SWP, as well as transportation of some federal water to its contractors through SWP facilities.

HR 3113 is a nonpartisan issue that blends the strength of two great water projects in order to improve both, at virtually no cost. As the COA legislation moves through the Congress, I hope the Los Angeles Area Chamber of Commerce can count on your support.

Sincerely,

RAY REMY.

CALIFORNIA TROUT,
August 21, 1985.

Hon GEORGE MILLER,
Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE MILLER: Greetings from California Trout, a statewide organization of conservation-minded anglers working to protect, enhance and restore wild trout and native steelhead fisheries around California.

We are happy to throw our support behind your H.R. 3113 to provide for the coordinated operation of the Central Valley Project (CVP) and the State Water Project (SWP) in California. The Coordinated Operation Agreement is an historic document that will have longlasting positive benefits for enlightened water policy throughout the state.

We applaud and fully support your bill and urge you and your colleagues in the House and Senate to pass this measure swiftly. Thank you again for your leadership on this important public policy issue.

Yours truly,

RICHARD H. MAY,
President.

ASSEMBLY, CALIFORNIA LEGISLATURE,
Sacramento, CA, August 20, 1985.

Hon. GEORGE MILLER,
House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MILLER: I would like to express my support of Senate Bill 1192—Wilson and HR 1331—G. Miller.

As I'm sure you know, the passage of these bills would be beneficial to both the citizens of California and the federal government. They would provide badly needed water to the farming communities of the Central Valley and also allow the federal government to put to good use the excess water in its reservoirs. This coordinated operating agreement will enhance the quality of life in the Delta area and in turn the lives of all Californians.

I urge you to support Senate Bill 1192 and HR 3113 so that the resources of both the state and the federal government can be put to the best and most efficient use possible.

Sincerely,

PAT NOLAN,
Assembly Republican Leader.

RESOLUTION 8070—RESOLUTION OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE METROPOLITAN WATER DISTRICT OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA ON H.R. 3113

Whereas, The Metropolitan Water District of Southern California relies extensively on the California State Water Project (SWP) to provide vital water supplies from the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta to 13 million residents of the State living in its service area, and;

Whereas, both the SWP and the federal Central Valley Project (CVP) divert surplus water from the delta under water rights permits administered by the State Water Resources Control Board, and the relative priority of the respective permits of the SWP and the CVP have long been and continue to be the subject of dispute, and;

Whereas, both projects provide major water supplies of statewide importance and can optimize their respective shares of surplus delta water by coordinating their operations, since the SWP has greater diversion capacity while the CVP has greater storage capacity, and;

Whereas, The California Department of Water Resources (DWR) and the United States Bureau of Reclamation (USBR) formally recognized the need for an agreement to coordinate the SWP and CVP operations in a 1960 agreement, and have spent the intervening 25 years developing a fair and reasonable coordinated operation agreement, and;

Whereas, agreement has been reached on coordinated operations that offer practical solutions to long-standing water disputes centered in the delta, but such agreement cannot be implemented without Congressional authority, and;

Whereas, The Interior and Insular Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives has approved legislation in the form of a House of Representatives' Bill, HR 3113, providing that authority and has referred HR 3113 to the full House for passage, and;

Whereas, enactment of that legislation will significantly benefit Metropolitan as well as California generally, by assuring the delta better water quality, and by providing a mechanism for better managing delta water resources.

Now, therefore, be it resolved that the Board of Directors of the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California does strongly support the swift enactment of HR 3113 and the execution of the Coordinated Operation Agreement between the United States and the California Department of Water Resources.

CONTRA COSTA COUNTY, COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT DEPARTMENT,
Martinez, CA, August 23, 1985.

Hon. GEORGE MILLER,
Congressman, Seventh District
Pleasant Hill, CA.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MILLER: On August 13, 1985, The Board of Supervisors endorsed H.R. 3113, sponsored by you, providing for the Coordinated Operation of the Central Valley Project and the State Water Project in California. Attached is a copy of a report from the Board's Water Committee on the bill.

The Board appreciates your efforts in sponsoring H.R. 3113 which is a very important piece of legislation to help insure that the water quality and environmental values of the San Francisco Bay/San Joaquin Delta estuary are protected.

Please let the Board's Water Committee know if the County can be of any other assistance in the passage of this very important bill.

If you have any questions, please contact Dave Okita at 671-4295.

Very truly yours,

ANTHONY A. DEHAESUS, Director.

PAUL E. KILKENNY,
Assistant Director.

CALIFORNIA WATERFOWL ASSOCIATION,
Sacramento, CA, August 21, 1985.

Hon. GEORGE MILLER,
House Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR GEORGE: This letter is in confirmation of my recent conversation with Dan Beard about the Association's requested amendment to H.R. 3113. As you know, CWA strongly supports the concept of the COA and commends you for introducing H.R. 3113. In particular we support its fine tuning of certain of the COA provisions. However, in our letters to you dated July 10th and Juy 30th we expressed our concern over a major side effect which signing of the COA could have on the water supplies for two-thirds of the remaining wetlands in California's Central Valley. Over the past three weeks we have become aware of the considerations which justify a modification of our July 30th request.

First, this fall the Bureau of Reclamation will start a two year feasibility level study of the duck water problem. This study could be the basis for future Congressional action. The quantity, location, and required time of the year when duck water supplies are needed are already known (see my letter of July 30th) so the study will concentrate on potential water sources and delivery systems. The point is that by the fall of 1987 we will know how much of the 453,800 acre foot duck water requirement would actually have to come from CVP yield as opposed to various other sources. My personal horseback guess is about 150,000 acre feet.

Second, the Sacramento Valley agricultural allocation proposed by the CVP contractors is about 383,000 acre feet. However, we understand that only about 200,000 acre feet could be delivered without Congressional authorization and appropriations to extend the Tehama Colusa Canal and build Oat Reservoir.

Third, the Delta Mendota Canal is currently operating at its capacity (including the annual delivery of 250,000 acre feet of surplus water to Westlands). Therefore, the CVP lacks the conveyance capability which would enable to Bureau to contract for more water without using the California Aquaduct. H.R. 3113 provides for Congressional review and approval of any such agreement between DWR and UBR. Therefore, realistically it appears that no more than 450,000 of the 1,100,000 acre feet of available CVP yield could be contracted for in the next two years.

These two constraints, plus a definite timetable for finalizing a plan to solve the duck water problem leads us to the conclusion that our requested amendment to H.R. 3113 is not needed. In its place we would like the bill's legislative history to show clear Congressional intent that the amount of CVP yield necessary to solve the duck water problem should be reserved until the Congress has had an opportunity to deal with this issue. I understand from Dan that this approach is politically feasible, and we respectfully request that you include it as part of your presentation of H.R. 3113 on the House floor. I have been in touch with Kathy Files of Senator Cranston's staff, and she feels that it might be appropriate for the Senator to take similar action on the Senate side.

We would appreciate it if you would let us know whether this alternative approach is acceptable to you.

Sincerely,

D. CHAPIN,
Chairman, Resources Committee.

WATER BREAKTHROUGH AT LAST

After 25 years of argument, litigation and mutual suspicion, the federal Bureau of Reclamation and the state Department of Water Resources have finally come to an agreement about how to coordinate the operation of their California water projects. That was no small achievement.

Its result should increase efficiency and, therefore, increase water available for use by California farmers and urbanites. Even more important, the new agreement finally commits the federal government to using its own water supplies to help meet the state's current standards for protection of the San Joaquin-Sacramento Delta. In return, the federal government will be able to use the state's facilities to deliver water it used to have no means of transporting. Everyone should benefit.

Before Congress approves the new agreement, however, there is at least one central feature that must be bolstered. The federal and state negotiators left it too easy for the federal government to withdraw from the agreement and renege on its delta protection commitment in five years, after the state has already given up its quid pro quo. The agreement also makes it possible for some future interior secretary to unilaterally decide to ignore any tougher delta protection rules the state might enact in the next few years, even though most experts agree tougher rules are needed. It's left to the interior secretary to decide which delta standards conflict with Congress' intentions.

California Rep. George Miller, chairman of the House Subcommittee on Water and Power Resources, is urging Congress to close these and other potential loopholes. He has proposed, for instance, that any future interior secretary be required to obtain congressional permission before breaking the agreement, just as it takes congressional approval to enter into it. He has also proposed that Congress pass legislation making it perfectly clear that its intention is to have federal water used to help protect the fish and wildlife and the quality of water in the delta, the Suisun marsh and San Francisco Bay. Given the distrust that 25 years of argument have nurtured, such extra assurances would make a great deal of sense.

It's also important for Congress to be clear about what this new agreement has not accomplished. Although it has made it possible to move more water from North to South, this agreement has not removed the last roadblock in the way of new water project development.

Whether the state and federal governments and their water customers' can afford major new construction projects, whether conservation and redistribution of existing water supplies would be more cost-effective and whether any particular new project is environmentally acceptable remain questions to be answered case by case, as they were before this agreement made new water shipments possible. Whether the federal government's stored water should be committed to new contractors or saved for use in maintaining delta and bay water quality during dry years is another question that has not been resolved by this agreement; it remains for state water officials to answer. And arriving at the right answers is no easier than it ever was.

The federal-state agreement provides a new opportunity for rationality in the operation of the California water system, and everyone involved in the negotiations is to be congratulated for that. But it is an opportunity that can also be badly abused if Californians don't soon come to an agreement among themselves on a rational set of priorities for the use of the water resources the state has.

[From the Los Angeles Times, Aug. 4, 1985]

WATER OUT OF THE ASHES

One of California's most persistent and divisive water problems is nearing solution. In a critical vote last week the House Interior Committee approved legislation to implement a state-federal agreement for joint operation of their giant water systems in the delta of the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers.

The agreement would permit the pumps of the federal Central Valley Project and the state Water Project to be managed in a fashion that would protect the environment of the estuary and make available a major new supply of water for potential use in the Central Valley and in Southern California. Notably, the pact would require the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation for the first time to help maintain state water-quality standards in the delta.

The state-federal Coordinated Operating Agreement is a complicated technical arrangement that was under negotiation for about three decades between the federal bureau and the state Department of Water Resources.

House Interior approval of the implementing bill was possibly the most rigorous test for the breakthrough pact. It was a major test, as well, of the direction and influence of Democratic Rep. George Miller of Contra Costa County as the new chairman of Interior's water and power subcommittee.

In the past, Miller has been anathema to many Central Valley and Southern California water-development aspirations. But now, working with two Valley Democrats, Reps. Tony Coelho and Richard H. Lehman, Miller has astutely forged a consensus out of the ashes of the 1982 Peripheral Canal battle and related animosities. His legislation serves all California, and may pave the way for creative solutions to other state water problems.

Speedy final approval of the Miller bill should a priority for all California members of Congress when they return to Washington in September.

[From the Sacramento Bee, Aug. 6, 1985]

WATER WAR ARMISTICE

California Congressman George Miller has called the bill the House Interior Committee just passed a historic peace treaty, and he's right. After 25 years of battling between state and federal officials over the extent of the federal government's responsibility for protecting the San Francisco Bay and the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta, a settlement has finally been negotiated. The committee's bill not only commits the federal government to operating its California water project in a way that meets the state's environmental standards; it also paves the way for coordinated operation of state and federal water projects. The resulting increase in efficiency—and thus in the amount of water available for use—should benefit all Californians.

The first and most important breakthrough in these water-war-peace negotiations came a month ago, when Deukmejian and Reagan administration officials worked out a coordinated operating agreement for the two water projects. Their agreement, however, still left a few too many potential loopholes and thus didn't fully stanch the mutual suspiciousness that 25 years of water warfare has bred. It was under Miller's guidance that his Subcommittee on Water and Power Resources closed enough of those loopholes to produce an acceptable treaty. He deserves to crow.

What the subcommittee added was language requiring a cooling-off period before any future Interior secretary could unilaterally pull out of the agreement and making it clear that not just Delta but also Bay water quality maintenance is a federal responsibility. Those changes should assuage California fears about the original agreement, which would have left it much easier for federal officials to renege on the deal—or alter its meaning—at some future date.

The legislators also added language requiring congressional approval before federal water deliveries from Northern to Southern California could be significantly expanded. The need to reappear before Miller's conservation-minded committee should discourage thoughtless squandering of the water that will be freed for new uses once the two projects are being operated in better coordination.

The Reagan administration apparently is worried about the cost of these firmer environmental commitments; it would prefer to have the freedom to unilaterally limit the amount of water that will have to be devoted to meeting California's environmental standards. The word on Capitol Hill is that the president may yet veto the bill.

But the price of a veto would be high itself—both in renewed warfare and in environmental risk. All the Miller subcommittee has really added to the original agreement is some assurance that it will be carried out as advertised. To veto that assurance would be to confirm the suspicions that have kept the state and federal governments fighting all this time.

Even if this treaty is signed, of course, California's other longstanding, water wars will still be raging. Within the state, consensus has yet to be reached about the best ways to protect and exploit this critical resource. But a first step is a first step. It should be taken.

[From the San Francisco Examiner, Aug. 8, 1985]

"PEACE TREATY" ON WATER

A small but noteworthy step toward ending California's "water wars" was taken in Washington last week when a House committee approved a measure to help protect water standards in the Sacramento-San Joaquin River Delta. The bill, which would require the Interior Department to accept state-set standards for Delta water quality, was hailed as a "peace treaty" that could break the political stalemate over disposition of the state's water riches.

State and federal water officials have been negotiating for years to try to iron out their differences, and this measure is a result of an agreement reached only weeks ago. The Interior Department has until now held that, in operating its huge Central Valley water project, it need not concern itself with Delta standards.

The fate of the environmentally sensitive Delta has been a bone of contention between water-wealthy Northern California and the more populous Southern part of the state, and has hampered the development of an acceptable state water plan.

The problem is that increasing the amount of fresh Delta water shipped south means increasing the amount of salt water that enters the Delta. Several plans offered to meet the growing water needs of Southern California—such as the Peripheral Canal scheme and Gov. Deukmejian's through-Delta channel plan of last year—have come to grief partly because of their failure to provide safeguards for the Delta (and for San Francisco Bay).

Further complicating the "water wars" has been the existence of federal water projects operating under different rules and policies than the state's. The lack of coordination between federal and state projects has been expensive and contrary to the state's best interests. The bill, cosponsored by Reps. George Miller (D-Martinez), Tony Coelho (D-Merced) and Rick Lehman (D-Sanger), seems likely to pass the House, but may face opposition from the White House.

A presidential veto, however, might not only undo years of delicate negotiations but would also deal a serious blow to efforts to develop an environmentally sound water plan acceptable to both Northern and Southern California. We hope the president is made to understand the importance of this bill to his home state, and comes to see it for the "peace treaty" it is.

WATER WAR DISPATCHES III—THE SACRAMENTO COA

This is Rob Edwards with a KBIG editorial.

This week, the dispatches from California's water wars are generally good news. Looking south, there's the "Imperial Swap," a deal between San Diego's Imperial Irrigation District and our Metropolitan Water District. Up north, something similar has been worked out between the Federal Bureau of Reclamation and California's Department of Water Resources.

The Federal Central Valley Project and the State Water Project both draw on some of the same Northern California rivers, and they both transfer water south through the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta. The conflict: water contracts to fill on the one hand, and water-quality standards that restrict delta pumping on the other. The solution: an historic "coordinated operating agreement" between the two projects. We help the feds ship their water, and they use some of it to meet state environmental needs.

Such local agreements are worthwhile, and buy us time. But new facilities remain essential for future needs. Until we face that fact, they'll run hot and they'll run cold—but California's water wars will continue. That's KBIG's opinion—and we welcome contrasting views from responsible individuals.

□ 1225

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 3113, a bill by the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER], and others, to implement the coordinated operations agreement, the so-called COA.

Mr. Speaker, as has been said, the underlying COA represents more than 20 years of negotiation to coordinate the operation of two massive water supply projects, the Federal central valley project, owned and operated by the Bureau of Reclamation, and the State water project, owned and operated by the State of California.

Mr. Speaker, I shall leave to others the technical description of the COA. Suffice it to say, the COA is a very complex document which goes a long way in the direction of satisfying environmental concerns for water quality in the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta.

This is not to say, however, that I should not prefer a bill that would simply authorize the Secretary of Interior to execute the COA as negotiated. In my view, it is not necessary to amend the 1937 Central Valley Project Act itself; however, it is also fair to say that the form of H.R. 3113 passed by the Interior Committee on July 31 represents a substantial improvement over the earlier versions of the bill. Moreover, I am generally satisfied with the form of the report as it relates to article 10(H) of the COA.

For example, future Federal water contracts originally required the approval of Congress, but now under the bill they do not.

I am compelled to say for the record that my own decision to support this bill was founded upon my earnest hope and expectation that it will lead to prompt and serious consideration by the Water and Power Subcommittee of various worthy proposals of water project development and finance in California generally and in the central valley in particular. I am hopeful that the subcommittee will proceed in an expeditious manner to consider various proposals including, but of course not limited to, solutions to the problems of serious ground water overdraft in the poor quality water drainage from the San Joaquin Valley, the midvalley unit of the central valley project, a relocation of the headworks of the Contra Costa Canal, the Pleasant Valley service area addition, indexing or reauthorization of the San Luis unit to allow completion of distribution facilities at the Auburn Dam, and section 203(b) of the Reclamation Reform Act of 1982.

My support is also founded upon the expectation that the Bureau of Reclamation will expeditiously lift the 1978 Andrus moratorium on further Central Valley Project water supply contracts and will proceed to contract with Federal contractors in the central valley.

Furthermore, I look forward to a new spirit of cooperation within California between the delta and the central valley, between farmers and environmentalists, between northern and southern Californians; in a word, among all Californians.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3113 is in the nature of a genuine compromise and, as such, is imperfect. However, I urge my colleagues to support this measure as a reasonable effort for the moment and as a hopeful vehicle for the future.

Mr. Speaker, I should wish for a moment to engage in an exchange with my colleague, who I cannot but notice appears in a slightly different fashion today that in the past. It is a wonderful growth.

Mr. Speaker, a lot of people in the central valley have placed their good faith not only in the agreement, but in the people who have participated in the making of the agreement.

I should like to ask my colleague, who has worked very hard on this for sometime now, and my congratulations to him for the efforts that he and the staff have put in in bringing together a very difficult and very interesting compromise. I should like to ask the gentleman to make a comment or two, please, in expansion of his comments already made on his view of future water development in California and what the gentleman will do to encourage future water developments and what cooperation we in the central valley can expect.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I would say to my colleague from California that it clearly is the intent of all parties that have been involved in the drafting and negotiations of the COA and of this legislation that the expectations will be realized that we have speculated on for many years, and that is a coordinated operation of these two very large water projects, one operated by the State of California and the other operated by the Federal Government, that that coordinated operation will provide for an additional yield of water, will free up additional water at various times of the year and in various years, depending on the rainfall in our State and our ability to store that water; but in any event, the freeing up of that water, the exact yield is open to speculation, that that water would then be used to move along with the advancement of water development throughout the State of California, be that for central valley agricultural needs or for municipal water needs; but as the gentleman well knows, all these projects have been stymied over the past decade because of our inability to reach this kind of cooperation.

What the COA does is to provide the residents of the San Francisco and the bay and the delta region the assurance that when we go forward with the development of those projects, and I fully expect to go forward with the development of those projects, there is a threshold which we will now be able to measure, the projection of the bay and the delta region by. If those projects can go forward and we can continue to meet those standards, then I believe it is incumbent upon us to do that.

As the gentleman knows, he has some projects for consideration, other members of the committee have projects for consideration. We now for the first time have the ability to yield water from Federal projects to State projects, back to Federal contractors, so that we now also have the possibility of dramatically reducing the amount of money that we may have to spend and yet be able to put water in the land by the more efficient use of these projects. That is the long answer.

The short answer is that it is expected that the committee will now be free again to start to embark upon the consideration of the various projects that have come before the committee from time to time, but have been lacking in support because of the regional wars that have gone on over water development in the State of California.

I must say, as chairman of that subcommittee, I look forward once again looking for positive and progressive water development in our State.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Then we from the San Joaquin Valley can take it as an assurance that the chairman of the subcommittee will make it the subcommittee's business to expeditiously and thoroughly consider a whole host of projects that we need not decide at this moment the order of or the sequence of.

Mr. MILLER of California. As always, the chairman of the subcommittee will be fair and impartial and would not show any kind of regional bias on the consideration of those projects.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Well, I appreciate that and a lot of people also in the San Joaquin Valley appreciate that.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. COELHO], a very valuable member in the construction of this compromise legislation.

Mr. COELHO. Mr. Speaker, I just want to rise and to compliment the chairman of the subcommittee and the other members of the subcommittee for their work on this particular piece of legislation.

I think that as we look back on this particular bill, we will find that this is indeed a very historic piece of legislation and that it will break the log jam that has existed for 25 years in California and that we will be able to get on with the business at hand.

I want to compliment the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER] for his willingness to put up with all the interfights that take place over California water.

□ 1240

If my colleagues are intrigued with some of the divisions that take place here in the House or between parties and so forth, they would find it rather intriguing and interesting to participate in California water politics. The fact that the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER] was able to do this, hold hands and listen, and be tough at difficult times, but to be able to keep this thing going together is a credit to he and his staff, and I want to compliment him for it.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume to just thank my colleague from California [Mr. COELHO] for his remarks. I take them as a compliment from one who has mastered both the politics of the House and the politics of California water.

I would also like to pay tribute to one of our colleagues who could not be here today. That is the gentleman from California [Mr. RICHARD LEHMAN] from the central valley who again participated in every aspect of forging this compromise. Unfortunately, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEHMAN] could not be here. His father is very ill and he simply could not make the trip back for today's session. But I would like to submit for the RECORD his statement on this legislation and to clearly recognize the time and effort the gentleman poured into making this compromise work, again having the difficult chore of representing very, very diverse uses for the water within our State of California. I would like to acknowledge his participation and to thank him publicly for that.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume just for one concluding remark, expanding on what my colleague said. This is a historic piece of legislation, but historic only to the extent that those of us involved in water carry forth from this moment on. This legislation is very good for a particular part of California, but I take heart in the words of the chairman as he uttered them a few minutes ago that this will not be the end but the beginning of further water development in California. It is the further water development in California that will make this bill truly historic.

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join the many other Members of the California delegation who support H.R. 3113, legislation implementing the Coordinated Operations Agreement, and I would like to congratulate my colleague and good friend, Congressman GEORGE MILLER, chairman of the House Interior Water and Power Subcommittee for his role in fashioning this historic legislation.

This agreement will end 25 years of heated discussion and negotiations over the manner in which the Federal Government and State of California will operate their statewide water projects with respect to San Francisco Bay and Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta and Estuary water quality standards.

Not only will this agreement and legislation protect a vital and pivotal natural resource area by ensuring water quality standards, but it will also make available additional water which will benefit the water users in the entire State.

The legislation is historic because it represents a compromise not only between the State and Federal Governments on how to operate the two main water delivery systems in the State, but it reflects a compromise among all water factions in a State where water has historically been the most precious resource and cause of the most devisive and contentious debate. North and south, environmentalist and water developer, and urban and rural interests have all participated in shaping this particular agreement and all agree that this legislation represents the best compromise that could be achieved.

As with all compromises, the legislation is not perfect; however, failure to approve H.R. 3113 would only renew the debate and could cause irreparable damage to both the environment and water development in California. The legislation as drafted contains a number of important safeguards to ensure that the integrity of the Federal Government's interests are preserved without compromising the environmental concerns and water development needs of the State of California.

As one who is intimately aware of the water needs and problems of California and as one active in the center of the debate as a State legislator and now U.S. Representative, I am proud to be associated with this legislation and those who helped fashion it.

I urge my colleagues in the House to join the California delegation and support this important legislation.

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, it is important to recognize good things as they occur. The presentation of H.R. 3113 to allow and direct the Bureau of Reclamation to cooperate directly with the State of California on the mutual operations of two vast water projects in the same drainage basin represents the culmination of a peace process that began literally years ago. Congratulations are due to many people for this development, Federal officials in both the Carter and Reagan administrations, State officials in both the Brown and Deukmejian administrations, water developers and wildlife protectors from both northern and southern California, and Members of Congress from both the North and South and from both political parties.

There people represent many different interest, interests which inherently conflict, particularly over a commodity as passion-inducing as water in a State where it is the blood of the economy. Nonetheless, they came together to do something which common sense tells us is in the ultimate interest of all. To the very great extent California's future depends on the allocation of water, this bill lays out the principle upon which California's future will be determined.

We need to know what the rules for water sharing will be in times of drought and surplus, in the North and South, for wildlife, fisheries, cities, and farms, and for repulsion of salt water from the Pacific Ocean. Moreover, the rules must be fair. This Coordinated Operating Agreement, which establishes how much water will be required to maintain quality standards in the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta, meets both these difficult tests.

Negotiating the agreement was quite an achievement. Developing the political consensus to support it was another achievement. For the first our congratulations go to David Kennedy, current director of the California Department of Water Resources, and to his predecessor, Ron Robie. They also go to David Houston, current director of the Bureau's Mid-Pacific Region, and to his predecessors Mike Catino and Billy Martin. David Shuster at the Bureau and Larry Mullnix at the DWR were the principal staff people who hammered out the concepts and fit them together some years ago. They had support from many others whom I regret not being able to mention here.

None of their work have borne results had it not been for the skill and determination with which the Interior Subcommittee on Water and Power Resources pushed this measure through. Chairman GEORGE MILLER handled the volatile subject with the required blend of firmness and tact. California subcommittee members TONY COELHO, RICK LEHMAN, and CHIP PASHAYAN exercised a similar balance between representing the interests of their constituents and the interests of the State as a whole to their constituents. This is a bill where a sense of the common good had to prevail over the fears and needs of particular regions. For their good faith and for holding firm to their consensus the Water and Power Subcommittee deserves a lot of credit.

This bill is remarkable for what it does not contain, as well as for what it does. We all know that there remain many specific needs which we have agreed to put aside so that we could settle the basic question about the Bureau's authority and obligation to meet water standards in the Delta. As do other Members, I have my own set of priorities: Area of origin protections for the North in future allocations of water, an enlarged Oat Reservoir, and facilities to assure the Susiun Marsh adequate water to sustain it as a key portion of the Pacific flyway. I hope we can negotiate these needs between us in the same spirit of cooperation with which we agreed to this bill for the Coordinated Operating Agreement.

The administration has recently taken the position that the Suisun Marsh facilities must be authorized in this legislation as a condition for the President's signature. As one who began legislating on behalf of the Marsh as a State legislator in 1975, and who has legislated and sought appropriations for it in Congress since, and in whose district the Marsh lies, I deeply appreciate this interest. I intend on introducing a separate Suisun Marsh bill in the very near future, now that the State and Federal water agencies have agreed upon a final plan for the facilities construction and operation. I welcome the administration's support for the measure. I would of course have no objection should we add the Suisun Marsh authorization to the H.R. 3113.

However, I consider that I am part of the agreement between California water legislators to keep the Coordinated Operating Agreement free of additional issues, and I will adhere to that agreement. I do not think that Marsh legislation should be established as a condition for the President's signature either, partly because of the clean bill principle—to which the administration subscribed—and mostly because the Coordinated Operating Agreement is simply too important.

The immediate objective of this bill is to set standards for the Delta itself. My Delta constituents have long worried about their fate during the tumultuous statewide debates over water supplies. I share their relief that now our obligations to the Delta will be determined and statutorily protected. However, there are many benefits elsewhere to establishing the basic rules for the Delta. Among them is the nearly 1 million acre feet of water which the agreement establishes as firm yield for the Federal water contractors. I hope this new resource will be allocated soon and fairly to the many real needs around the State, and I hope that we can keep our appetites within the limits of the supplies. I have constituents who have been waiting many years for a water supply which was promised to them many years before that, the Yolo-Zamora water district. I have other constituents—the northern Sacramento area and the city of Folsom—which have been developing chronic groundwater quality and pumping cost problems over the past decades, and who are anxious for solutions to them. We anticipate that once the Bureau has its supplies assured it under the provisions of the COA that the it will find itself able to enter into new water supply contracts once again.

There are certain provisions in this bill which are particularly beneficial to my people. For instance, the Bureau is anxious to sell "surplus" water on an "interim" basis to areas in the State which are not now Federal customers. This plan—motivated by a real need for revenue—worries Federal water contractors in the North (and elsewhere) who do not have their contracted supplies assured yet. The contracts under which this interim water will be sold must come back to the Congress for approval.

There is a provision that Federal contractors do not have to finance that quantity of water required to meet the higher standards required under D-1485 than were required to meet the former Tracy standards. Many think that Federal contractors get their water too inexpensively, but it is true that their costs are rising and will continue to rise. The financial consideration in the bill for federal contractors is a genuine benefit to them.

Last, the bill acknowledges that the water cut backs will not be demanded in order to share Delta shortages where existing contracts do not already empower the Secretary of Interior to make such cutbacks. New contracts will provide for such cutbacks, of course, as they have in recent years, and it will be necessary for all contractors to share the burden of the Delta in the future. However, for those water districts who have relied for years on contracts without cutback provisions, this bill recognizes this agreement for the remaining life of the contracts.

These provisions were difficult for some of my colleagues to accept. It is typical of the spirit in which this whole effort has unfolded that they were accepted. We will all benefit if this attitude prevails, and if this bill has a quick and unchanged passage through the Senate. It will be an experience which all water legislators will find refreshing, and hopefully will teach us that harmony need not be so rare in the future.

Congratulations again to Chairman MILLER and the members of the Water and Power Subcommittee.

Mr. PASHAYAN. I have no further requests for time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3113.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 3113, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE HONORABLE JOSEPH P. ADDABBO, MEMBER OF CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Honorable JOSEPH P. ADDABBO:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, September 9, 1985.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to notify you, pursuant to Rule L (50) of the Rules of the House, that I have been served with a subpoena issued by the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. After consultation with the General Counsel to the Clerk of the House, I will inform you of the determinations required by the House Rule.

Sincerely yours,

JOSEPH P. ADDABBO,
Member of Congress.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE HONORABLE GUY V. MOLINARI, MEMBER OF CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Honorable GUY V. MOLINARI:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, September 9, 1985.

Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to notify you, pursuant to Rule L (50) of the Rules of the House, that I have been served with a subpoena issued by the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. After consultation with the General Counsel to the Clerk of the House, I will inform you of the determinations required by the House Rule.

Sincerely yours,

GUY V. MOLINARI,
Member of Congress.

THE GREAT ARKANSAS CLEANUP

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks, and include extraneous material.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, last weekend, thousands of citizens volunteered to continue the tradition of the great Arkansas cleanup. This is an annual event organized by Carl Garner, Resident Engineer, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, to clean up the parks, lakes, and waterways after a summer of fun.

The idea began 15 years ago when Carl Garner conceived the idea and organized the first effort. Since that time, thousands of tons of trash have been collected and hauled away. Now the Keep America Beautiful Committee is promoting the Garner idea as a goal to establish a public lands day for the Nation. One day each year would be set aside for citizens throughout our country to come together to clean up our lakes, rivers, and parks.

When this comes to pass, the next thing that remains to be done is to haul these mounds of trash to a nearby processing plant to be converted into ethanol fuel which will then he used as a fuel for our automobiles. Figures show that there is enough trash collected annually which, if converted into ethanol, would be equal to the energy from 5 billion barrels of oil and 3 trillion cubic feet of natural gas.

The following article provides additional information:

[From the Arkansas Gazette, Sept. 6, 1985]

STATEWIDE CLEANUP A TRADITION

(By Dorothy Cox)

One stormy Saturday in late September 1970, about 40 to 50 volunteers showed up at Greers Ferry Lake to clean up an accumulation of six years' worth of trash along 300 miles of shoreline.

Last year thousands of volunteers statewide cleaned up enough trash to fill 70 dump trucks. That was in addition to 15,000 pounds of aluminum cans.

This year, volunteers will be carrying on the tradition by cleaning up trash at 13 lakes and along the Arkansas River, and getting some free food and entertainment in the process.

The one-day event, called the "Great Arkansas Cleanup," is being sponsored by the Army Engineers, Coca-Cola and the Keep Arkansas Beautiful Association.

Carl Garner, a resident engineer with the Army Engineers at Greers Ferry, first thought of using volunteers when he saw a small article in the newspaper about volunteers who cleaned up the shoreline of a little lake in New York state.

The Army Engineers "had been operating Greers Ferry Lake since 1964 and there had been a lot of trash accumulated," Garner said. "We had a budget to clean up the park but not 300 miles of shoreline. Volunteers were what we needed."

It worked so well in 1970 and the years following, that the cleanup campaign was expanded to other Army Engineers-operated lakes seven years ago. The event has gained national recognition, including four first-place awards from Keep America Beautiful, Inc.

About 1,200 volunteers showed up at the Murray Park site last year and Rob Gardner, cleanup chairman for the Little Rock-North Little Rock area, said about 2,000 persons this year are expected to help clean up trash north and south of the Arkansas River.

He said that beneath the I-430 bridge traditionally is the worst area, but that volunteers also will be needed for stations at the Murray Lock and Dam parking lot on Rebsamen Park Road, Cook's Landing in North Little Rock, the Coast Guard Auxiliary post on the Little Rock side of the river, Burns Park, Riverfront Park, Riverview Park in North Little Rock and the area just west of the Main Street Bridge in North Little Rock.

Volunteers should go to any of the above reporting stations or to Murray Park, where they will be assigned a station. Volunteers will be assigned until all the trash is picked up in all the areas, Garner said.

It's recommended that volunteers bring gloves and wear protective clothing.

The Central Arkansas area cleanup will last from 9 to 11:30 a.m. and a free lunch, provided by McDonald's and Coca-Cola, will be served from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

The entertainment begins in earnest at 1 p.m. and continues into the afternoon.

Entertainers include "River Port Revue," a group of 100 professionals and nonprofessionals who will be presenting "old-time, show boat music," the Joel Ruminer Dancers, the Dixie Outlaws, Dealer's Choice, and Gazette editorial cartoonist George Fisher.

As they go through the lunch line, volunteers will be given tickets that will be put into a hopper and drawn for prizes. The grand prize is free air fare for two to any American Airlines destination in Mexico.

Other prizes include a color television set from Radio Shack Computer Center, two bicycles from Kmart, a gas barbecue grill from Wal-Mart, dinner for two at Coy's Restaurant and a $25 gift certificate from the Butcher Shop, to name a few.

"We don't want to take anyone away from the Little Rock cleanup" but anyone who will be in the Greers Ferry area Saturday is invited to that cleanup, which will be held from 8 a.m. to noon at nine commercial marinas in the area, Garner said.

A catfish fry and music show will be held at the Narrows Park from 2:30 to 6:30 p.m. with entertainment provided by such diverse entertainers as Jo Ann Castle, Jimmy Driftwood and a choir from Harding College. Hotair balloons will fly over during the festivities.

Other cleanup programs are being held at Lake Ouachita, Beaver Lake, Bull Shoals, Norfork Lake, Lake Greeson, DeGray Lake, Millwood Lake, Lake Gilham, De Queen Lake, Dierks Lake, Lake Dardanelle and Ozark Lake.

Anyone interested in joining in any of the cleanup campaigns across the state should call or go by the nearest Army Engineers resident office or call Garner at 378-6902 for more information.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent on September 4 and 5, 1985, while attending the Interparliamentary Union Conference in Ottawa, Canada. Had I been present, I would have voted "no" for the McCollum amendment, roll No. 291 and "aye" for roll No. 292, the national development investment bill.

On September 5, 1985, I would have voted "aye" for roll No. 293, approving the Journal of the previous day. I would have voted "aye" as well for roll No. 294, agreeing to House Resolution 250. Had I been present, I would have responded to the quorum call, roll No. 295, of course, and I would have voted "no" for roll No. 296.

STUDENT LOAN MATERNITY DEFERRAL ACT OF 1985

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WYDEN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce the Student Loan Maternity Deferral Act of 1985.

This legislation will make the Higher Education Act of 1965 more flexible for the special needs of new mothers. It amends the Higher Education Act to allow women, during maternity to have a 6-month period of deferment on repayment of Federal student financial aid loans.

Current law mandates that a student must begin repayment of Federal education loans 6 months after the end of a term of study, if the student will not be enrolled full time for the following term. In special hardship cases, such as injury or unemployment, an individual can re-enroll on a part-time basis and maintain their loan deferral as well as be eligible to receive Federal financial aid.

The Student Loan Maternity Deferral Act will make maternity one of these conditions. Hence, new mothers would be able to take a leave from school, return after 6 months, and be eligible to attend school part time for a period of 6 months so that they can spend more time with their newborn.

A recent case in Wisconsin points out an inequity in current law. A woman took a semester off to have a baby and when she returned to school, she wished to continue as a part-time student. She did not want to take on a full course load because she wanted to spend time with her newborn son.

She hoped her situation would allow her to fall into the hardship category so that her loan would be deferred for a period of time. However, under current law, the physical incapacitation of maternity does not qualify a woman for loan deferral under the hardship definition.

By not extending the hardship definition for maternity, the Federal Government is discouraging women from having children while they are in school. If they do have a child, they feel they must return immediately to full-time education. The alternative: begin payback on their Federal student loans.

The law was written to discourage students from unnecessarily prolonging their education and their financial debt to the Federal Government by taking too many leaves from full-time education. However, the law does not allow sufficient flexibility for the special circumstances of new mothers.

This change in the law is essential. It provides a new mother the flexibility needed to continue her education while spending important time with her child during the first months of life.

This change will not cost the Federal Government. It merely defers the student loan repayment for 6 months to allow the new mother additional time to balance her many financial and time commitments.

I ask my colleagues for their support for this simple and sensible adjustment in the law. Thank you.

H.R. 3249

A bill to permit, for not more than 6 months of maternity leave, the deferral of repayment of Federal insured, guaranteed, and direct student loans

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Student Loan Maternity Deferral Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. DEFINITION OF MATERNITY LEAVE.

Section 435 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(k) The term 'maternity leave' means a period during which a female borrower is pregnant, caring for a newborn child, or recovering from childbirth and during which such borrower is not carrying one-half or more of the full-time academic workload at an eligible institution and is not gainfully employed half-time or more.".

SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT OF MATERNITY LEAVE DEFERRALS FOR FEDERALLY INSURED STUDENT LOANS.

Section 427(a)(2)(C) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1077(a)(2)(C)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "or" at the end of clause (vii); and

(2) by striking out "full-time employment," in clause (viii) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "full-time employment; or (ix) not in excess of 6 months of maternity leave for female borrowers.".

SEC. 4. ESTABLISHMENT OF MATERNITY LEAVE DEFERRALS FOR FEDERALLY GUARANTEED STUDENT LOANS.

Section 428(b)(1)(M) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "or" at the end of clause (vii); and

(2) by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", or (ix) not in excess of 6 months of maternity leave for female borrowers.".

SEC. 5. ESTABLISHMENT OF MATERNITY LEAVE DEFERRALS FOR NATIONAL DIRECT STUDENT LOANS.

Section 464(c)(2)(A) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "or" at the end of clause (vi);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of clause (vii) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or";

(3) by inserting after clause (vii) the following new clause:

"(viii) is on maternity leave, as defined in section 435(k) of this Act."; and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The period during which repayment may be deferred by reason of clause (viii) shall not exceed 6 months.".

SEC. 6. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall apply with respect to any loan to cover the costs of instruction for periods of enrollment beginning on or after the date of enactment of this Act.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

(The following Member (at the request of Mrs. MEYERS of Kansas) to revise and extend her remarks and include extraneous material:)

Mrs. JOHNSON, for 60 minutes, on September 11.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. MILLER of California) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous matter:)

Mr. ANNUNZIO, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. WYDEN, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. GONZALEZ, for 60 minutes, today.

Mr. GAYDOS, for 30 minutes, on September 10.

Mr. DURBIN, for 60 minutes, on September 11.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, permission to revise and extend remarks was granted to:

(The following Members (at the request of Mrs. MEYERS of Kansas) and to include extraneous matter:)

Mr. FRENZEL.

Mr. PORTER.

Mr. CHAPPIE.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida.

Mr. KEMP.

Mr. GALLO.

Mr. DORNAN of California.

Mr. BONER of Tennessee in five instances.

Mr. MURTHA.

Mr. WALGREN.

Mr. GARCIA.

Ms. KAPTUR.

Mr. FUQUA in five instances.

Mr. FUSTER.

Mr. KASTENMEIER.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 47 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, September 10, 1985, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1935. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture for Science and Education, transmitting the third progress report on the human nutrition research and information management [HNRIM) system; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1936. A letter from the Director, Office of Management and Budget, transmitting a cumulative report on rescissions and deferrals of budget authority, pursuant to 2 U.S.C. 685(e) (H. Doc. No. 99-104); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1937. A letter from the Director, Federal Emergency Management Agency, transmitting a report on the administration of the Strategic and Critical Materials Stockpiling Act for October 1984 through March 1985, pursuant to the act of June 7, 1939, chapter 190, section 11(a) (93 Stat. 324; 95 Stat. 382); Executive Order 12155, section 1-105; to the Committee on Armed Services.

1938. A letter from the Auditor, District of Columbia, transmitting a report entitled "Review of University Supported Travel by UDC President's Spouse," pursuant to Public Law 93-198, section 455(d); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

1939. A letter from the Secretary of Education, transmitting final regulations for the Handicapped Special Studies Program, pursuant to GEPA, section 431(d)(1) (88 Stat. 567; 90 Stat. 2231; 95 Stat. 453); to the Committee on Education and Labor.

1940. A letter from the Chairman, Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, transmitting a report on coordination of Federal equal employment opportunity activities, pursuant to Public Law 88-352, section 715 (86 Stat. 111); Executive Order 12067, section 1-401; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

1941. A letter from the Secretary of Energy, transmitting notification of further delay in submission of the national energy policy plan, pursuant to 42 U.S.C. 7321 (b), (c); to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

1942. A letter from the Acting Assistant Attorney General, transmitting the Department's views on the Railroad Safety Improvement Act (H.R. 2372); to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

SENATE—Monday, September 9, 1985

The Senate met at 12 noon and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it; except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain.—Psalm 127:1.

Blessed is every one that feareth the Lord; that walketh in his ways.—Psalm 128:1.

God of peace and rest, thank Thee for a profitable recess—for work accomplished, for safe travel, for time with families, for rest, relaxation, recreation, and renewal. May the Senate enjoy Thy strength and wisdom in the pressing days ahead.

Gracious Father in Heaven, impress upon the Senators their accountability to Thee as they enter these final days of the 1st session of the 99th Congress. Help them to give their very finest leadership at this desperately critical time for our Nation. Save them from pretention and behavior that is simply cosmetic—which not only will not address the crises, but actually compound them. Give the Senators courage to be committed to truth and justice and the willingness to sacrifice purely political aims for the sake of the people. For Thy glory, we pray. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished majority leader is recognized.

OPENING REMARKS OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Chaplain for his very timely remarks. I hope that we can follow the advice in the coming weeks and months.

THE MISSION TO MOSCOW

Second, I welcome all of my colleagues back and particularly commend the distinguished minority leader, Senator BYRD, and others who have just returned from a very constructive visit ot the Soviet Union. I wait with interest the report from the distinguished minority leader, the President pro tempore, and others, who were on that mission to Moscow.

SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the Executive order issued this morning by the President concerning South Africa, a fact sheet which outlines in a briefer way, a succint way, the President's actions; also a fact sheet on the difference between the bill, the so-called conference report that is pending, and the President's Executive order along with a letter that Senator LUGAR received from the President concerning South Africa, the apartheid policies in South Africa, and the actions that the President has taken this morning.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, DC, September 9, 1985.

Hon. RICHARD G. LUGAR,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR DICK: I am writing to you today to ask for your support on an issue that has touched some of the most sensitive nerves in our body politic but which I feel strongly need not and must not divide us. That issue is South Africa. All of us agree that a system that deprives 73 percent of that country's population of basic political and human rights on the basis of race is an affront to our national values. We all know that such a system is also a threat to the long-term stability of a region that is important to our national interests. The question before us is how we best exercise the influence we have to work for a more just and stable order—without adding fuel to the fire and providing opportunities for greater Soviet influence.

To this end, I am issuing an Executive Order which is consistent with these objectives and provides us with a platform from which we can move forward together. The Executive Order incorporates many of the ideas that have come out of the Congress to disassociate ourselves from the system of apartheid. It also adopts the positive provisions of the legislation now before the Senate which will allow the United States to step up its help for the victims of that system. The Executive Order will allow us to execute these proposals in a responsible and effective manner. It is designed to signal the strong feelings all Americans share about apartheid, but it is clearly aimed against the machinery of apartheid, not the victims of that system.

If we all join together behind a common program, we can have so much more influence for good. Let us go forward with a clear vision and an open heart, working for justice, brotherhood and peace.

Sincerely

RONALD REAGAN.

EXECUTIVE ORDER: PROHIBITING TRADE AND CERTAIN OTHER TRANSACTIONS INVOLVING SOUTH AFRICA

By the authority vested in me as President by the Constitution and laws of the United States of America, including the International Emergency Economic Powers Act (50 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.), the National Emergencies Act (50 U.S.C. 1601 et seq.), the Foreign Assistance Act (22 U.S.C. 2151 et seq.), the United Nations Participation Act (22 U.S.C. 287), the Arms Export Control Act (22 U.S.C. 2751 et seq.), the Export Administration Act (50 U.S.C. 2401 et seq.), the Atomic Energy Act (42 U.S.C. 2011 et seq.), the Foreign Service Act (22 U.S.C. 3901 et seq.), the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App. I), Section 301 of Title 3 of the United States Code, and considering the measures which the United Nations Security Council has decided on or recommended in Security Council Resolutions No. 418 of November 4, 1977, No. 558 of December 13, 1984, and No. 569 of July 26, 1985, and considering that the policy and practice of apartheid are repugnant to the moral and political values of democratic and free societies and run counter to United States policies to promote democratic governments throughout the world and respect for human rights, and the policy of the United States to influence peaceful change in that country, as well as the threat posed to United States interests by recent events in South Africa.

I, Ronald Reagan, President of the United States of America, find that the policies and actions of the Government of South Africa constitute an unusual and extraordinary threat to the foreign policy and economy of the United States and hereby declare a national emergency to deal with that threat.

SECTION 1. Except as otherwise provided in this section, the following transactions are prohibited effective October 11, 1985:

(a) The making or approval of any loans by financial institutions in the United States to the Government of South Africa or to entities owned or controlled by that Government. This prohibition shall enter into force on November 11, 1985. It shall not apply to (i) any loan or extension of credit for any educational, housing, or health facility which is available to all persons on a nondiscriminatory basis and which is located in a geographic area accessible to all population groups without any legal or administrative restriction; or (ii) any loan or extension of credit for which an agreement is entered into before the date of this Order.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out this subsection. The initial rules and regulations shall be issued within sixty days. The Secretary of the Treasury may, in consultation with the Secretary of State, permit exceptions to this prohibition only if the Secretary of the Treasury determines that the loan or extension of credit will improve the welfare or expand the economic opportunities of persons in South Africa disadvantaged by the apartheid system, provided that no exception may be made for any apartheid enforcing entity.

(b) All exports of computers, computer software, or goods or technology intended to service computers to or for use by any of the following entities of the Government of South Africa:

(1) The military;

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by the Member on the floor.

(2) The police;
(3) The prison system;
(4) The national security agencies;
(5) ARMSCOR and its subsidiaries or the weapons research activities of the Council for Scientific and Industrial Research;
(6) The administering authorities for the black passbook and similar controls;
(7) Any apartheid enforcing agency;
(8) Any local or regional government or "homeland" entity which performs any function of any entity described in paragraphs (1) through (7).

The Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out this subsection and to implement a system of end use verification to ensure that any computers exported directly or indirectly to South Africa will not be used by any entity set forth in this subsection.

(c)(1) Issuance of any license for the export to South Africa of goods or technology which are to be used in a nuclear production or utilization facility, or which, in the judgment of the Secretary of State, are likely to be diverted for use in such a facility; any authorization to engage, directly or indirectly, in the production of any special nuclear material in South Africa; any license for the export to South Africa of component parts or other items or substances especially relevant from the standpoint of export control because of their significance for nuclear explosive purposes; and any approval of retransfers to South Africa of any goods, technology, special nuclear material, components, items or substances described in this section. The Secretaries of State, Energy, Commerce, and Treasury are hereby authorized to take such actions as may be necessary to carry out this subsection.

(2) Nothing in this section shall preclude assistance for International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards or IAEA programs generally available to its member states, or for technical programs for the purpose of reducing proliferation risks, such as for reducing the use of highly enriched uranium and activities envisaged by section 223 of the Nuclear Waste Policy Act (42 U.S.C. 10101) or for exports which the Secretary of State determines are necessary for humanitarian reasons to protect the public health and safety.

(d) The import into the United States of any arms, ammunition, or military vehicles produced in South Africa or of any manufacturing data for such articles. The Secretaries of State, Treasury, and Defense are hereby authorized to take such actions as may be necessary to carry out this subsection.

SEC. 2. (a) The majority of United States firms in South Africa have voluntarily adhered to fair labor principles which have benefited those in South Africa who have been disadvantaged by the apartheid system. It is the policy of the United States to encourage strongly all United States firms in South Africa to follow this commendable example.

(b) Accordingly, no department or agency of the United States may intercede after December 31, 1985, with any foreign government regarding the export marketing activity in any country of any national of the United States employing more than 25 individuals in South Africa who does not adhere to the principles stated in subsection (c) with respect to that national's operations in South Africa. The Secretary of State shall promulgate regulations to further define the employers that will be subject to the requirements of this subsection and procedures to ensure that such nationals may register that they have adhered to the principles.

(c) The principles referred to in subsection (b) are as follows:
(1) Desegregating the races in each employment facility;
(2) Providing equal employment opportunity for all employees without regard to race or ethnic origin;
(3) Assuring that the pay system is applied to all employees without regard to race or ethnic origin;
(4) Establishing a minimum wage and salary structure based on the appropriate local minimum economic level which takes into account the needs of employees and their families;
(5) Increasing by appropriate means, the number of persons in managerial, supervisory, administrative, clerical, and technical jobs who are disadvantaged by the apartheid system for the purpose of significantly increasing their representation in such jobs;
(6) Taking reasonable steps to improve the quality of employees' lives outside the work environment with respect to housing, transportation, schooling, recreation, and health;
(7) Implementing fair labor practices by recognizing the right of all employees, regardless of racial or other distinction, to self-organization and to form, join, or assist labor organizations, freely and without penalty or reprisal, and recognizing the right to refrain from any such activity.

(d) United States nationals referred to in subsection (b) are encouraged to take reasonable measures to extend the scope of their influence on activities outside the workplace, by measures such as supporting the right of all businesses, regardless of the racial character of their owners or employees, to locate in urban areas, by influencing other companies in South Africa to follow the standards specified in subsection (c) and by supporting the freedom of mobility of all workers, regardless of race, to seek employment opportunities wherever they exist, and by making provision for adequate housing for families of employees within the proximity of the employee's place of work.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of State and the head of any other department or agency of the United States carrying out activities in South Africa shall promptly take, to the extent permitted by law, the necessary steps to ensure that the labor practices described in section (2)(c) are applied to their South African employees.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of State and the head of any other department or agency of the United States carrying out activities in South Africa shall, to the maximum extent practicable and to the extent permitted by law, in procuring goods or services in South Africa, make affirmative efforts to assist business enterprises having more than 50 percent beneficial ownership by persons in South Africa disadvantaged by the apartheid system.

SEC. 5. (a) The Secretary of State and the United States Trade Representative are directed to consult with other parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs with a view toward adopting a prohibition on the import of Krugerrands.

(b) The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to conduct a study to be completed within sixty days regarding the feasibility of minting and issuing gold coins with a view toward expeditiously seeking legislative authority to accomplish the goal of issuing such coins.

SEC. 6. In carrying out their respective functions and responsibilities under this Order, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Commerce shall consult with the Secretary of State. Each such Secretary shall consult, as appropriate, with other government agencies and private persons.

SEC. 7. The Secretary of State shall establish, pursuant to appropriate legal authority, an Advisory Committee on South Africa to provide recommendations on measures to encourage peaceful change in South Africa. The Advisory Committee shall provide its initial report within twelve months.

SEC. 8. The Secretary of State is directed to take the steps necessary pursuant to the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 and related legislation to (a) increase the amount of internal scholarships provided to South Africans disadvantaged by the apartheid system up to $8 million from funds made available for Fiscal Year 1986, and (b) increase the amount allocated for South Africa from funds made available for Fiscal Year 1986 in the Human Rights Fund up to $1.5 million. At least one-third of the latter amount shall be used for legal assistance for South Africans. Appropriate increases in the amounts made available for these purposes will be considered in future fiscal years.

SEC. 9. This order is intended to express and implement the foreign policy of the United States. It is not intended to create any right or benefit, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law by a party against the United States, its agencies, its officers, or any person.

FACT SHEET—PRESIDENT'S DECISION ON SOUTH AFRICA MEASURES

President sending a strong signal to South African Government: apartheid must go; time is now for bold action; actions assert his strong leadership on this issue.

U.S. policy has long included measures to disassociate ourselves from apartheid.

Actions are consistent with President's intent to maintain active presence and influence of American companies, churches, teachers, diplomats, in pushing for change in South Africa.

President shares concerns of American people about racism; his action designed to speak for entire Nation and pull American people together on this important issue.

President's measures not designed to damage South African economy and hurt those we are trying to help; targeted on specific elements of government apparatus.

President wants to work wtih Congress, on a bipartisan basis, to achieve positive and productive changes in the policies of the South African Government.

E.O. commits U.S. to maintain strong presence in South Africa, supports fair employment practices of U.S. companies, increases USG funds for scholarships and human rights activities.

E.O. prohibits U.S. banks lending to South African Government, except loans which would promote welfare of all South Africans.

E.O. bans all computer exports to military, police, and other apartheid-enforcing agencies.

E.O. prohibits U.S. nuclear exports to South Africa except for items needed for health and safety or for IAEA safeguard programs.

E.O. requires firms to adhere to principles similar to voluntary Sullivan program; goal is to maintain voluntarism, but those who do not adhere will be denied USG trade assistance.

E.O. requires USG to consult with GATT partners on Krugerrand ban.

E.O. requires the Secretary of Treasury to study feasibility of minting and issuing gold coins.

E.O. directs the Secretary of State to establish advisory committee of distinguished Americans to provide recommendations on measures to encourage peaceful change in South Africa.

E.O. will implement U.N. resolution, which U.S. supported, banning imports of South African arms.

DIFFERENCES BETWEEN BILL AND E.O.

BANK LOANS

E.O. eliminates an excessive extraterritorial application of U.S. law. Applies to making or approving loans to the SAG by financial institutions in U.S. It prohibits U.S. banks from approving in any way loans to the SAG by any foreign bank or affiliate.

The blanket exceptions (housing, education, health) are identical to those in the bill.

The bill's bank loan provisions would enter into force in 90 days; the E.O.'s in 60.

Treasury and State would be authorized under the E.O. to authorize a loan otherwise prohibited by it which would clearly benefit the victims of apartheid.

COMPUTERS

Essentially the same. The E.O. removes some of the ambiguities in the bill.

NUCLEAR

The E.O. incorporates the bill's prohibition. However, the E.O. includes a reasonable exception for IAEA safeguards and exports which the Secretary of State determines to be necessary for humanitarian reasons for reasons of public health and safety.

KRUGERRANDS

The bill would require an immediate ban on Krugerrand imports. The E.O. requires the Secretary of State and the STR to complete the measures needed pursuant to the GATT prior to a ban.

ARMS

The bill does not contain a provision on arms imports. The E.O. simply implements a Security Council decision of last December.

SCHOLARSHIPS AND HUMAN RIGHTS

Essentially the same. Both contemplate up to $8 million for internal scholarships in FY 86 for those disadvantaged by apartheid and $1.5 million for the Human Rights Fund. Implementing the E.O. will require certain notices to Congress.

DEFINITIONS

The bill contains certain definitions. Most definitions for purposes of the E.O. will be in the Federal agency regulations that will implement the E.O.

EXIM

The bill authorizes certain acts involving South Africa now prohibited by law. The E.O. does not contain such a provision, since an E.O. does not contain such a provision, since an E.O. cannot change a statute.

PROCUREMENT

Both the E.O. and the bill encourage U.S. agencies in South Africa to meet their local needs by procuring goods to the extent practicable from firms of those disadvantaged by the apartheid system.

LABOR PRACTICES

The bill requires U.S. firms in South Africa employing at least 25 persons to implement the Sullivan principles. If they do not, the U.S. Government will not intercede on their behalf with regard to their export marketing activities anywhere in the world. The State Department would also, in effect, be required to establish a new bureaucratic body to regulate the labor practices of such firms.

The E.O. requires U.S firms to adhere to the same fair labor principles stated in the bill. Firms can do so by joining the Sullivan Code and its implementing procedures.

The penalty prescribed for not adhering to the E.O. is the same as that contained in the bill

The main difference is that the bill would in effect end the excellent and efficient system currently in place for monitoring compliance with the Sullivan Code. The E.O. eliminates the need to create a cumbersome new bureaucracy.

STATEMENT OF LABOR PROVISIONS

The E.O. is shorter. It states the actual principles and does not specifically include all the examples provided in the bill. There is no difference in substance.

EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES OF THE U.S. EMBASSY IN SOUTH AFRICA

The E.O. and the bill are essentially the same.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE

The bill's advisory committee deals with labor matters. The E.O.'s advisory committee has a far broader mandate to make recommendations on how to influence peaceful change in South Africa.

FUTURE SANCTIONS

The bill contemplates possible future sanctions based on a Presidential determination on progress in South Africa and a subsequent act of Congress. The E.O. does not have a specific provision on this, but does not rule out this possibility.

REPORTS

The bill contains a requirement for several reports to the Congress (e.g., on progress in South Africa, on how each U.S. firm implements Sullivan). The E.O. does not contain such reporting requirements.

AMENDMENTS TERMINATION

The bill has no real waiver authority, and any change to its terms or terminating the act requires an act of Congress. This is also the case with respect to the so-called waiver provision on Krugerrands. The E.O. can be amended or terminated by the President at any time.

(Mr. COCHRAN assumed the chair.)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the President states in the last paragraph of his letter: "If we all join together behind a common program, we can have so much more influence for good. Let us go forward with a clear vision and an open heart working for justice, brotherhood, and peace."

Mr. President, I make the same point, that we have an opportunity now in Congress, Republicans and Democrats alike, to join—in fact, the President has joined with us. It seems to me that what we should do now is to postpone any final action on the conference report, go forward together, Congress and the President, send the strongest possible signal to the South African Government, which this would do. Then, if for some reason, and I do not know of any, but if for some reason some provisions of the Executive order are not properly complied with or not adhered to as Members of Congress think they should have been, then the conference report would still be available, and it could still be acted upon. I also indicate the only real difference between the Executive order and the conference report is the fact that there are no sanctions in the Executive order but they are not percluded, and the sanctions in the conference report do not take effect until January 1987.

So for all practical purposes, anything that would have taken effect immediately or in the near future is in the Executive order with the exception of the Krugerrand issue, and on that issue the President, as he indicates in his order, will address the other GATT countries before taking that action.

I commend the President for his willingness to move in this direction, and I commend my colleagues, all my colleagues who have been interested in this issue. I hope that we can work out a bipartisan agreement, if not sometime today, then later and that at this time we simply postpone further action on the conference report until some time next year, March, April, some reasonable time in the future.

Mr. President, again I indicate to my colleagues that we will probably have a very busy September and October, possibly November, and someone even indicated December, but I hope to have an opportunity to meet this week with the distinguished Speaker, Congressman O'NEILL; the distinguished minority leader, Senator BYRD; along with the House Republican leader, Congressman MICHEL, so that we can advise our colleagues as clearly as possible when we would adjourn sine die.

I will indicate at a later time our proposed schedule during the Jewish holidays. We will not have votes prior to 6 p.m., and then there is likely to be a proposed recess that would come sometime, I think from the 10th to the 15th of October.

Mr. President, today we will have morning business until 1 p.m., a special order in favor of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] for not to exceed 15 minutes, and at the hour of 1 p.m. there will be 3 hours, or there are proposed to be 3 hours of debate on the antiapartheid conference report, to be equally divided, and then at 4 p.m. today, there is scheduled to be a vote on cloture.

It would be my hope that we might be able to alter the debate period because there will be a Republcan conference at 2 p.m. in S. 207 to discuss the antiapartheid conference report, and hopefully we could reach some agreement where we would not have any debate on the antiapartheid bill until that conference is completed.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Democratic leader is recognized.

THE MISSION TO MOSCOW

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader for his references to the trip which I and other Senators on both sides of the aisle made to Moscow during the break. I am delighted that the distinguished President pro tempore, Mr. THURMOND, and the distinguished Senator from Virginia, Mr. WARNER, were also on that trip. It was a very hard-working trip. Our time with Mr. Gorbachev was 3 hours and 35 minutes. We feel that we accomplished some things. We will be going down to see the President at the White House tomorrow at 3 p.m. The President had indicated before we left that he would like to have a report on our return and we will be prepared to talk with the President tomorrow afternoon. We look forward to visiting with him.

THE MAJORITY LEADER'S TRIP TO CHINA

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I again thank the distinguished majority leader. I am happy that he was able to visit the People's Republic of China. I have been there on two previous occasions. I know that it takes a lot of time and it is a very important thing that he has done. I think it is well that we keep open these windows to the People's Republic of China. Mr. Deng and others there have always been gracious to American's and particularly to elected public officials, whether they are in the Federal Government or in the State governments. I think that such visits are enlightening and helpful, particularly to Members of this body, a body that has certain foreign relations responsibilities.

So I compliment the distinguished majority leader and I say that I am happy that he returns looking as though he has had some rest and has been rejuvenated, both in spirit and in physical strength. I will be looking forward to talking with him further about this visit to the People's Republic. It is a country that just cannot be overlooked, a country that has a population of a billion people or perhaps more. It is not a country that one can just put out of view.

It is impossible to forget or to overlook—and very unwise to attempt to do so—the fact that the People's Republic of China consists of a billion people; some say 1.2 billion. It is only at the peril of having political glaucoma to fail to recognize that there is this country with a fourth of the world's population which cannot be hidden. It cannot be brushed off the international chessboard, whether we are concerned with trade or the economy or national defense or whatever. It is an increasingly important country.

Mr. Nixon opened up the doors for a normalization with that country. I am glad that Mr. Nixon did that. He is probably the only individual who could have done it.

It is good we do whatever we can to press forward with that normalization. We cannot be blind to all of the potential that this involves. It is in the best interests of our country that we better our relations and that we cooperate where we can with the People's Republic. Vice Premier Den has shown his inclination time and time again.

He visited here on Capitol Hill about 5 or 6 years ago. He spoke in the Russell Building, I believe. He visited my office at that time when I was majority leader.

More and more Members of the Senate ought to go to China, to talk with Chinese Government officials. It can create goodwill toward this country on the part of the People's Republic.

So I commend the majority leader again, express gratitude that he has been able to make this trip—and make it safely back home. I look forward to hearing more about what he has to say about China as a result of the visit.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me thank the distinguished minority leader.

We will be filing a report, hopefully tomorrow, on our trip. Again, I know that some times Members of Congress are criticized for going anywhere outside the United States, or anywhere in the United States by some. But it seems to me, as the distinguished minority leader knows, these are working trips. I think we can count about 43 meetings in a 14-day period. But it was worthwhile. We are excited about it.

I share the view expressed by the distinguished minority leader that it is not only worth our time and effort, but I think it is worth whatever costs might be involved to the American taxpayer. We deal with these problems affecting the Soviet Union, the People's Republic of China, and you have just discussed trade. We visited Korea, Japan, the Republic of China, and Hong Kong. We have big trade deficits with our neighbors in the Far East that were certainly the subject of many of our meetings.

So it seems to me it is a good use of Members' time. I agree with the distinguished minority leader that more Members on both sides should be encouraged, notwithstanding some little criticism, to make this extra effort. It is not a vacation. It is certainly an experience.

SCHEDULE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, as I indicated earlier, and I have only recently delivered the memo to the distinguished minority leader's office, I have proposed that on the 16th and the 25th of September there be no votes until after 6 p.m. for Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur—the 2 Jewish holidays which occur in September. And I have also proposed that from close of business on October 10 until Tuesday, October 15, the Senate would be in recess, and probably there would not be any votes on the 15th because there will be a number of Members on both sides, I understand, involved in a very important conference in San Francisco, among other things.

Mr. President, I also delivered to the distinguished minority leader personally a first cut at matters that I think we must complete before sine die adjournment. There are other items that committee chairmen have called to my attention. I am certain that the distinguished minority leader will also have some priorities. My list was simply one way to start.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished majority leader. I assume from what the distinguished majority leader has said that it is somewhat likely that the Congress will be in session past the middle of October. Otherwise, the distinguished majority leader would not be laying out a possible recess. Of course, the majority leader is in a position where he has to do this because he cannot foresee what is going to happen with respect to the tax bill.

I welcome the opportunity to visit with the Speaker, and the minority leadership on the other side of the Capitol, as the distinguished majority leader has said to me privately, and just now publicly.

I would assume that whether the Congress is in beyond November 1, will largely be decided by what progress the House makes in getting the tax bill over to the Senate, and when.

Am I correct in that assumption?

Mr. DOLE. That is correct. As to the House bill, my latest information is that they are going to move very quickly on the tax bill in the next couple of weeks—at least have it drafted by then.

I am not certain when it will pass the House. But I am advised by the chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator PACKWOOD, that his deadline for action this year—at least unofficially the deadline is that at a minimum a bill would arrive here not later than October 15 because he may need additional hearings. Once it arrives, it would still likely take considerable time.

So, yes, I think whether it is Thanksgiving or Christmas will depend on the rate of progress on tax reform.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

THE TRADE CRISIS: THE COST IS TOO HIGH

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I call attention to the President's radio address on Saturday, September 7. He made a major statement on trade policy.

After 5 years of burgeoning trade deficits that have left millions of Americans permanently out of work or underemployed; after at least three nonpartisan reports to the President, several major studies by the Congress—including an excellent project by Senate Democrats—and countless private and university-conducted studies; after nearly every House and Senate leader, both Democrat and Republican, has sharply criticized the inaction, this administration has decided that there is a serious problem in America's trade relations. I have spoken to the Senate well over a dozen times; I have introduced several pieces of broad-ranging legislation; I have supported serious legislative proposals offered by my colleagues on both sides of the aisle; and I have established a Senate Democratic Working Group on Trade Policy. That working group is chaired by the distinguished Senator from Texas, Mr. BENTSEN. I have done these things with a view to filling the void that has thus far existed in this administration in the area of trade.

After 5 years of abdication in the face of the growing international challenge, and 5 years of a big deficit, big dollar policy that shows a total disregard for the fate of American exports and export-related jobs, the administration has announced that it will use the authority it has always had from Congress to take action on a narrow group of products to a few select countries. This decision comes just days after the administration's decision to deny any relief to the American footwear industry, despite the International Trade Commission's finding that the footwear industry deserves such relief because it is suffering serious harm as the result of import penetration that has captured 70 percent of the American market. In a year when the administration's own economists predict that America's trade shortfall will exceed $150 billion, is this the appropriate response? Can we look after a few products in a few countries and call that a trade policy?

In their preliminary report, Senate Democrats called for a comprehensive trade strategy to assure American leadership in the world marketplace and a growing export sector that will provide jobs and support global trade expansion. The President's own Commission on Industrial Competitiveness called for an aggressive and comprehensive approach to the global competition and urged that "The President should pursue initiatives to make trade a permanent national priority." Certainly the steps the President outlined in his Saturday radio statement offer no broad-ranging trade policy. At most, they are an effort to buy time while the administration struggles with the question of how to deal with the growing congressional discontent over its lack of action on trade policy.

We have to be honest with ourselves. The time for a halting symbolic approach to trade policy is over. If the administration is unwilling or unable to fashion a comprehensive trade policy, then Congress is prepared to reassert its constitutional role as the body of Government charged with "authority to regulate Commerce with foreign Nations and among the several states." The administration cannot hope to buy time at this late hour, because we know that such time will be purchased with more American jobs, and further decline in our competitiveness. We have seen what 5 years of inaction have cost, and no one who has thought about the issue is prepared to buy time when the currency is our future. Senate Democrats are on record as being committed to a serious trade strategy, and I invite my Republican colleagues to join with us in our efforts to keep America competitive.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, do I have any time remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. DOLE. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, would it be in order to ask unanimous consent for an additional 5 minutes? If so, I so ask unanimous consent for 5 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have 4 minutes remaining. I yield to the majority leader for his further use.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I yield that 4 minutes to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRIP TO THE SOVIET UNION

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I had the pleasure of going on the trip to the Soviet Union which was headed by the distinguished Democratic leader, Senator BYRD. I think it was a very helpful trip. We will be making a report to the Congress within the next few days. I wish to commend the Democratic leader, Mr. BYRD, for the excellent leadership he provided on that trip. I think that some good can come out of it. I feel we laid some groundwork for the summit meeting that is to be attended by our President, Mr. Ronald Reagan, and Mr. Gorbachev, the Soviet leader, in November.

THE GARCIA DECISION

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, during the recess, I was informed by the South Carolina Division of Human Resource Management that the financial impact of the recent U.S. Supreme Court decision in Garcia versus San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority will exceed $6 million per year to the State government of South Carolina.

I take this opportunity to once again emphasize that Garcia has set the stage for a devastating economic impact on State and local governments. Moreover, that decision is contrary to the principles of federalism set forth in the 10th amendment to our Constitution.

S. 1434 and S. 1570 would exempt State and local governments from the maximum hours provision of the Fair Labor Standards Act. As an original cosponsor of both bills, I urge my colleagues to join Senator NICKLES, Senator WILSON, and me in our efforts to achieve speedy passage of these critically important legislative initiatives.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following editorials from the State of Columbia, South Carolina, dated July 30, 1985, the News and Courier of Charleston, SC, dated August 1, 1985, and the Gaffney Ledger of Gaffney, SC, dated August 2, 1985, be printed in the RECORD as further evidence of the necessity of these legislative initiatives.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"SENATE BILL ADDRESSES OVERTIME PAY PROBLEM"

The impact of the U.S. Supreme Court's Feb. 19 ruling requiring state and local governments to pay overtime to their employees is now being felt.

Officials of these lower-level governments have been forced to budget additional amounts to handle the extra personnel costs. Some predict that there will be a reduction of essential services, such as police, fire, and ambulance, in some areas.

On the other hand, many government employees are clearly pleased over the prospect of additional pay. Chief J.P. "Pete" Strom of the State Law Enforcement Division, noting that police officers have always worked long hours in emergencies without extra pay, thinks the ruling is overdue.

Not content with getting overtime pay at the beginning of the fiscal year, several Calhoun County deputies and a host of North Charleston firemen filed suit to obtain retroactive overtime back to April 15, the effective date of the ruling.

Regardless of what one thinks about the desirability of making state and local governments comply with the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA), it is certain that the Supreme Court's 5-4 decision in Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority raised a serious constitutional question.

In it, the court's thin majority reversed its own eight-year-old ruling in National League of Cities v. Usery, which overturned a 1966 congressional act that, relying on the Commerce Clause of the Constitution, extended for the first time FLSA minimum wage and overtime standards to state and local governments.

The National League of Cities case was bottomed on the Tenth Amendment, which established the principle of federalism by reserving to the states all power to make decisions on employees pay.

Now the court has done an about-face. Justice Harry Blackmun, writing for the majority, said the states are amply protected by their ability to elect the President and members of Congress. "The political process ensures that laws that unduly burden the states will not be promulgated," he said.

Justice Lewis Powell, speaking for the four-person minority, questioned how "the states' role in the electoral process guarantees" Congress "will not infringe on residual state sovereignty." He also lamented that the majority opinion "effectively reduces that Tenth Amendment to meaningless rhetoric when Congress acts pursuant to the Commerce Clause."

Justice Powell was on the mark with both assertions, but he and his like-minded colleagues did not prevail. Garcia stands as the law of the land and must be complied with as long as it stands.

But an effort is underway in the U.S. Senate to overturn the Garcia decision. California's Pete Wilson and South Carolina's Strom Thurmond have introduced legislation to exempt state and local govenments from the FLSA and permit, among other things, compensatory time in lieu of overtime pay.

Senator Thurmond noted the decision's "devastating economic impact" on local governments already operating on tight budget, due in part to a reduction of federal aid. He said the ruling might force them to cut other important programs or reduce manpower in vital public safety areas. The bill, he said, "would allow governments to better manage their budgets while giving employees the benefits of "comp time."

If the ruling stands, it will fall particularly hard on smaller units of government that doen't have enough employees to easily adjust work schedules. But it will also hurt bigger units in such ways as interfering with lengthy police investigations. Even voluntary extra work related to the job is not permitted without overtime.

The states, counties and cities need more flexibility than the FLSA permits, particulary in the public safety fields. Congress should give it to them.

[From the News & Courier (Charleston, SC), Aug. 1, 1985]

PAY RULE NOT A FEDERAL ISSUE

Mayor John Bourne's plan to shift the hours and pay schedules of North Charleston's firefighters in response to a recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling went into effect this week. Before debating the merits, or lack thereof, of the plan, the motivating factor—the Supreme Court ruling—was itself unconstitutional.

Historically, federal wage and labor laws have never applied to state and local governments. This is as it should be under the guarantees of the 10th Amendment, which reads: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." That amendment was the basis for a 1976 Supreme Court decision that exempted states and their political subdivisions from the federal minimum wage law.

But last February, in Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, the Supreme Court, on a 5-4 majority vote, reversed that earlier decision and decreed that state and local governments were, in fact, subject to federal wage laws. By so ruling, the Court invalidated the 10th Amendment and states' rights took another thrashing from the hands of the courts.

But there's more here than just another states' rights issue. This ruling could cost the nation's taxpayers as much as $3 billion as firemen and policemen come under the minimum wage law plus overtime. For years, state and local governments sat down with employees and resolved overtime problems through the use of compensatory time off. That system benefited public employees and taxpayers alike.

If Mayor Bourne had not put the new hours and schedule changes in effect—thereby reducing overtime pay for firemen—the Supreme Court ruling could have cost his city about $1 million a year. But, under the Bourne plan, instead of a full staff of firefighters after 5 p.m. at the city's six fire houses, there will be a skeleton crew ready to be augmented by a centrally based "flying squad" or from firemen on standby at home.

The acid test of the new system will come when the first major fire is called in after 5 p.m. We agree with City Council member Patsy Hughes, who expressed her reservations on response time and her hopes that "we don't lose a house over this idea."

Some firemen are pleased with the plan because they will be working fewer hours. Others aren't too pleased because the new schedule just does not have the latitude of the old system that allowed second jobs during their off-time.

On Capitol Hill, at least four bills have been introduced to overturn portions of the Supreme Court's ruling. One, co-sponsored by Sen. Strom Thurmond and Sen. Pete Wilson of California, would go directly to the heart of the matter by amending the Fair Labor Standards Act to exempt state and local governments from its wage and hour regulations. That's a right reserved to local government by the Constitution and one that deserves to be restored.

"LEAVE IT UP TO THE STATES"

[From the Gaffney Ledger (Gaffney, SC), Aug. 2, 1985]

Taxpayers nationwide should support California Sen. Pete Wilson's effort to amend the federal Fair Labor Standards Act and exempt state and local governments from its wage-and-hour regulations.

Historically, federal labor laws have not applied to state and local governments, which is as it should be in a federal system such as ours. But in February, in Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, the U.S. Supreme Court, by a 5-4 vote, reversed a nine-year-old precedent and decreed that state and local governments indeed were bound by such federal regulations.

The court majority ruled, in effect, that the 10th Amendment to the Constitution is no longer valid. That amendment reads, "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States respectively, or to the people." The 10th Amendment was the basis for a 1976 Supreme Court decision that exempted states and their political subdivisions from the federal wage laws.

But there is considerably more at stake here than the two-centuries-old argument over states' rights under our federal system. There is also the matter of about $3 billion a year in taxpayers' money.

This is how much state and local governments could be forced to pay in additional overtime under the Fair Labor Standards Act as decreed in the Garcia ruling. The alternative, of course, would be to reduce overtime. But because most of that overtime is worked by public safety employees—police and firefighters—that's neither practical nor desirable.

For years, state and local governments and their employees have solved the overtime problem through negotiation and the use of compensatory time to offset overtime. This system has benefited public employees and taxpayers alike and should be continued.

Congress should move quickly to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act and restore the right of state and local governments to determine their own wage-and-hour standards.

THE TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, turning to another subject, I hold in my hand a sheet that says 117 textile workers will lose jobs in Inman. "Several hundred fabric-finishing looms will be removed at Inman Mills and 117 people will lose their jobs this month in the first layoffs of the mill's 83-year history."

It further goes on to say, "Inman Mills is one of the top 10 employers in Spartanburg County. The company has spent nearly $50 million in recent years updating equipment at its four plants, Chapman said.

"Cheaper imported goods have made it unprofitable for Inman to produce unfinished fabric on the looms, Chapman said.

"We originally planned to continue running those 320 looms. It got down below costs so fast, so rapidly, that there was nothing we could do about it, and all was because of imports."

Then the last paragraph says "Mayfair Mills laid off about 35 workers in mid-July and Spartan Mills laid off 250 at its Beaumont Plant in mid-August."

Mr. President, the mills keep closing. Jobs are disappearing.

Mr. President, I hope the American people will wake up and see what is happening. What is happening in my State is happening in other States on account of excessive imports coming into this country.

Mr. President, I have another clipping that came out during the time we were in recess, headlined "250 Jobs Eliminated as Spartan Mills Shuts Weaving Operations."

To quote some paragraphs from this article, it states:

About 250 employees of Spartan Mills will lose their jobs as the company phases out weaving operations at its Beaumont plant, the company chairman said Thursday.

The phaseout, which began Thursday, will leave the plant producing only yarn, chairman and chief executive officer Walter Montgomery Sr. said.

"This is a most difficult time for me," Montgomery said. "It's the first time we've ever had to lay off people since we've been in business, and I've been with Spartan Mills for 63 years."

Mr. President, the last paragraph in the article states:

Montgomery blamed the phaseout on a "flood" of textile imports allowed by Federal trade polices.

Mr. President, this is further evidence that the trade policies being followed by the administration on textiles is not working. We cannot stand much longer. These jobs will all be gone, not only in my State, but in every State in this Nation, unless something is done to preserve these textile jobs. I am so anxious for the proper steps to be taken.

Mr. President, I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues an article printed in the July 10, 1985, issue of the Gaffney Ledger. It plainly tells the way of life in a small textile-mill community. The residents of Bath, SC, which happens to be in my home county of Aiken, recall how their lives have been woven into the operations of the community's major employer, the Bath Mill. One generation after another has entered the mill during their teenage years, and have worked their way up to promotions and satisfactory retirement from a job well done. Families for generations have worked at the Bath Mill. The economic futures of many have been smashed. Bath Mill is closing in September. The flood of textile imports makes it impossible for it to remain competitive in the market. Employees who have spent their lives working at the mill and whose livelihood depends on the textile production now face unemployment.

Mr. President, many of these people have no hopes for retraining for other skills or finding other employment. I am deeply concerned about these people and other textile workers who are facing unemployment due to the flood of textile imports on our markets. We must act to protect American jobs and provide hardworking Americans a livelihood.

Mr. President, passage of S. 680 is crucial to this effort.

Mr. President, the article to which I just referred clearly reminds us that imports are hurting hardworking Americans, Americans who have spent their lives working to provide for others.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Gaggney Ledger, July 10, 1985]

NO REGRETS: FAITHFUL EMPLOYEES OF DOOMED BATH MILL HAVE SEEN GOOD, BAD DAYS

BATH, SC.—If you add up the time Junior Reese and members of his family have worked at Bath Mill, it adds up to about 700 years.

Junior Reese could celebrate his 39th year at the mill this year. His wife, Betty Reese, has been there 34 years.

Long stays like that are common. People usually come to work when they're mere children and never work anywhere else.

Not any more. The mill is closing in September.

Reese said he went to work sweeping in the spinning room when he was 15. Mrs. Reese started work as a hand draw-in learner when she was 17.

People assumed Bath Mill was the company they would work for when they get old, Mr. Jones said.

"That was all there was," Jones said and shrugged.

"It was just a way of life," Mrs. Jones added.

The Joneses and Reese are natives of the Bath area. Reese was born in a Bath Mill company house.

The mill closing has left them unsure of their futures. The Reeses have applied for jobs with the Graniteville Company, and Jones plans to retire.

"Textile is all I know," Mrs. Reese said. "And this is the only place I've ever worked. I've never filled out an application for a job."

Reese said he's never even set foot in another mill.

Jones was planning on retiring anyway, but he says he had been hoping to finish out the end of the year, "but it doesn't look like I'll make it."

"There are some working here that just won't get another job because of their ages," Jones added.

Mrs. Jones says she hopes she won't have to try to find another job. Textile jobs are scarce, and she said it's probably hopeless to try to be retrained.

When Jones took his job sweeping the floor, he was making $9 a week. He lived with his uncle, who made $12 a week, and between the two of them, they fed eight people.

Both of them have worked their way up. Reese is now a supervisor and his wife works in the designing area of Bath Mill.

Neither of them ever had any desire to go anywhere else, they said, and two of their friends, Preston and Jessie Mae Jones agreed with them.

Jones has worked at Bath Mill since the 1930's. He said the only days he missed work were the two years he spent in the army during World War II. And Mrs. Jones began work two weeks earlier than Mrs. Reese did.

"There's no need of me trying to be retrained in other areas," she said. "This is all I've ever done."

Plant management has allowed other companies to take applications from Bath Mill workers. If workers have a job interview, they are encouraged to take time off.

Most of them do not know how long they have left because everyone won't be laid off at once. The operation is being phased out department by department.

The mill workers said working your way up from the bottom is part of the Bath Mill tradition.

The Reeses have a son who is doing cleanup work at the mill one day a week.

"He would've taken a job if they'd offered him one," Reese said.

The Joneses have a daughter and a son-in-law who both work at Bath Mill. Mr. Jones said that now he would advise his relatives "not to go into textiles."

"If I had my life to do over again. I'd come back," Reese said. "We've seen the good days and the bad days, and that's why we loved our plant."

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, here is one other item entitled "117 Textile Workers to Lose Jobs In Inman." Two hundred fifty jobs are being lost at Spartanburg textile mills, and an entire mill is closing in Bath, SC, involving probably 700 people.

Mr. President, how much longer is this administration going to wait before taking some action? The only action I see to be taken is to pass S. 680. Even if some immediate action is taken now, how do we know next year or 3 years from now the same situation will not come again? I think we need a sound bill, sound legislation, and S. 680 will meet that concern.

I want to say if we will merely keep the imports in line with the domestic growth, that is all we are asking. Why is that not fair? Yet the import growth is 33 percent and domestic growth is 3 percent.

Mr. President, the textile mills will fade out entirely in a few years. Then where will we get uniforms for military men? Where will we get the textile material used in parachutes and other items? According to the Defense Department, textiles rank second to steel in national defense.

Mr. President, it is important that this bill be passed as early as possible.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me indicate that I had the privilege of meeting with a number of the CEO's of textile plants at the request of the distinguished President pro tempore, Senator THURMOND, and the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, Senator HELMS. We met in Greensboro, NC, about 3 or 4 weeks ago. We had a 2-hour meeting and discussed at length many of the problems that the distinguished President pro tempore has just informed the Senate about.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I wish to commend the majority leader for his going to North Carolina and meeting with the textile leaders. I am sure the information that was brought out at that time was very helpful to him as it was to others who attended that meeting. We are deeply indebted to our able majority leader.

SENATE RESOLUTION (S. RES. 217)—HONORING THE 98TH BIRTHDAY OF FORMER GOV. ALFRED MOSSMAN LANDON

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator THURMOND, Senator BYRD, and myself, I send a resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration. I have cleared this with the distinguished minority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

S. RES. 217

To honor Alfred Mossman Landon.

Whereas Alfred Mossman Landon, former Governor of Kansas and 1936 Republican nominee for President, is celebrating his ninety-eighth birthday today, September 9, 1985;

Whereas Alf Landon has a firm foothold in American political history of another period, and is ever ready to comment on current affairs with an expertise and sensibility that reveals his unique position as a grand old man of the GOP;

Whereas his blend of morality, humanity and practical politics, has led politicians, labor leaders, reporters, and academicians to seek advice and counsel at his west Topeka home over the last forty-nine years;

Whereas as early as 1936, Alf Landon was a man ahead of his times, reminding Americans of the evils of inflation and pointing to the dangers of uncontrolled Government spending;

Whereas his record of fiscal integrity and balanced budgets during his tenure as Governor of Kansas would be the envy of any contemporary President;

Whereas Alf Landon has contributed much to the development and education of young people;

Whereas for over fifty years, Alf Landon has been one of our most respected and inspiring citizens, earning a permanent niche in American history; and

Whereas as a statesman, politician, businessman, counselor, sportsman, and friend, Alf Landon is a model for all who know him: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate hereby extends to the Honorable Alf Landon our affectionate greetings and best wishes on the occasion of his ninety-eighth birthday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to its immediate consideration.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, today, September 9, 1985, is the 98th birthday of a great American—who also happens to be a great Kansan and the father of my distinguished colleague from Kansas, NANCY LANDON KASSEBAUM. Alf Landon is one of the most respected public figures in this country. Besides being an outstanding political leader for Kansas and the Nation, he has also been a successful businessman, wise counselor, caring friend, and family man.

It is a pleasure for the Senator from Kansas to introduce this resolution honoring Alfred Mossman Landon, former Governor of Kansas and 1936 Republican nominee for President, on the occasion of his 98th birthday. Alf Landon is one of those figures of American politics who remain timeless—he is as comfortable addressing the issues of today as he was addressing the issues of the 1936 campaign. Over the years, he has become a political institution—the GOP's grand old man, full of wisdom and experience and a lively sense of humor. He continues to represent the best of prairie populism, integrity, and independence. It is fitting that the Senate of the United States pay tribute to this great American today. He has been a personal inspiration to me, and he has certainly left a lasting imprint on the history of American politics.

POLITICAL ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Mr. President, Alf Landon has been present on the American political scene for longer than just about anyone still with us. He caught the political bug back in 1912, when he accompanied his father and William Allen White, the newspaperman, to that year's Republican Convention in Chicago. After a stint of activity with the Bull Moose movement, he established himself in the progressive wing of the GOP and moved up through the ranks of State politics to become Governor of Kansas in 1932, by a margin of 6,000 votes. At a time when Republican candidates nationwide were being swept out of office during the Roosevelt era, he was reelected by an increased plurality of 60,000 votes—the only Republican Governor elected in 1934.

STRONG STATE LEADERSHIP

National party leaders were attracted to Landon in 1936 because of his strong image and solid record in office. During the Depression, while the Federal Government was spending heavily and getting into enormous debt in the process, Governor Landon's antidote was to initiate a shoestring, no-frills budget in Kansas—and balance it. Twice Governor of Kansas, from 1933-37, Landon introduced more sweeping changes in his first term in office than Kansas had seen since the Populists took over in 1890.

One of his memorable first moves was pushing a bank bill through the State legislature in 2 hours. Having heard that a large Kansas City bank was about to collapse, Landon walked into the office of the Speaker of the House and explained the need for an emergency bill to keep Kansas banks from closing. The bill passed unanimously in both houses.

FISCAL AUSTERITY STILL IN VOGUE TODAY

Mr. President, Alf Landon was a man ahead of his times. At the top of the Governor's priority list was balancing the State budget during tough economic times. He began by implementing an across-the-board cut of 24 percent that extended to his own $5,000 a year salary and expenses of the Governor's mansion. However, when the legislature refused to cut the Governor's salary, he mailed back a 25-percent refund from each of his paychecks.

By the end of his first term in 1934, Governor Landon had managed to reduce the State per capita cost of Government from the previous $71 5 years before to $51. This is the kind of fiscal leadership that we see all too little of today. Perhaps what this country needs is a new dose of Alf Landon medicine. The issues that he fought so hard for back then are still with us today, even though the context may have changed.

TIMELESS LEADERSHIP

Mr. President, as Alf Landon describes himself, he is "an oil man who never made a million, a lawyer who never had a case, and a politician who only carried Maine and Vermont." His good natured response to the loss of the 1936 Presidential election has endeared him to the countless people who have sought his advice and wisdom since those times. Above the loss of the moment, he has remained a statesman, contributing to the political life of this country from behind the scenes—an inspiration to those who have walked similar paths in Kansas politics and tried their hand at the national level when the opportunity presented itself.

Those who know the Governor, and listen to his views, realize that, even if he had not been the 1936 Republican nominee for President, he would still attract the attention of those who continue to admire and respect his solid leadership, integrity, and practical political wisdom. He continues to give good, honest advice, and preserves a solid perspective of events, both past and present.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY, GOVERNOR!

Mr. President, Alf Landon's personal qualities are too many to enumerate—they are readily apparent to all those who visit with him. Like Truman of Independence and Eisenhower of Abilene, he presents an image of plain-speaking Midwestern values, decorated by a self-effacing humor that is refreshing today.

Family has always been important to Alf Landon. His loving wife Theo has been a strong, quiet, capable influence in his life. She is celebrating this occasion with him back in Topeka.

Their daughter Nancy contributes her graceousness, intelligence and wisdom to this body on a daily basis—she is their legacy to the national political scene today. It is a pleasure having NANCY LANDON KASSEBAUM as a distinguished Senate colleague. A granddaughter, Mary, is a valuable member of my staff, as well.

Mr. President, we celebrate this occasion with Governor Landon and his wife. This man represents a timeless political influence, and we wish him health and happiness on his 98th birthday. The sincere greetings, affectionate thoughts, and best wishes of the U.S. Senate are with Alf Landon today.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that copies of news articles honoring Governor Landon be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WITH A TWINKLE, ALF LANDON CELEBRATES 98

(By John C. Braden)

TOPEKA.—On the threshold of his 48th birthday, just 50 years ago, Alfred M. Landon was sitting in the Kansas governor's office, hatching a campaign to keep President Franklin Roosevelt from a second term.

A bunch of Kansas University grads and veterans of the World War were just starting to talk up the "old Budget Balancer"—Landon—as the GOP's hope to unseat Roosevelt.

On the threshold of his 98th birthday, Sept. 9, Alf Landon was sitting on the front porch of his west Topeka mansion. He beams at the memory of those days, making one forget for a moment that, as the 1936 Republican presidential nominee, he got buried in a massive New Deal landslide.

A lot has happened since. Landon came back to Kansas and built a white-columned mansion on a knoll in sight of the current governor's mansion. That's where he's remained to this day with his wife, Theo.

He returned to punching oil wells in the rolling countryside of eastern Kansas, assembled a chain of radio stations and became a confidant, pundit and patriarch to the GOP.

The Landon name has remained valuable in Kansas politics and the former governor's daughter, Nancy Landon Kassebaum, used it and him (in television commercials) to good effect to capture a Senate seat in 1978 and win a second term in 1984.

Age is catching up with Landon, although it took longer than it does for most mortals. His eyesight has weakened and his hearing dimmed, but there's still a sharpness in his eye and a tart answer on his tongue.

Seated between the soaring columns of his front porch, the balding patriarch in blue-and-green plaid flannel shirt says he's not doing too well, but he hasn't seen such nice weather for 150 years.

Then he gives you that grin.

In 1956, the late William Allen White, a famous Kansas newspaperman who knew Landon from his Kansas University days, described Landon's "brown, squinty eyes which opened sometimes like a flash and closed behind the shutters of a grin."

Same grin.

Gone are the horseback rides that were an every-morning ritual well into Landon's 90s, replaced by a walk around the grounds of "about a mile."

Failing eyesight has limited Landon's once-voracious reading, but he has other amusements.

"I watch football, but I haven't had very damn much to cheer and lately," he said, in reference to his alma mater's record.

No big bash is planned for his birthday. Vice President George Bush is expected to pay a courtesy call when he delivers a Landon Lecture Sept. 9 at Kansas State University, in Manhattan. Kansas, then stops in Topeka for a Republican Party fundraiser.

Landon has stopped making the 55-mile trip to K-State for the lectures, but still looks forward to these annual birthday visits from dignitaries. President Reagan came in 1982.

"It's pretty good coverage for an old man," he said.

As for Bush's chances of winning the 1988 GOP presidential nomination, "It's a pretty hard question to answer this far ahead of the convention, but there's no question about his being a strong contender," he said.

Landon also mentions Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., and "that senator from down South," Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., among the possibles.

Wasn't the populist Landon, in his heyday, considerably more liberal than Helms, and even President Reagan?

"I was. And I am," he said.

Although "a good many people" were frightened by Roosevelt's New Deal back when Landon was stumping against it, the former governor now allows that it didn't turn out to be that bad.

ALF LANDON TO OBSERVE 98TH BIRTHDAY MONDAY

(By Lew Ferguson)

TOPEKA.—It was, Alf Landon confessed, one of the hardest things he has had to do in his long and eventful life.

Last July, the former Kansas governor and 1936 Republican presidential nominee gave away Red, the horse he once rode almost daily from his estate in northwest Topeka up the Kaw River and back 10 miles or more.

"It was very hard, my golly, yes," Mr. Landon said in an interview before his 98th birthday. His birthday will be on Monday.

"I hadn't been able to ride the old boy for two years, so I found him a wonderful place to live. I didn't sell him. I gave him away."

Red, owned by Mr. Landon for more than 20 years, was given to a family that has other horses on a farm east of Topeka. It was a relief to find pleasant surroundings for the old horse, Mr. Landon confided.

He spoke about Red as one would a valued friend with whom many memories are shared.

"We used to ride up the Kansas River, and the morning Rock Island train would go by," Mr. Landon recalled. "They'd blow the whistle and wave at us. I'd wave back. Old Red and I really had a reception committee."

Mr. Landon rode the horse well into his 90s but could no longer climb aboard him after he fell and broke his hip in April 1983.

Even after he quit riding, Mr. Landon would feed apples to the old horse.

The hip fracture and a fall last month that jammed a shoulder and caused pain in his tailbone—but broke no bones—have slowed Mr. Landon's physical activity. But he still walks, with the aid of a cane, 100 yards or so down his driveway and back, sometimes twice in a day.

Mr. Landon also has lunch once a week with two longtime friends at Barnett's Restaurant a mile from his home. Some weeks he goes out for lunch an additional time or two with other friends or visiting family members.

"I'm feeling a little better all the time," he said of his recovery from the recent fall, which occurred at his home.

On Monday, Mr. Landon will be the center of attention once more, as Kansas and the nation note his birthday.

Vice President George Bush will be in Topeka to help him celebrate.

When President Reagan came calling three years ago for Mr. Landon's 95th birthday, he promised him a flight to Washington aboard Air Force One for a party observing his 100th.

Mr. Bush will deliver a lecture at Kansas State University in nearby Manhattan Monday morning, then travel to Topeka for a visit in early afternoon at the Landons' big white colonial style home on the northwest outskirts of town.

Mr. Bush also will attend a fund-raising reception staged by the state Republican Party on Monday night.

The vice president will be there when the students and marching band of Landon Middle School come calling on Mr. Landon at his home in midafternoon, a tradition begun about a dozen years ago.

"I'm not going to say anything this year," said Mr. Landon, who in past years had a few words of advice for the students of the school that bears his name. "The vice president will be there, and I hope he'll say something to them for me.

"It impresses me that he will be there on my birthday. That's a real honor, having the president come for my 95th and the vice president this year."

Mr. Landon served as Kansas governor from 1933-37 and retired from candidate politics after losing the presidency in 1936, but nothing has dimmed his interest in state, national and world affairs—especially politics.

Getting caught up on the latest political gossip usually dominates his weekly luncheon sessions with friends.

Some of Mr. Landon's recent observations on the political scene:

Mr. Reagan is the most popular president since Franklin Roosevelt, who crushed Mr. Landon's challenge for the presidency 49 years ago this fall by winning 46 of the 48 states. He also calls Mr. Reagan "a pretty astute politician" who is able to marshal public opinion like no one since FDR.

He sees Mr. Bush, Kansas Sen. Bob Dole, New York Rep. Jack Kemp and Illinois Gov. Jim Thompson as leading contenders for the 1988 GOP nomination. While meticulously avoiding endorsing any of those contenders, Mr. Landon confirmed he likes Mr. Bush's campaign style.

New Russian leader Mikhail Gorbachev holds the key to future U.S.-Soviet relations. "He is the most important individual facing us," Mr. Landon said. "What's he going to do? Does he mean what he says? I hope we know the answers after the summit conference."

ALF LANDON'S WISDOM, BORN IN DEFEAT 40 YEARS AGO

By Michael Satchell

TOPEKA, KANSAS.—Alf Landon was tired. Dead beat. Utterly exhausted. At 8 o'clock on this morning, he had pulled on his jodhpurs, given his handmade English riding boots a lick or two with a polish cloth, had a confidential word with his arthritic old collie Shep, saddled up Red, his Morgan horse, and cantered down to the river for the benefit of CBS television.

The day before, he had done the same thing for ABC. The day before that or NBC. For three days, he had been questioned, filmed, posed, prodded and patronized by the news media from breakfast to suppertime. And now there was more.

Late in the scorching afternoon, he slumped down in an old leather chair in his library looking as frail and wilted as a Kansas sunflower growing in a vacant lot. His eyes closed. His jaw slackened. He wore every one of his 89 years in a single expression. It seemed almost cruel to ask him, quietly, what he thought of President Ford's campaign so far.

For several moments, nothing. Then he stirred. His eyes opened. He sat up. The juices began flowing and the words followed. "Ford is a good man, but dadgummit, he's got to get his campaign organized. Get rid of that Rogers Morton fella. Take the initiative and run Carter into the ground."

Politics, politics. Red meat to Alf Landon. And in a 15-minute discourse on the Ford campaign, he hardly paused, except to allow his interviewer time to catch up writing down the old man's words.

Alf Landon is unique, a living footnote to the American political history. After his crushing defeat in 1936 when he ran against an incumbent, Franklin Roosevelt, Landon never again sought public office, but he didn't retire from politics.

For 40 years, he has sat in his mansion in West Topeka while politicans, labor leaders, reporters and academics have tropped to his study for advice and counsel. He offered his opinions only when asked.

Over the years, he has become something of an institution, respected and admired, not an elder stateman in the sense of, say, Everett Dirksen, but more like the GOP's Grand Old Man, full of years and honors and good sense. It is a role that he loves, and with an old charmer like Alf Landon, it's impossible not to be entranced when he delivers a long lecture on deficit spending and Keynesian economics, then cadges a cigarette, sneaks a few drags and whispers: "Don't tell the missus, now."

Landon's wife is a woman of impeccable beauty named Theo. When she tells you that she is, in retrospect, rather pleased that her Alf didn't win back in '36, you know she means it in the kindest way.

"He wouldn't be here today if he had gone to the White House," she said "Washington would have killed him. He works too hard and he cares to much. It's a blessing really. Perhaps if more people had known him and what he stood for back them, he might have had a chance."

Ironically, in terms of public exposure, Landon is probably going to be seen or read about by more people today than when he stumped in 1936 before the days of mass media. He has been interviewed by major newspapers and the wire services, and the three networks have prepared profiles for use during the Republican convention coverage.

Tonight he is scheduled to make his only appearance at the convention. He will introduce his old friend, Sen. Robert F. Dole, R-Kan., the temporary convention chairman.

Had Landon been able to get his message—and image—across to America better in 1936, he just might have been able to make a race of it with FDR for his record was good and he was an attractive candidate.

He was schooled as a lawyer but never practiced. In 1908, after getting his law degree, be became a bookkeeper in Independence, Kan., and during summer vacations, learned the oil business from his father. In 1912, he started wildcatting in Oklahoma and Kansas, drilling his share of dry holes but hitting enough gushers to put him solidly into the oil business.

He caught the bug for politics in 1912 when he went with his father and William Allen White, the newspaperman, to the 1912 Republican convention in Chicago. After a brief fling with the Bull Moose forces, he settled into the progressive wing of the GOP and moved up through the ranks of state politics to become Kansas governor in 1932.

What attracted national party leaders to Landon in 1936 was his solid image and sound record in office. With the federal government spending heavily and getting into enormous debt in fighting the Depression, Landon put Kansas on a shoestring, no-frills budget and balanced it.

In 1932, he won his first gubernatorial term with 6,000 votes and in 1934, when Republican candidates nationwide were being swept out of office, he increased his plurality to 60,000 votes and was the only Republican governor elected that year. Back in the 1920s, when conventional wisdom dictated that such matters were best undiscussed, Landon was publicly denouncing the Ku Klux Klan and urging improved treatment of blacks.

There were personal qualities, too. Like Harry Truman of Independence, Mo., and Dwight Eisenhower of Abilene, Landon exhibited that reassuring, plain-speaking Midwestern decency.

A large oil painting of Landon hanging in his library and completed during his years as governor shows a man with a gentle smile and friendly eyes peering from behind rimless spectacles.

He looks for all the world like a seed salesman or the man bringing the Sears and Roebuck catalog, riding onto your farm on a buckboard or behind the wheel of a Model T. You would buy anything from Alf Landon. He had electability. But Roosevelt had more.

With a sunflower symbol, an "Oh Susanna" campaign ditty and a bulletproof speaker's lecturn, Landon went campaigning, but he knew he had little chance of becoming president.

"Running against Roosevelt," he recalled, "was like trying to get on a moving express train and stop it. There was no chance for me—but it was a good fight and a fair one and we respected each other."

The tally was 27,476,673 votes to 16,679,583, and FDR carried Kansas by 67,000 votes. Landon took only Maine and Vermont. But it bothered Landon not one whit. He spent election day fishing in the Kaw River and when his wife began weeping as the dimensions of the stunning defeat became apparent, Landon just laughed.

"How can you laugh at a time like this?" asked Theo.

"It's just the completeness of it," Landon replied.

So Landon stayed in Topeka, running his oil and natural gas business, his four radio stations, living with dogs and horses and good port, a comfortable life not unlike an English country squire.

The Landon home is a splendid residence, albeit a curious mixture of styles with eight white Doric columns fronting a three-story brick house ensnarled by climbing ivy. Behind, the fields sweep down to the Kaw River. Most mornings, Landon saddles up Red and rides for five or six miles before driving downtown to spend three or four hours at this office.

Inside, in the main area and library, there is little obvious clue that the man who lives here had a distinguished career in state politics and ran for the nation's highest office. But downstairs, Landon has converted his basement into a small museum, a sort of mini-presidential hopeful's library.

There are posters, neckties, pocket knives, salt and pepper shakers, drinking glasses and coffee mugs bearing the smiling, 1936 visage of Landon. There are political cartoons and plaques, awards and honorary degrees. Hundreds of mementoes are arranged in large display cases with "Please Do Not Lean On The Glass" signs. And there is the steel campaign lectern that takes four men to move it.

All of Landon's political memorabilia are here, and the way they are displayed tells you that the memories are very, very important. It almost makes you forget that Landon was the loser.

In his library ("Mein Kampf," "Khrushchev Remembers," "The Imperial Presidency," "Tom's Town,") Landon settled into his easy chair, on this hot afternoon, sipped a glass of water and chatted about two political campaigns 40 years apart.

"You know, you don't have to say I said this but I think I had a lot of foresight back then," Landon said. "My main messages were reduce inflation by cutting back on deficit spending . . . improved relations with other nations . . . and halt the growth of the federal government. Now look what has happened. Inflation is our worst problem at home . . . detente is a major goal . . . and Watergate showed us what can happen when the government gets so big and presidents start thinking they have the divine right of kings."

"I was advocating recognition of Red China years before Nixon went there. Watergate aside, I think Nixon's foreign policy was excellent."

Landon likes Ford and says he's so confident that the President will be renominated he won't even bother to discuss Reagan's chances. Being a Republican progressive, Landon has little time for the Californian, although he isn't eager to articulate his apparent dislike.

As for the November election, Landon thinks the Washington news media and the pollsters are a bunch of fools. "Everybody's saying it will be a landslide for Carter, but mark my words, it will be close, I'd hate to call it, but it will be close."

Wishful thinking perhaps, from a man who can probably identify better than anyone else with the Republican who will be chosen to run against Carter. Or maybe it's political foresight from a man who has had 40 years to reflect on a wealth of political years to reflect on a wealth of political experience that strangely began in defeat, rather than victory.

[From the Boston Globe, Sept. 9, 1985]

'I WOULD HAVE MADE A GOOD PRESIDENT'

(By L. David Harris)

TOPEKA, KANSAS.—Age requires fit surroundings. The room is baronial; his portrait as governor is above the fireplace. There's a desk, table, dark carpet, lounging chairs, work chairs, large windows that overlook an expanse of green estate, a wall of books. It's a place to read, to study, to work, to confer. And it's immense: there's room to pace.

The old gentleman—Kansas' own Alfred Mossman Landon, Alf to the country and the world—is there waiting, sitting at his desk. He's 95 today: 46 years ago he ran for the President of the United States.

Something like a country squire, Landon still rides his favorite horse, Big Red, around his 24-acre Topeka estate first thing each morning, weather permitting. Then he holds court: His days are filled with visitors who talk the politics of warhorse campaigns of 40 or 50 years ago and the national politics of today. They seek his counsel, but mainly they seek his presence; he is something of a shrine to them.

Later today, Ronald Reagan will court him, visit him, honor him, wish him many more years. The feeling is mutual. At the last election, Landon, known as an independent thinker and usually aligned with Republican moderates, supported Reagan. "I thought he would make a good President," he says. "And now, well, I think he's making an excellent one."

And Landon is feeling generous: "Look," he says, "Reagan put through his last tax legislation with the assistance of House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr. and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, and they should get credit for that. They put their country above their party. They were all able to work together."

There's a certain dignity about Alf Landon. At midmorning, it's already hot, but his shirt is crisp white and his tie is straight. He is almost bald, with wisps of white hair. Behind the framed glasses his eyes can still twinkle, but they can appear tired, too. He seems at one time durable, yet vulnerable.

STILL ACTIVE AT 95

"My health?" he answers a question. "Well, I'm feeling my age—otherwise, I'm all right."

Landon still has his oil wells. He owns radio stations in Topeka, Dodge City, Liberal, Kan., and Fort Collins, Col., and in Liberal and Fort Collins he also owns television outlets. He talks with his broadcasting people every day on the telephone; he phones the supervisor of his Greenwood County, Kan., oil leases every night. And they regularly confer with him in person at his home. He has more than 40 stripper wells in Greenwood County, and, while he keeps in touch by telephone, he likes to be on the scene.

"I was always an old-fashioned oil producer," he says during an interview. "I believed in being on the derrick floor when they were drilling the formations. I drilled one well down there years ago, guess it was. I didn't go down. But the last well I drilled down there, I was up all night. Any oil man will tell you—the biggest thrill is hitting a good one."

His voice is a little raspy, and there are long pauses as he talks. Landon knows interviewers want to know about the past, but he works to weave it into his views of the present. He struggles for correct words, the right phrases; he struggles so that even the nuances of his thoughts are understood.

He has expectations of interviewers. He wants good questions, specific questions; interviewers should be informed. "Do you understand the terms I'm using?" he asks. And again: "Have you read up on that issue? Have you read what Scotty Reston wrote about that? And another time, when asked about the source of his outlook on life, he gently replied, "Why waste time on a very speculative question? You either have it or you don't.

Landon's life is politics. He likes nothing more than a good discussion of national and world issues. He talks faster, his eyes light up, he seems more alive, in love with his subject. And talks with him about politics and government always include a recurring theme—a theme he plays to the hilt and is absolutely, totally sincere about; namely, that today's problems are the same ones, only magnified, that plagued the country 46 years ago when he ran for president against Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

Further, he says FDR's deficit spending and rigid government controls were the beginnings of today's "inflation running wild." He sees bureaucracy as a virtually uncontrollable, "inexorable fourth branch of government" and he is appalled at what he perceives as the "fraud" of a poorly financed social security program. He still rails about the "many governmental regulations and abuses of power" that put the country "only steps behind what we have seen operating in the economic and fiscal and political policies of fascists states."

It's hard for him not to say, "I told you so."

He does say, however, "I would have made a good President. In some things, I would have been aggressive. In other things not so aggressive, But I would have done very well.

REAGAN IS "ON THE RIGHT TRACK"

He adds that he thinks Reagan is doing very well. No, he says, he has no advice for the President. "I think he's on the right track. Reagan's got a start in the right direction in the way of a balanced budget which is essential, not only to good government, but to meeting the problems of the unemployed."

Landon stays informed. He often reads six newspapers a day; he hears from his political and government friends. Issues, politics, are his regular fare. He say he remembers way, way back when he was pondering ideas that are just coming into vogue today.

In the Republican Party, Landon is known as a middle-of-the-roader and independent in his ways. He's been known to describe himself as a populist Republican, although he also says he's wary of labels and mistrusts them.

Landon called for the recognition of China before it was popular; he advocated that Eisenhower get rid of John Foster Dulles for his "negative" approach to US-Soviet relations; he pushed Nelson Rockefeller, then William Scranton, against Goldwater in 1966, fought the Kansas "right to work" amendment, showed concern about Richard Nixon's "capacity to be a good president'" even before Watergate, and enthusiastically endorsed the Panama Canal Treaty.

"I'm my own man," he says flatly.

Landon was born in West Middlesex, Pa., the grandson of a carpenter, and a Methodist minister and the son of an oil man. In 1904, his father brought the family to Independence, Kan., where his father took over the presidency of a gas company and directed the start of a natural gas pipe from Montgomery County to Topeka and Kansas City. "At that time the longest pipeline anywhere in the world," he says

Landon was graduated with a law degree from the University of Kansas, worked the oil fields, picked up his first oil wells and followed the politics of his father. Father and son went to the 1912 Republican Convention, where they watched their hero, Teddy Roosevelt, lose out to William Howard Taft for the presidential nomination.

They came back to Kansas where with their close friend, William Allen White, of Emporia, they formed the bulwarks of the Kansas "Bullmoose" movement, then finally returned to the Republican fold. Later, too, in 1924, they again joined with William Allen White in a crusade against the Ku Klux Klan, which at that time was active in Kansas political parties.

Landon was twice governor of Kansas (from 1933 to 1937). Kansas saw more sweeping changes in Landon's first term in office that it had since the Populists roared into the capital in 1890.

Among the new governor's first moves, and one he particularly remembers, was pushing a bank bill through the legislature in two hours. Motivated by secret news that a large bank in Kansas City was about to fall, Landon broke precedent by walking to the office of the Speaker of the House and explaining the need for a bill to keep Kansas banks from closing. Although one vote in either the House or the Senate could have brought passage of the bill, it passed unanimously in both Houses.

One of Landon's initial acts as governor, and one that later attracted wide attention in his presidential campaign, was his balancing the state budget. He began with an across-the-board cut of 24 percent that extended to his own $5000 salary and the expenses of the governor's mansion. The Legislature refused to cut the governor's pay, so Landon mailed back a 25 percent refund from each of his paychecks.

Near the end of his first term in 1934, he had reduced the state per capita cost of government to $51 from the $71 it had been five years previously. Kansans rewarded him by returning him to the governor's office for a second term with a 6000-vote margin. He was the only Republican governor re-elected in 1935.

Landon was named by acclamation by his party to run against FDR in 1936 and the campaign call was "Life, Liberty and Landon." But he was defeated in landslide. With a sense of humor and a gift for the turn of a phrase, he once told an interviewer. "I'm an oil man who never made a million, a lawyer who never had a case and a politician who only carried Maine and Vermont."

While he still speaks critically of FDR's politics and policies, he adds, "Personally, we were friends."

He once illustrated his morning-after presidential election blues by telling a story that only a Kansan would know. The story told of a Kansas rancher who was wiped out by a tornado—he lost his house, barn, fences, stock, everything. Surveying the destruction, the rancher burst out laughing.

"How can you laugh at a time like this?" asked his weeping wife. "It's just the completeness of it," the man replied.

During the interview, Landon's wife Theo, is in the next room. She doesn't enter the conversation, yet there is a sense that she is near. Landon's supervisor of his oil leases has arrived and she is quietly conversing with him, maintaining that conversation until her husband is free.

Mrs. Landon is 83. Family friends said she can talk business and politics, too. They say she is warm, gentle, humorous, talented. When her husband was running for President, she was profiled in national publications, complimented for her dedication to social welfare causes and admired for her talent as a harpist and pianist. Now, at their home, harp sits nearby. A few feet from it is an old elegant grand piano.

There are three children. Margaret Landon Mills, who lives in Topeka, is Landon's daughter by his first wife, Margaret Fleming, who died about a year after her daughter was born. Landon was a widower for about 10 years, then he married Theo. Their children are Jack, who lives in Colorado, and Nancy Kassebaum, one of Kansas' Republican senators.

He is known to be proud of his senate daughter, but scoffs when asked if I would like her to someday be the first woman to run for the presidency. "Assuring it would be possible, I wouldn't be around to see it," he says.

In politics, Landon has been called "the man from Kansas." Does that have a particular meaning for him?

"I don't know how the country interprets that," he says, "I think there's been some tendency by the big-city press to underestimate the role that Kansas has made in public affairs. But when you look back and see the legislation that we have sponsored in Kansas that's become national legislation . . .

"I mean the state's regulation of the railroad, direct primaries, the popular election of United States senators instead of the by the House—all those, about the turn of the century. We sent a Populist to Congress. Those Populist platforms, Populist policies, along with the law of the land. Some of the best things this country has going for it got their start in Kansas. And I feel strongly about that . . ."

ALF LANDON AND AMERICAN POLITICS

(By Dennis Farney)

TOPEKA, KANSAS.—"There you are," chuckles Alf Landon, an elfin man in a big armchair, savoring his memories. "My father took me to the 1912 Republican convention. That was my introduction to national politics. Now, my daughter is a U.S. senator.

"There you are."

He is 96 years old. Now, wispy-haired and fragile-looking, but with a sudden, zestful grin that surprises you. Nearly a half-century has passed since this moderate, independent-minded Republican challenged Franklin D. Roosevelt in the 1936 presidential race, and stepped in front of a landslide. The memories of this man from Kansas encompass a lifetime of politics—and of political change.

But change for the better, or the worse? Now there's a question to ponder on this sunny April morning. Alf Landon considers it silently, then smiles a sly smile.

"When I consider some of the things this country has survived, with some of the men who've been president, I guess I'm an optimist."

There remains a playful quality to Alfred Mossman Landon, who likes to describe himself as "An oil man who never made a million, a lawyer who never had a case and a politician who carried only Maine and Vermont." He once said his 1936 defeat reminded him of the rancher who lost everything in a Kansas tornado—house, barn, stock, the works—and burst out laughing.

"How can you laugh at a time like this?" asked his tearful wife.

"It's just the completeness of it," the rancher replied.

And there is an engaged, involved, quality as well. Alf Landon still confers by phone, almost nightly, with the supervisor of his Kansas oil wells. He still tends Big Red, his Morgan horse that, as horses measure time, is about as old as he is. He knows the latest gossip about the governor. He pores over the daily papers. And he studies politics as a professional does, appreciating events on several levels at once.

"Oh, I do admire a smart political move," he told the Salina, Kan., Journal in 1979. Like, for example, the way then-President Jimmy Carter called attention to opponent Edward Kennedy's performance at Chappaquiddick—then wrote Sen. Kennedy to say he hadn't meant Chappaquiddick at all. That was smooth.

"Got it in the paper twice."

ACUTE INSTINCTS

His political instincts remain acute. In 1979, when pundits were debating whether Sen. Kennedy would challenge Mr. Carter, Alf Landon advised his daughter, Kansas Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum, to watch for a telltale sign. She could be sure Sen. Kennedy was running if he announced his own energy program. Sure enough, the senator did announce an energy plan and, soon after that, jumped into the race. Later, when many political observers still predicted an easy Kennedy victory, Mr. Landon publicly predicted that "Kennedy will have a tougher time getting Carter out of the White House than may be generally supposed." Right again.

Today, Mr. Landon hasn't any doubt that Ronald Reagan will win reelection this fall. "Regardless of whom the Democrats nominate, they aren't together," he concludes.

But, determinedly going his own way, Alf Landon also persists in views that go against the grain of his own party and Mr. Reagan. He's a man who counted George Meany a personal friend, who fought an anti-union Kansas "right-to-work" amendment in 1966. And so, when asked whether the GOP has erred by being too antagonistic to organized labor, he leaves no doubt of his feelings.

"O, for God's sake, yes," he bursts out.

In 1950, Mr. Landon startled both parties by urging that the U.S. recognize China. "I wanted to work out a deal with them before Russia did," he explains. Today, he wishes President Reagan, who is about to visit China, would move more aggressively to exploit Richard Nixon's China opening. He has little patience with the argument, sometimes used by Mr. Reagan himself, that the U.S. must never "abandon" Taiwan for China.

"Taiwan isn't worth a dime to us," he says bluntly. "Everything they've built up is with our money."

And, in sharp contrast to conservative Republicans, he deplores the transformation of issues once a matter of personal conscience—abortion for example—into political issues. "That's bad," he declares. "What business has it got to be an issue? There are too many other important things."

It is tempting to conclude that politics was somehow simpler, less abrasive, in Alf Landon's day—before the rise of divisive social issues, before the rise of television. "When I ran for the Senate," his daughter recalls. "Dad told me two things to remember. 'When you go into a town, visit the newspaper editor. And if you're in a cafe, go back and talk to the cook.'"

Tempting, but probably wrong.

AN ABRASIVE LIFE

For Alf Landon's message is that political life has always been abrasive, and no less a noble calling for that. Approvingly, he once described the Founding Fathers as "rough, tough cookies with fire in their bellies." And listening to him now, re-fighting old battles, the description seems to fit him, too.

Take his battle during his first term as governor (1933-1935) to enact a state income tax. An industry lobbyist informed him he was going to lose in the state senate—by one vote.

"Well, there was one senator, a very nice man, who'd been elected with the money of a man who had a lot of highway contracts," Mr. Landon relates. "Somehow or other—I don't know how, because I was above such things—that contractor got the idea that unless he got his boy in line, he wasn't going to get any more state highway contracts." The senator got in line, the tax carried and the next day the industry lobbyist stuck his head into the governor's office.

"I said, 'I thought you had me beat,' He said, 'You got to our SOB,'"

"For Alf Landon," the Baltimore Sun noted upon printing an op-ed page piece by him in 1979, "time has confirmed more than it has mellowed." It's true. With fierce conviction, he argues that experience has only validated the arguments he made 48 years ago—that the Social Security system was unsoundly financed, that the New Deal would bring rigid regulations and higher taxes in its train.

Always deficit-conscious—he balanced his state budget with 25% across-the-board cut, from his own salary "to the janitor in the basement"—Mr. Landon is following closely the budget-freeze proposal advocated by his daughter. Sen. Kassebaum generally would hold authorizations for programs, including defense, to current levels through fiscal 1985. But the ever-independent father breaks with the daughter in one area: He wouldn't tamper much with the costly Reagan defense buildup. The Russians worry him.

"What do the Russians have to be afraid of us for?" he demands over roasted chicken and coffee at Tommys, his favorite retaurant. "We're so far behind militarily." He peppers his guest with questions about the huge Soviet naval exercises off the coast of Norway. Why so many ships? Why now?

When the check comes, Mr. Landon gathers it in. But, upon learning that Wall Street Journal reporters have expense accounts, he pushes it across the table just as promptly. "You didn't think I was going to be bighearted did you?" he asks. Then when a solicitous family friend asks him whether he'd like to rest or continue the interview, his reply is immediate: "Keep going!"

And that's what this feisty man from Kansas clearly intends to do—keep going. A year and a half ago, on Mr. Landon's 95th birthday, President Reagan visited him here and promised to fly him to the White House for his 100th birthday celebration. Later, some of Mr. Landon's friends suggested to him that, all things considered, he might be prudent to consider making that trip a bit sooner—say, for example, on his 97th birthday this Sept. 9.

Alf Landon pondered that for a while, then brightened with an inspiration. "I can go both times," he suggested.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I would indicate that the distingusihed chairman of the Judiciary Committee has no objection to taking action on this resolution today.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I am happy to join with the distinguished majority leader in offering this resolution. I believe it is entirely appropriate. We are pleased to waive the jurisdiction of the Judiciary Committee and have action taken at this time. I commend the majority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 217) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me say that Governor Landon, as he is affectionately known in Kansas, is very actively celebrating his 98th birthday. He has promised on his 100th birthday he will visit Washington, DC. So we are looking forward to having him in the gallery in a couple of years.

I thank the distinguished minority leader and the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee for permitting the Senate to proceed to consider the resolution.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

THE HARVARD AGENDA FOR AVOIDING NUCLEAR WAR

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, this summer marks the 40th anniversary of the dawn of the nuclear age with the obliteration of Hiroshima from the explosion of a single relatively small atom bomb. For weeks, we were reminded with a steady drumbeat of media reports of the continuing threat of nuclear annihilation. We know of the overwhelming power of the superpower nuclear arsenals, poised and ready to fire—literally at the touch of a button. Our most prestigious scientific body, the National Academy of Sciences, tell us that if the button is touched igniting a superpower nuclear war, there is the clear possibility that it would trigger a nuclear winter throughout the world. That would be the worst environmental disaster in 65 million years. Mankind as a species might vanish. Certainly civilization, as we know it, would disappear. Not only the Soviet Union but the United States, too, would cease to function as an organized society.

Obviously, we need to focus the best intelligence in this country on how we can avoid such a terrible catastrophe. Every other issue pales into significance. Where do we find this intelligence? One of the great institutions of enlightenment in this country is Harvard University. A few years ago, several of Harvard's most distinguished professors collaborated on a book entitled, "Living With Nuclear Weapons." The authors called on Americans to recognize that nuclear weapons are here to stay. We have to learn to live with them. Painful and dangerous as that prospect is, we have no alternative. As Omar Khayyam wrote in his Rubaiyat: "The moving finger writes and having writ moves on; nor all your piety, nor wit shall lure it back to cancel half a line, nor all your tears wash out a word of it." Nuclear weapons are a fact of life and always will be as long as civilized man dwells on this planet.

Now these same Harvard wise men have once again come forward with some very useful advice in this unclear world. Jospeh Nye, Graham Allison, and Albert Carnesale teach at the John F. Kennedy School of Public Administration at Harvard. They have written a short article that appeared in the New York Times on July 31, entitled: "Of Hawks, Doves—and, Now, Owls." In less than a thousand words, this article suggests what we can do to reduce the chances of nuclear war that could come through inadvertence.

Why is this so important? Because the prospect of a superpower nuclear war resulting from the planned premeditated calculations of a sane superpower leadership are, thankfully, just about nil. The enormous deterrent power of 25,000 nuclear weapons on each side, guaranteeing the sure and swift devastation of any superpower involved in a nuclear war, has seen to that. But a nuclear war of inadvertence is a terrible and very real possibility. Here is where the "owls" come in. As the Harvard experts see it in their article:

> Owls believe the greatest risks of such war come from events getting out of control. History is full of cases where rational decision makers were tripped up by nonrational factors, with disastrous results.

Accidents can happen in an infinite variety of ways: Mental stress, missed communications, faulty computer chips or sensors giving false alarms of nuclear attack. The "owls" suggest a series of steps to avoid inadvertent war. Some of those steps would require cooperation with the Soviet Union; some this country can take independently. The "owl" cooperation steps include: Regular bilateral talks with the Soviet Union on crisis prevention; establishment of additional hot lines among all five countries with nuclear arsenals; multinational measures against nuclear terrorists; sanctions against nuclear proliferators; improvement of warning systems by placing unmanned tamper-proof sensors in each other's missile fields.

Here are the independent steps recommended by the "owls" to be taken by this country on its own: Install on nuclear weapons on naval ships electronic safety locks like those on land-based nuclear weapons; pull back from the East German-West German border the short-range nuclear artillery that would be difficult to control from Washington in a crisis; improve procedures for maintaining civilian control over nuclear weapons; prepare top leaders "far better than we do" for dealing with nuclear crises. The "owls" call these steps suggestive. There are many more that can and should be taken.

These Harvard professors concede that both the hawks and the doves have legitimate contributions to a balanced approach to keeping the nuclear peace. The hawks are right in insisting on a strong and conspicuous deterrent capability to make it clear that any nuclear attack on the United States would provoke a devastating nuclear response. The doves are right in urging mutual, verifiable arms control, easing tensions and seeking for improved ways of cooperation. But the owls have been neglected. Their concern may be the most serious and realistic of all. Inadvertent war through human fallibility in this complex technological world certainly constitutes a grave threat, probably the gravest threat to the survival of this country in this nuclear age. Wars have begun repeatedly throughout history because of human fallibility and inadvertence. Today, a war sparked by a simple human or mechanical blunder is far more likely. Technology has become so complex, it has obviously raced ahead of human judgment. And the destructive power is so infinitely more dangerous than ever before. This is why the owls deserve an attentive audience.

And, Mr. President, because the owls do deserve such an audience, I ask unanimous consent that the article to which I have referred in the July 31, 1985, New York Times entitled "Of Hawks, Doves—and, Now, Owls" and written by Nye, Allison, and Carnesale, be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, July 31, 1985]

OF HAWKS, DOVES—AND, NOW, OWLS

(By Joseph S. Nye, Graham T. Allison and Albert Carnesale)

(CAMBRIDGE, Mass.—Forty years ago, one bomb devastated Hiroshima. Today, there are more than 50,000 nuclear weapons, and a nuclear war could destroy civilization. Avoiding war has become a necessity. How? Hawks have had their say; doves, theirs. Now, listen to the owls.

Public debate focuses heavily on the number of weapons. Hawks fear that fewer on our side might raise the risk of war by tempting the Soviet Union to try to exploit what might look like a military advantage. They point to the weakness of the democracies in the 1930's and their failure to deter Hitler. The way to reduce the risk of nuclear war, hawks say, is to strengthen our arsenal. Their motto is "peace through strength," and Munich is their historical metaphor.

Doves believe that overarming increases the risk of war: Even though we might intend to deter the Russians by adding more weapons, we may increase their fear of attack and provoke them into rash action that could lead to war. Doves draw a lesson from 1941, when America cut off oil supplies to Japan in an effort to deter it from attacking Southeast Asia. Instead, this helped provoke the attack on Pearl Harbor.

Hawks and doves have a point. If we want to reduce war risks, we need policies that steer a middle course between the dangers of temptation and provocation. But the hawk-dove battle misses a more important point: If nuclear war breaks out, it may be less because of deliberate decisions than because events get out of control.

A nuclear weapon is like a crystal ball. Any sane leader can foresee the outcome of nuclear war. But a ball can be shattered by inadvertence.

Owls believe the greatest risks of such war come from events getting out of control. History is full of cases where rational decision-makers were tripped up by non-rational factors, with disastrous results. World War I is the owls' historical methaphor: Most leaders expected a short war, a quick return to business-as-usual. Instead, four years of carnage destroyed 20 million people, three empires and Europe's central position in the global balance of power.

Events get out of control various ways. During a crisis, mental stress can produce a breakdown. Stalin went into seclusion for weeks after Hilter's attack on the Soviet Union in 1941. Or in the heat of a crisis, complex organization may be difficult to control, as President John F. Kennedy discovered when a reconnaissance plane strayed over Soviet territory at the height of the Cuban missile crisis in 1962 Communications may be sent to the wrong place or misunderstood, as happened just before Pearl Harbor. Of course, accidents can happen. False alarms of nuclear attack have occurred. When there is time, we can correct the effects of faulty computer chips or sensors, but at the height of a crisis, there may be no time.

Faced with the dangers of inadvertent nuclear war, what is to be done? Some of the owls' steps would require Soviet cooperation—for example, regular bilateral talks on crisis prevention; establishment of additional hot lines among all five countries with nuclear arsenals; multinational measures against nuclear terrorists, and sanctions against nuclear proliferators; improvement of warning systems by placing unmanned tamper-proof sensors in each other's missile fields.

Owls want America to take some independent steps. We could install on nuclear weapons on naval ships electronic safety locks similar to those on land-based weapons; we could pull back from the East German-West German border the short-range nulcear artillery that would be difficult to control from Washington in a crisis; we could improve procedures for maintaining civilian control over nuclear weapons, we would prepare top leaders far better than we do for dealing with nuclear crises.

These are only a few of the owls' recommendations, the list can be expanded. Owls have no monopoly on wisdom. Hawks and doves also posess part of the truth, but their preoccupations have overly dominated national debate. If we are serious about reducing the risks of nuclear war, we should pay attention to owls.

MYTH OF THE DAY

Mr. PROXMIRE. The myth of the day today is that the Reagan administration has aggressively pursued alleged procurement abuses by defense contractors. Of approximately 400 incidents of suspected contract fraud uncovered by Pentagon auditors over the past 5 years, how many has this administration pushed to prosecution? Three hundred? No. Two hundred? No. One hundred? No. Fifty? No. The fact: only 11 of 400 incidents have resulted in prosecutions. This fact consigns to the shadowy realm of myth the President's oft repeated assertion that this administration was pursuing vigorously contractors who overcharged the Pentagon and that the administration should receive praise and not blame for uncovering payments of $600 for a toilet seat and $400 for a claw hammer.

As reported recently in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, James H. Curry, assistant inspector general at DOD, sent a memorandum to Inspector General Joseph Sherick, lamenting that "the detecting and reporting of fraud is a waste of time" because of the unlikelihood that contractors will be prosecuted.

Mr. President, let me repeat that. An internal memorandum in the inspector general's office from the assistant inspector general to Inspector General Sherick says that the detection and reporting of fraud in the Defense Department is a waste of time because of the unlikelihood that contractors will be prosecuted.

Who is to blame? According to a report issued in April by the Justice Department's Economic Crime Council, the Defense Department is at fault for referring an "alarmingly low" number of contract fraud cases, many of which were of poor quality, to the Justice Department for prosecution. Mr. Curry disputed the Justice Department's criticism, but responded: "What good is it to increase fraud referrals if nothing happens with the current referrals?"

Mr. Curry continued by stating that the failure to prosecute "regardless of blame, is undermining [the Defense Contract Audit Agency's] interest and support of * * * efforts to detect and prosecute procurement fraud."

Mr. President, this Senator does not know where the fault lies—whether with the Defense Department or the Justice Department—but he does know that President Reagan's assertion that his administration is tough on contractor abuses is a myth. It is a whale of a costly myth. It is costing the taxpayers of this Nation vast sums of money. Once again, it appears that the President is coated with impenetrable teflon. If the Defense Department could coat its missiles with that Reagan quality teflon, no defense could ever stop them. As the popular Washington euphemism has it, President Reagan is "detached" from a very real problem that demands his attention. It is time for him to convert myth into reality by directing the Defense Department and the Justice Department to stop pointing fingers at each other and put the finger on crooked defense contractors. Let's have fraudulent defense contractors prosecuted—all of them—not less than 3 percent.

DETROIT'S HOLOCAUST MUSEUM

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the Wall Street Journal of July 12 reported the success of the Holocaust Memorial Center in West Bloomfield, MI, in its first 7 months of operation.

Nearly 100,000 people have visited the museum since it opened its doors 7 months ago.

Rabbi Charles H. Rosenzvig, founder of the center, believes its success is due to an unprecedented level of interest in the Holocaust at this time.

Rabbi Rosenzvig, a Holocaust survivor himself, raised the $7 million necessary to build the center from private contributions. He remembers that 20 years ago he couldn't find the support for the project.

The architecture of the museum has been called striking for the feeling of the death camp experience it has given to visitors.

The building has been described as tomblike. The doors through which visitors enter remind many of the rough riding of the cattle cars that carried Jews to the camps.

The heart of the museum is videotaped interviews with Detroit area survivors of the Holocaust. Several years ago it would have been very difficult to get these people to speak openly about their experiences.

Rosenzvig believes survivors are more willing to speak about the death camps because the number of survivors is dwindling and "revisionist" historians have begun to claim that the Holocaust never happened.

The planners of the proposed Holocaust Museum in Washington have visited the Holocaust Memorial Center in Michigan to gather ideas. The two museums have the same objective of educating those who may know little about the Holocaust.

As each new generation is born, the memory of the Holocaust needs to be maintained and its lessons remembered. I applaud Rabbi Rosenzvig's accomplishment.

Mr. President, virtually every day in the major media in this country there are stories remembering the Holocaust or reporting the work of those committed to keeping its memory alive.

In the arts, the influence of the Holocaust is still strong. Think of all the popular books and movies that evidence the interest the American people have in the subject.

Ratification of the Genocide Treaty is a constructive act that we can take to show our determination that a Holocaust never occur again.

Ninety-six nations have already ratified the treaty. They must wonder why a nation that has always made much of its stand in protecting human rights would choose not to ratify this fundamental human rights treaty.

The Genocide Treaty has been reported to the Senate floor, now for the sixth time.

The treaty has enjoyed the support of every President since World War II.

Mr. President, we committed ourselves to taking up the Genocide Treaty early in the 99th Congress.

The International Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Genocide is now on the calendar.

We have waited 35 years for this.

There are many important issues to resolve this session. The Genocide Treaty must be one of them.

SEPTEMBER GOLDEN FLEECE TO NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF NEUROLOGICAL AND COMMUNICATIVE DISORDERS AND STROKE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I am awarding my Golden Fleece of the Month for September to the National Institute of Neurological and Communicative Disorders and Stroke, for tossing away $160,000 to study in part whether someone can "hex" an opponent during a strength test by drawing an X in front of his opponent's chest. Look out, Hercules, here comes the 98-pound weakling who is good at drawing X's in the air.

Those bulging biceps and swollen pectorals can be pounded into submission by a hocus-pocus move. That is a thesis the Institute is testing with taxpayers' money. We have had voodoo economics, now we may get voodoo physiology.

The Institute is paying to determine whether a hulking, muscle-bound subject will lose in a strength test, like arm wrestling, to an obviously weaker opponent. That opponent, however, knows a secret—making an X causes those muscles to turn into jelly.

The Institute is sponsoring a series of tests. In one case, the spaghetti arms will be tested against the hulk's without performing the X. Other times, they will use this secret technique and see if they do better.

The X is not the only technique which will be tested. On other occasions, the wimps while gently resisting defeat will concentrate on sapping their opponent's energy as their opponents become weaker, weaker, weaker. This Senator has a different idea of whose strength is being sapped—the taxpayers' by the Institute.

On second thought, maybe the Secretary of Defense should be involved in this study. Think of the money we could save if we bought the X instead of the MX.

This Senator thinks that the only people who will really be pinned as a result of this study are the taxpayers, because the Institute has already put the hex on them. Clearly, taxpayers and vital health research have been double-crossed.

In a memo justifying support for the project the Institute states:

* * * The phenomenon under investigation cannot be understood or explained by information currently available and it is of obvious interest to determine what other heretofore unknown factors or mechanisms significantly influence muscle strength and movement, particularly as they relate to diseases such as cerebral palsy, Parkinsonism, and stroke.

The United States is faced with many serious health problems and a staggering deficit that limits the amount of money we can spend. It is important that limited medical research dollars be spent as wisely as possible.

No one can deny that cerebral palsy, Parkinson disease and stroke are serious health problems which must be addressed through private and Government research. But in this time of severe economic distress, this Senator can only ask: is this particular expenditure the best approach for solving these problems.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SYMMS). Under the previous order, there will not be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond 1 p.m., with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

H.R. 1460, THE ANTI-APARTHEID ACTION ACT OF 1985

INVOLVEMENT OR RETRENCHMENT?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I would like to go on record as a vigorous opponent of this bill for two reasons: First, I believe it would be counterproductive in terms of helping South African blacks, and second, its net effect is not in the best interest of our national security.

There are two basic schools of thought on how the United States can best encourage the South African Government to dismantle the abhorrent and immoral system of apartheid. On the one hand, there are those who believe that sanctions are the answer. Mr. President, the bottom line of those who favor imposing sanctions against South Africa can be summed up in one word: "retrenchment." The retrenchers believe that we can punish South Africa, thereby inducing that country to reform.

A recent 700-page study by Gary Clyde Hufbauer and Jeffrey J. Schott entitled, "Economic Sanctions Reconsidered," indicates that sanctions are not as effective a foreign policy tool as one would think. Hufbauer and Schott conclude that:

Policymakers need to take a close look at the cost and effectiveness of sanctions when designing foreign policy strategy. . . . In most cases, sanctions do not contribute very much to the achievement of foreign policy goals.

The authors contend that economic sanctions may be successful in situations involving small target countries and modest policy goals. Mr. President, ending apartheid is clearly not a modest policy goal but a major undertaking. Let us look at four major limitations on the use of sanctions that Hufbauer and Schott discovered in their study:

First. The sanctions imposed may simply be inadequate to achieve the objectives sought—the goals may be too elusive, the means too gentle, or cooperation from other countries, when needed, too tepid.

Second. Sanctions may create their own antidotes. In particular, economic sanctions may unify the target country both in support of the Government and in search of commercial alternatives.

Third. Sanctions may prompt powerful allies of the target country to lend support, largely offsetting whatever deprivation results from the sanctions themselves.

Fourth. Economic sanctions create their own backlash, abroad and at home. Allies abroad may simply not share the goals of the sender country, the backlash from the sender's allies may be exacerbated if attempts are made to enforce the sanctions on an extraterritorial basis.

After an analysis of 103 cases of sanctions imposed since 1914, including such major episodes as the grain embargo and the Soviet gas pipeline cases, the authors of this monumental study conclude that "sanctions are a decreasingly useful instrument."

Mr. President, I believe the measures outlined in this bill would not only be ineffective; they would actually backfire and harm South African blacks. If we reduce our level of economic involvement with South Africa, blacks and other disadvantaged groups will be the ones who pay the price.

There is a second school of thought which maintains that the most effective means of helping South African blacks is increased involvement in South Africa. Contrary to what some have claimed, this does not mean getting into bed with supporters of apartheid. Just the opposite. Constructive engagement means actively working for fundamental reform at all levels of South African society. In so doing, we need to send a strong, clear and consistent message to all South Africans: apartheid is reprehensible. Our objective is to encourage the acceleration of reform.

Mr. President, a legitimate question that South African moderates have raised during the past year is, why are other countries considering imposing sanctions now—precisely when the South African Government has taken concrete steps to dismantle apartheid? These key changes include:

First, the rise of the black trade union movement. Just 6 years ago, black trade unions were illegal, unrecognized, and had no bargaining status whatsoever. Now they are legal, growing strong, and becoming increasingly sophisticated. All reference to race, color, and sex has been removed from each and every piece of South African labor legislation;

Second, the adoption of a new South African Constitution. In November 1983 a national referendum was conducted in which the then all-white electorate overwhelmingly approved a new South African Constitution which extends the franchise to Asians and coloreds for the first time in the country's history;

Third, the establishment of a multiracial, tricameral Parliament in which whites, coloreds and Asians enjoy equal franchise and participate jointly in the executive and legislative functions of the national government for the first time. So far, blacks have not yet been included at this level, but State President Pieter W. Botha has called for negotiations with black leaders to develop constitutional mechanisms for blacks' political participation;

Fourth, the acceptance by the Government of the permanance of the urban black population;

Fifth, the discontinuation of resettling black communities—the so-called black spot policy;

Sixth, black's increasing share of the country's income. The black share of national income rose from 26 percent in 1970 to 40 percent in 1980. The 1985 black share of national income is nearly 50 percent. By 1982, South African blacks owned 227,000 cars, up 16 percent from 1977, and finally,

Seventh, the reduction of many aspects of so-called petty apartheid. For instance, laws which placed restrictions on interracial sport have been amended. Multiracial sport is now at the discretion of individual clubs. Laws forbidding interracial marriage have also been scrapped.

Mr. President, these changes are not sufficient. But taken collectively, they do indicate a trend toward reform. I believe that white South Africans are more ready for change now than at any time in that nation's history. Admittedly, there is still a group of hardline Afrikaaners who fear sharing power with blacks. Significantly, however, a fundamental shift has taken place in South African internal politics: the debate is no longer over whether or not apartheid should be abolished, but rather how and at what pace reform should be accomplished. Paradoxically, if the United States turns its back on moderate South Africans who are committed to the reform process, we play into the hands of the minority of South Africans who wish to slow the process of change.

I firmly believe that the key to bringing about peaceful, fundamental reform in South Africa is economic growth.

Interestingly, Mr. President, the Washington Post has made this very point. In an editorial dated June 5, 1985; the Post writes:

It is . . . the country's economy (that) is its most effective engine of social transformation, compelling whites to grant blacks precisely the training and education, the livelihood and personal rewards, the choices of where to live and work, the associations and organizations, the sense of their own power and community, that apartheid would deny them.

For the benefit of my colleagues I ask unanimous consent that this editorial be printed in the RECORD in its entirety.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SOUTH AFRICAN SANCTIONS

Proposals in Congress to vote sanctions against South Africa were lagging until President Reagan imposed sanctions against Nicaragua. As a result of this seeming burden of consistency, the House may approve for the first time, on Thursday, a package of economic restrictions against the practitioners of apartheid. If that happens, it will be a mistake.

The case for sanctions is that white minority rule is at once so odious and so powerful that it must be moved and can only be moved by extraordinary economic pressures applied from the outside. Not to attack apartheid in this fashion, it is asserted, is moral and political appeasement. That the intended beneficiaries may also suffer is set down as a price they are prepared to pay.

But there is a serious, respectable, nonracist case against sanctions. It is that the country's economy is its most effective engine of social transformation, compelling whites to grant blacks precisely the training and education, the livelihood and personal rewards, the choices of where to live and work, the associations and organizations, the sense of their own power and community, that apartheid would deny them. And South Africa's place in the world economy, and especially the high-tech, democratic, politically responsive parts of the world economy, is a prime spur to this process.

All of this is understood perfectly well by the sponsors of the sanction legislation. That is why they have quietly designed the particulars of their bill to make the minimal impact on black jobs and opportunities consistent with sending South Africa a political message. In short, the best thing about the bill is that its effect will be largely symbolic. But that does not make it wise public policy.

The legislation is widely seen, by Democrats, as a rebuke to the Reagan administration's policy of "constructive engagement." That it would be. But it would be a poorly aimed rebuke. The type of engagement that widens blacks' economic advantages and openings is the good kind. What deserves to be criticized in the administration's policy but is not attacked by this bill is the bad kind: the kind that lets too many South Africans ask whether the United States is serious about apartheid, the kind that has American diplomats seem more often to be apologizing for apartheid than demanding its abolition.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, Chief Gatsha Buthelizi, the leader of South Africa's largest black ethnic group, the Zulu, and the president of a mass political movement known as Inkatha, made this point in his February 1985 meeting with President Reagan. Chief Butheleze told the President:

I speak for millions when I say that we see tactical and strategic advantages in a rapidly growing economy . . . the non-violent transition from apartheid society to a society based on the principles of open democracy will be greatly enhanced by a sustained high rate of economic growth. Disinvest ment and the economic isolation of South Africa will bring about increased immediate hardships and starvation and will increase disease in the short term, without medium-term and long-term gains to balance deprivation and suffering. Finally, Mr. President, a black South African businessman summed up the situation when he said, "The vote and starvation is of absolutely no interest.

This bill is what I call the salami approach to disengagement: We slice off a little bit this year, and then another piece next year, and so forth. If this bill becomes law, a year from now the Members of this body could very well be debating the disinvestment option. A number of surveys canvassing urban South African black opinion on this issue of disinvestment have shown that an overwhelming majority oppose the strategy. Internationally recognised sociologist Prof. Lawrence Schlemmer, director of the Centre for Applied Social Studies at the University of Natal, showed in one report that 75 percent of working blacks oppose disinvestment. The South African economy must grow by 5 to 6 percent each year in order to create 250,000 new jobs for young blacks. Instead of reducing our involvement in South Africa, we should increase our level of involvement.

An example of the type of involvement I am talking about is the positive initiatives of the nearly 300 U.S. businesses which operate in South Africa. These American firms employ approximately 120,000 South African blacks. Mr. President, I think it is fair to say that U.S. companies operating in South Africa have made a significant positive impact in terms of assisting South African blacks in their struggle for equality. The vast majority, over 70 percent, of South Africans who work for American companies in South Africa are employed by firms that voluntarily adhere to a code of employment conduct established by Rev. Leon H. Sullivan in 1977, known as the Sullivan principles. These companies have committed themselves to nondiscrimination in the workplace and to upgrading the working conditions, skills, and earning levels of their nonwhite employees. When the Senate considered an earlier version of this bill, S. 995, I made a detailed statement explaining why I believe the key to the success of the Sullivan signatories' efforts is the spirit of voluntarism at work. The bill before us today would make a code of employment principles mandatory. There are a number of reasons why this would be counterproductive, but I will not detail them at this time. However, I would refer my colleagues to my earlier statement if they have questions on this matter.

I would like to emphasize the positive role that U.S. businesses have played in South Africa. From 1977–84 U.S. firms spent $100 million in South Africa in the fields of housing, education, training, supervisory/managment development, black entrepreneurship, health, and fair labor employment practices. Sullivan signatories have lobbied for changes in discriminatory legislation, increased the proportion of black workers in supervisory positions, provided common medical, pension and insurance plans to all employees, instituted large-scale training programs for black workers, increased average black employee wages faster than for white employees, and supported public interest law firms which defend legal rights for black South Africans.

Specific initiatives by U.S. businesses include the establishment of PACE Commercial College by the American Chamber of Commerce in South Africa. PACE educates blacks in Soweto, the black township outside Johannesburg, for careers in business. The $6 million school includes 28 classrooms, an assembly hall, a library, a kitchen, a canteen, a gymnasium, and a wide variety of sports facilities. According to the American Chamber of Commerce in South Africa, PACE is the first school in Soweto to have a fully equipped theater, the first to introduce physical education into the curriculum, and the first to serve a balanced midday meal to all pupils and staff from its own kitchens. Tuition for students to attend PACE comes from donations from some 200 companies, trusts, and individuals. About half of these are South African and about half are American.

Mr. President, another innovative project funded by U.S. businesses in South Africa is the Build a Better Society Program known as BABS, which is funded in part by Mobil Corp. The objective of BABS is to promote grassroots resident action among the people of South Africa in order to improve the quality of life, to develop leadership for community problem-solving and to further the concept of equality by bringing about structural change. In June 1982 BABS completed a $1.3 million housing project outside of Capetown consisting of 50 housing units and a community center. This $1.3 million project was entirely funded by Mobil.

I understand that another U.S. company, General Motors, spends roughly $4 million a year on training and social programs for blacks, including the Adopt-A-School Program which provides facilities, support for teachers, libraries, and audio-visual aids to schools.

U.S. businesses have also made an impact in the political arena. For example, in 1982 the South African Government put forth an onerous piece of legislation entitled the "Orderly Movement and Settlement of Black Persons" law. The purpose of this measure was to control the movement of blacks to and from urban areas. The U.S. business community strongly and directly criticized this reprehensible piece of legislation and the bill was withdrawn.

A further example of the catalytic effort by U.S. companies occurred in January of this year when six major South African employer groups, including Afrikaaner and black groups, issued a manifesto opposing apartheid, calling on Pretoria to broaden political and economic participation for the black majority.

Finally, Sullivan signatory companies took an important additional step last December. They pledged publicly to work directly for the elimination of apartheid. As a result of such commitments, U.S. companies having operations in South Africa have become agents for social change—a fact acknowledged by both nonwhite South Africans and the South African Government.

Mr. President, some U.S. business leaders have said that, frankly, their operations in South Africa have a 1 percent profit factor and a 10 percent hassle factor. If we increase this hassle factor by, for instance, imposing a mandatory set of employment principles, some U.S. companies active in South Africa may come to the conclusion that it is simply not worth the trouble to operate there. This would undoubtedly impose a hardship on those South African blacks who are employed by U.S. firms—not to mention the rest of the black population which benefits from the spillover effect of U.S. business presence in South Africa.

Let me turn briefly to South Africa's geopolitical significance. The economies of 14 nations in the African subcontinents are critically dependent upon economic relations with the Republic of South Africa. The Republic of South Africa plays the leading commercial and development role in sub-Saharan Africa. The Republic of South Africa accounts for: 77 percent of the region's total of gross national product—1980; 77 percent of all the electricity generated in the region—1980; 97 percent of all the coal mined in the region—1980; 98 percent of the iron ore mined in the region—1980; 70 percent of the corn grown in the region—1980; 87 percent of the wheat grown in the region—1980; and 67 percent of the sugar crop in the region—1979.

The South African economy provides hundreds of thousands of jobs for workers from neighboring black-ruled states. Approximately 350,000 people from black-ruled countries neighboring South Africa work legally in South Africa. Assuming that each of these 350,000 workers supports a family of five, approximately 2,100,000 people in the region are dependent for their livelihoods upon jobs provided by the South African economy.

South Africa's neighbors depend on the South African gold mining industry; 12 percent of the gross national product of Mozambique is earned by Mozambiquans working in South African gold mines; 51 percent of Lesotho's gross national product is earned by the 104,000 Lesotho miners working in South African gold mines.

Again, Mr. President, my basic point is that any step which would retard South Africa's economic growth would have negative repercussions not only for South African blacks, but for the entire region of southern Africa. This would play directly into the hands of the Soviet-backed African National Congress, which seeks to make South Africa "ungovernable." At this point,

Mr. President, I would like to insert into the RECORD an article from Clarion Call, which is published by Chief Buthelezi's Kwa Zulu government. The title of the article is, "The ANC does not consult Blacks in South Africa." In this article Chief Buthelezi makes the point that, "those who favour the armed struggle and those who favour the employment of violence to make South Africa ungovernable are the ones who scream out disinvestment slogans to the West."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Clarion Call, Vol. 3, 1985]

THE ANC DOES NOT CONSULT BLACKS IN SOUTH AFRICA

The congress held in Zambia recently by the ANC Mission-in-Exile—Its second since the 1960's—was not a "people's" congress where South African Blacks were represented.

Chief M. G. Buthelezi told the Inkatha conference delegates—to loud applause—that the ANC congress was a conference "of those who claim to be our representatives . . ."

The ANC Mission-in-Exile's delegates . . . are faceless nobodies we not whom. They do not report to us because they disown us," he said. (The ANC Mission-in-Exile has opted for an armed struggle, Inkatha for nonviolence and peaceful change.)

It was all a "deep Black South African tragedy" because having met in secret about secret agendas, the ANC members in exile would "strut about the capitals of the world puffing out their chests as though they have consulted with Black South Africa."

Chief Buthelezi said he did not deny the Mission-in-Exile's role in the struggle for liberation.

"But we hate White supremacy as much as we would reject Black supremacy if it were to replace White supremacy".

He had never sought confrontation with the Mission-in-Exile . . . but the fact of the matter was that the ANC had now turned to killing those who disagreed with them.

Chief Buthelezi then read to the Inkatha conference messages that the ANC Mission-in-Exile has recently been broadcasting to Black South Africa.

He said the ANC Mission-in-Exile's message to Black South Africa was "no more than a declaration of war on Inkatha . . ."

No matter what media-created leaders proclaimed, Inkatha, with its more than one million paid-up members remained the most authentic voice of the people in South Africa.

In an address immediately following the Inkatha conference, Chief Buthelezi said he believed the United States, "the greatest democracy in the world", looked as though it was heading towards "unforgiveably" mismanaging its influence.

Speaking to a group of influential American visitors at Ulundi he said:

"I fear that the United States is rapidly approaching the point when it will join the South African Government in mismanaging the factors of success."

"It can run rampant over neighbouring States without the permission of the electorate. It does not seek mandates to destroy democracy. It does not need mandates to fly against every accepted norm which Western civilised countries so value."

Americans did not hear him, he added, when he said that there were very real prospects of White South Africans driven to scorched earth policies.

Whites in South Africa should, instead, be steered away from traditional White tolerance of Government action—"which has for so long relied on police brutality".

"This cannot be done by brutalising them in the same way as South African Governments have always brutalised Blacks.

"The escalation of violence, both on the part of the State and by those who oppose the State, can only lead to ever diminishing prospects of salvaging this country from destruction.

"I am not heard in the United States when I say that we must increase White dependency on Blacks. That we must tip the scales even further in favour of the politics of negotiation. That we must increase Black bargaining power and that these things must be done by increasing the rate of industrialisation in South Africa.

"I am not heard in the United States when I say that those who are bent upon destroying democracy with violence; those who are bent upon making political killings every-day events; those who favour the armed struggle and that those who favour the employment of violence to make this country ungovernable, are the ones who scream out disinvestment slogans to the West."

Violence was flaring across the length and breadth of the country. It was what some called "constructive" violence against apartheid.

"The majority of acts of political violence in South Africa today are acts of violence by Blacks against Blacks," Chief Buthelezi emphasised.

"The ANC's Mission-in-Exile is daily broadcasting and exhorting our youth to kill for political purposes. Our youth are daily being exhorted to kill town Councillors and others with whom they disagree politically."

There were fronts in the country committed to making the country ungovernable and that Americans should not be blind to the fact that they were not going to do so by increasing the forces of democracy.

"Scripts are now being written for the destruction of democratic decency in this country," he said.

"There are forces right now driving to destroy the economic growth base of our country and the end product of the undermining of democracy and the destruction of the economy will be ungovernability in the true sense of the word—not ungovernability for the National Party but ungovernability for whoever may seek to govern.

Chief Buthelezi said that he was also not heard in the United States when he said that those who called for disinvestment and the politics of violence did not have membership-based organisations.

Americans did not listen to him when he said he held mass rallies at which tens of thousands of people—the majority of whom were workers—roared their support for his stand against disinvestment and violence.

If democracy was ever to become a reality, if South African society was ever to be normalised, the politics of national reconciliation would have to succeed.

He pointed out that history had shown that in their struggles, Black Americans did not seek to destroy American society, they sought entry into it.

"Black Americans did not seek to destroy civilised values, they sought to implement them. Black South Africans seek the same," he concluded.

He added that he was not heard in the United States when he said that apartheid was far more vulnerable to democratic opposition now than it had ever been before.

Apartheid was certainly far more vulnerable to democratic opposition than it was to the politics of violence.

"I am not heard when I say that the scales are tipping in favour of the politics of negotiation and that America—more than any other time in history—should be strengthening the democratic process.

"The United States should be strengthening the circumstances which favour the continued growth of democratic opposition to apartheid. It should be strengthening those who have made it their task to hold political violence at bay and to employ the forces of democracy to bring about real change. . ."

He was speaking, among others, to: Mr W Keys, Chairman, Black Political Action Committee (BLACKPAC), Mr J Parker, President, Lincoln Institute for Research and Education, Mr J Kendricks, Executive Vice-President Gencore Corporation, Secretary BLACKPAC, Mr J Watkins, Executive Member Ben Franklin Society and Mr E Alexander, Managing Director of the Jet Engine Testing Corporation.

Chief Buthelezi said that in South Africa racial prejudice had authored one of the most rejected forms of society known in the modern world.

INKATHA TO INVESTIGATE OPENING TO ALL RACES

The decision by the PFP to open its membership to all race groups was applauded by Inkatha, said Chief Buthelezi.

Its parliamentary role demanded that this be done.

Inkatha would now have to think deeply about whether or not to throw open its doors to all races following the scrapping of the Political Interference Act.

"The history of the struggle for liberation has shown the difficulty with which Black organizations open their doors to all races, "Chief Buthelezi told the conference.

"In part the split between the ANC has experienced for so long have roots in this issue. In part the very real difficulties between AZAPO and the UDF have roots in this issue."

Hinting as the possibility of a future alliance he said the PFP, with a new multiracial membership, may yet find that it needed partnerships with Black organizations which elected Black leaders.

The National Party could also find such partnerships necessary "if ever it turns to facing up to the need for fundamental change. . . "

"My own political initiative sense tells me that it would be foolhardly for Inkatha to rush into hasty decisions in this regard. I believe we must feel our way into the future as a Black organization.

"Inkatha is adamantly opposed to any form of racism in government. I have no objection basically to Inkatha opening its doors to all races right now, but I think we need time to make up our minds. There is a role that we have played as Blacks and we will have to decide when it is wise for use to open our doors to all race groups."

The Central Committee of Inkatha was mandated by the delegates to "carefully examine" the difficulties which Black organizations has experienced in the past when they had thrown open their doors to other race groups and to advise next year's conference of their findings.

The conference called in another resolution for the PFP and Inkathan not only to continue with their dialogue, which had been ongoing for years, but to "deepen it and broaden it." This would include exploring ways and means of increasing constituency contact between the PFP and Inkatha.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am sure that my colleagues are well aware of South Africa's strategic importance to the West. The Western industrial world depends heavily on South Africa for chrome, manganese, vanadium, and platinum. A major disruption in the supply of these minerials would have a disastrous impact on oil refining and the production of a variety of speciality steels needed in such industries as aerospace and machine tools. If the Soviets were to gain control over South Africa, together with their own resources, they would have available 80 percent of the world's gold production, 76 percent of its chrome production, 90 percent of its production of metals in the platinum group, 80 percent of the production of manganese, and 80 percent of the world's production of vanadium. In addition, the Soviets would control the Cape of Good Hope, which is the world's busiest sea lane. Over half of Western Europe's oil, more than 7 million barrels a day, goes by supertanker past South Africa, while over one-fifth of all U.S. oil imports travel through the Cape.

Mr. President, there are those who say that constructive engagement is not working. I say it is precisely because the United States is having an impact in bringing about peaceful, democratic change that the Soviets would like to see us disengaged from South Africa. Their goal is to isolate South Africa economically, which in turn would result in rising black unemployment and increased unrest. This would provide fertile ground for those who seek violent revolution instead of peaceful reform. If we in the U.S. Senate are serious about helping South African blacks, and at the same time seek to preserve our national security interests, we will promote greater U.S. involvement in South Africa, not retrenchment. In a nutshell, the Salami approach to disengagement would be disastrous. I urge my colleagues to reject this ill-conceived measure.

SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, it is encouraging that President Reagan has finally come to see that sanctions against South Africa are appropriate and necessary. However, the set of measures outlined in the Presidential decree are inadequate for a variety of reasons.

The conference committee report that was approved by the House and is now awaiting approval by the Senate was a product of bipartisan compromise.

In spite of the fact that the situation in South Africa has worsened with each passing day, the sanctions proposed by the President are even weaker than those contained in the less stringent Senate bill. Failing to vote on the conference report and allowing the implementation of less stringent sanctions at a time when the South African Government has resorted to unprecedented and brutal repression would send the wrong signal to the South African Government and to the world.

There are a number of problems with the Executive order issued by the President:

First, the provisions relating to Krugerrands are ambiguous. The Executive order provides that the ban on Krugerrand sales is subject to GATT approval but under GATT, the United States could take such an action unilaterally and the South Africans would then be entitled to retaliate. Thus, GATT approval is not necessary to implement the Krugerrand ban. Second, and most important, the Presidential decree abolishes the trigger mechanism contained in the conference report. That bill contained a provision that if no significant progress was made in abolishing apartheid in 1 year, additional sanctions, such as ban on new investment, denial of most-favored-nation status, and a prohibition on coal and uranium imports, would be activated. The threat of those further sanctions is a critical policy tool in continuing to put pressure on South Africa to change. Third, the ban on transfers of nuclear technology contains significant loopholes that are not contained in the conference committee report and were in fact rejected by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

During the time since the state of emergency was declared, official figures indicate that 650 people have died, 3,000 have been arrested. Virtually the entire leadership of the multiracial nonviolent organization, the United Democratic Front, has been detained without charges or is on trial for high treason. The South African Government has been called reformist but is a government reformist which arrests young children for boycotting schools that perpetuate the myth of their own inferiority? Is a government reformist which arrests people who protest the prosecution of an 8-year-old boy? Is a government reformist which imprisons black leaders such as the Reverend Allan Boesak and Bishop Trevor Tutu who advocate nonviolent change?

Time is running out. We have a unique opportunity today to take measures that will place the maximum amount of pressure on the South African Government to change. Failure to press for change could have disastrous and divisive consequence not only for South Africa but for our country as well. I urge that we vote on and pass the conference committee report.

THE PRESIDENT'S EXECUTIVE ORDER ON SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I shall vote against cloture today. It is not that the issue of South Africa needs more debate; rather, it is that the real issue needs to be understood, and that it be identified clearly in the minds of the American people. And, Mr. President, this is one issue that has been overtaken by events, namely, by the President's action in signing the Executive order this morning. By voting against cloture, we will demonstrate that there is no necessity to move to a final vote on the conference report.

Why is there no necessity for a final vote? Because the President's action already provides the symbolic stand against apartheid that the sponsors of this legislation say they desire. I would feel better about this action if the United States were not involved at all. The activities of the South African Government are the internal domestic affairs of that country. They do not threaten the peace of the world in any degree whatsoever. They do not threaten the security interests of the United States at all.

What does threaten U.S. security interests is the destabilization of the entire African continent being directed by the Soviet Union and its allies. The Soviets openly seek to destroy the pro-Western Government of South Africa in order to deny the geopolitical advantages of its strategic location and its mineral wealth to the West. They also wish to destroy a free-market oriented economy that stands as an affront to the socialist economies of the rest of Africa. They want to destroy the example of a country which, when compared to the rest of Africa, has far more individual and political freedoms than any country on the continent. Of course, it does not have the range of freedoms which the United States enjoys, but neither does South Africa have the relative degree of population homogeneity which the United States enjoys. Nevertheless there is not another country south of the Sahara which comes close.

The facts about the African National Congress have been well documented. Our distinguished colleague from Alabama [Mr. DENTON] has carefully demonstrated the factual basis of the connection between Moscow and the ANC. It is fashionable to talk of the ANC as though it were an organization fighting for human rights; but we have seen in too many other nations when the Communist definition of human rights prevails.

The success of the current destabilization process being directed at South Africa depends very much upon the adoption of the conference report as reported to this body. In the first place, it is important for the destabilizers to neutralize the United States in the quest to bring down the South African Government. The conference report not only withdraws U.S. policy support from South Africa in sweeping terms; it also attempts to dictate fine points of domestic South African policy in a manner which the United States itself would never accept. It is cast in the iron mold of ideology, and bound in the chains of hostility.

I recognize that the sponsors of the conference report profess no such aims. I am talking about the practical result such a bill must bring. I am speaking from the recent history of such attempts to dictate so-called reform.

Does any one among us want another Iran?

Does any one think that Nicaragua is better off than before we dictated reform?

Is Zimbabwe better off under Mugabe, who has imprisoned and exiled his democratic opponents and slaughtered 40,000 of their followers in the past 2 years?

Is that the kind of reform we want for South Africa?

Mr. President, I am convinced that that is the kind of reform we would get under the conference report.

It seems never to be noticed that the situation in South Africa is not whites killing blacks, but blacks killing blacks.

It is not a case of a repressed populace exploding against their masters, but a campaign of terrorism directed primarily against the majority of blacks who reject violent revolution. It is a planned and organized campaign of terrorism which has as its purpose the disorientation and alienation of the majority of the black people. It is a campaign directed and organized by cruel men without mercy, men who are willing to kill and maim other black people, to see their jobs destroyed, their families destroyed, and their lives destroyed, just in order to achieve an ideological goal.

That is why the President has rejected economic sanctions against South Africa. He has rejected the prospect that he must stop commercial investment within a year if South Africa fails certain political standards. He has rejected the idea that we must stop trading with South Africa on a most-favored-nation basis if South Africa does not meet certain ideological standards of social organization.

The President's plan shows much more flexibility. He forbids commercial bank loans to the South African Government and to its entities. On a practical basis, most U.S. banks have stopped such loans anyway. I would have preferred not to see this action, nevertheless, because of the delicacy of the international financial situation. We have showed much greater concern for the financial condition of many Communist countries whose human rights records are unspeakable. At least, however, he includes an exemption for Government loans that will increase the economic opportunity of those disadvantaged by apartheid. This is as it should be. The cure for apartheid is economic opportunity, which will create—and has created—an irrestible pressure for political reforms.

The President's plan stops computer sales to the military and apartheid-enforcing agencies, just as the conference report does. Of course, computers have long been banned anyway to the military and to the police under the sanctions which have existed for many years. What the President does is to pinpoint the Nation's moral indignation directly at apartheid.

The President's plan also bans the export of nuclear materials to South Africa, but unlike the conference report, it precludes a ban which would undercut the international atomic energy safeguards against nuclear proliferation.

Finally, Mr. President, it should be noted that the President includes full support for the Sullivan Code principles, but without trying to fine-tune them down to the last comma.

Of course, the President also directs the Secretary of State to ensure that all agencies of the United States comply with these principles as well.

Mr. President, the remaining two issues are those of banning the importation of Krugerrands, and minting a U.S. gold coin. The President agrees with those of us who feel that the ban on Krugerrands is contrary to our international trade relations under GATT, and he asks for consultation with GATT on this matter. As for the minting of U.S. gold coins, I have long advocated a gold coinage for the United States; but I believe that it should be done for its own sake, and not as a response to a foreign policy issue. I agree that the Secretary of the Treasury should be consulted, but I would also urge comprehensive legislation, such as I have introduced in the past, with appropriate and extensive hearings on the matter.

In short, then, the President's plan shows much more flexibility, is less likely to destabilize South Africa, and omits the severe economic sanctions that would have resulted in the paralysis of the South African economy, and the loss of jobs and livelihoods for millions of black South Africans. Moreover, it divests the proposal of the politics and ideology which marred the attempt to create a policy which all Americans could support.

What will come out of this is a unified policy approach to South Africa which will urge the South Africans to find a framework for political expression without destroying the nation. It will provide a framework in which South Africa can retain strong ties to the West, and block Communist and Soviet expansionism in Africa.

Mr. President, the leaders of the black peoples in South Africa have said over and over again that they see no necessity to make the black people suffer in order to get political reform.

Mr. President, earlier this year, about 2,000 workers and Inkatha supporters demonstrated at the home of the U.S. Consul-General in Durban. They presented Mr. Harry Geisel, our Consul-General, with a petition signed by 10,000 blacks which protested U.S. disinvestment from South Africa.

The leader of this protest was Mr. Winnington Sabelo, a member of the Central Committee of Inkatha which is headed by the internationally respected Zulu leader, Chief Minister Gatsha Buthelezi, who is the Chief Minister of Kwazulu in South Africa. As Mr. Sabelo presented the petition to Mr. Geisel, he stated that "We want jobs, help us to get them. Disinvestment will kill us."

In a reply to press questions at the demonstration, Mr. Sabelo stated that Bishop Tutu, who was known to have urged disinvestment, did not speak on behalf of millions of black workers. Indeed, several placards carried at the demonstration stated similar themes. For example, one read, "When did the masses call for disinvestment?" In a direct reference to Bishop Tutu another placard declared that, "The clergy are not the workers nor political leaders."

Mr. President, Senators should note Prince Buthelezi's clear position on the role of Bishop Tutu. In mid May of this year, at the "KwaZulu Day of Prayer for Black South Africa," Chief Minister Buthelezi stated that Inkatha had little hope that Bishop Tutu would work effectively for reconciliation between black and black. He stated that:

> We do not have to read about Bishop Tutu's actions or to be told about them. We experience denigration which he has hurled at us so often from public platforms both here and abroad.

Mr. President, another figure to whom the media has given undue attention is Mrs. Winnie Mandela. How often in recent weeks has she been portrayed in the most glowing terms as a leader of black opinion in South Africa. That her husband has encouraged violence in South Africa, in line with orthodox Marxist-Leninist ideology, has not dimmed the mythology about the couple which has been circulated in the press.

It would be well to reflect on Chief Minister Buthelezi's comments on Mrs. Mandela and her political line in the same speech given on the KwaZulu Day of Prayer at Ulundi. Chief Minister Buthelezi stated that he believed the key to Mrs. Mandela's "political destitution and her impoverished view of South Africa" was her statement that,

. . . the culture that made us and the culture that alone can save us is not ours anymore . . .

Chief Minister Buthelezi stressed that:

It is culture that distinguishes man from beast, it is culture that turns us into people with human qualities created by God. It is cultural integrity and cultural values which make us walk tall as human beings and relate to others.

He continued by stating that:

Culture cements human beings into cohesive achievement-oriented communities seeking higher goals than those of the beasts. Culture is not an insular thing which divides one group from another.

Chief Minister Buthelezi stated that:

If Mrs. Winnie Mandela was a true black; if she was an African, she would not despise the people around her like she despises me. I have never met such an African defeatist attitude before as I have met in Mrs. Madela. It is those who have abandoned their blackness and who have abandoned their African stature that crawl in the gutters of politics. . . . Those who work to destroy unity are an alien evil force among us.

Chief Minister Buthelezi condemned outbreaks of violence and those who encouraged black children to go on rampages of violence. He stated:

And when they do so in the name of the struggle for liberation, and when they are lauded as being a new breed of South Africans with iron in their souls and when they are presented as an advance guard of the African National Congress' Mission in Exile, the pain in my being becomes unbearable.

Mr. President, Chief Minister Buthelezi, before the Legislative Assembly in KwaZulu this year, addressed a number of issues in a frank and responsible manner. He stated that:

I am prepared to talk about power-sharing without insisting on one-man, one vote in a unitary state. I ask simply that the South African government declare its intention of talking about an alternative to a one-man, one-vote in a unitary state with Black South Africa.

In terms of the current constitutional arrangement, Chief Minister Buthelezi stressed that:

We must seek an alternative political system in which universal adult sufferage is expressed in constitutional terms acceptible to all the People of South Africa. Power-sharing within the framework of the present constitution is not possible . . . power-sharing will only have meaning for blacks when they share power at central government level.

Mr. President, there can be no question about Chief Minister Buthelezi's credentials as a leader in South Africa. He is the preeminent leader of the Zulus who number between 6 and 7 million and who constitute the largest black national grouping. He is a responsible man with a strong Christian commitment. He is a man who seeks to engage in the process of negotiation and reconciliation in order to achieve a just solution and constructive progress in South Africa.

Mr. President, so that our colleagues may benefit from a careful review of the position of Inkatha on the question of disinvestment, I ask unanimous consent that the petition presented by Inkatha to our Consul-General in Durban be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. President, so that our colleagues may benefit from a careful review of the position of Chief Minister Buthelezi on the matter of negotiations with the South African Government, I ask unanimous consent that the "Declaration of Intent" issued by Chief Minister Buthelezi before the KwaZulu Legislative Assembly on May 27, 1985, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition and the declaration were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ANTI-DISINVESTMENT PETITION TO THE U.S. GOVERNMENT

The following is the text of the petition delivered by workers and Inkatha supporters to the U.S. Government:

We as leaders elected to positions of authority in Inkatha, have a mandate to speak on behalf of Black South Africa.

This is evident because:

1. Inkatha is the largest Black political organisation ever to have emerged in the history to South Africa and has a paid up membership of nearly one million.

2. Inkatha's leaders are elected to office by its Annual General Conference which is attended by members chosen at local Branch and Regional levels.

3. Inkatha leaders are not only elected by the Annual General Conference, but they are held accountable to it for the way they pursue the aims and objectives set by the conference.

4. The vast majority of Inkatha's members are workers and peasants and it is representative of Blacks in urban areas as it is representative of Blacks in rural areas.

5. Inkatha's aims and objectives and the tactics and strategies it pursues are determined by democratic procedure which enable ordinary members to direct the affairs of Inkatha.

We are mandated to tell Western industrial nations that Black South Africans do not support disinvestments as a strategy which will help them in the struggle for liberation which they wage as Blacks here in this country.

This mandate has been repeatedly given to us at:

1. Every Annual General Conference where resolutions rejecting disinvestment as a strategy are passed unanimously after the question is re-opened for debate every year.

2. Central Committee debates and branch and regional debates which take place in the process of giving practical political effect to the expressed wishes of the Conference.

3. Mass open public meetings which draw crowds of tens of thousands who acclaim the President of Inkatha and other leaders of Inkatha as they inform the Black public of Inkatha's intention to ask for increased investment in this country.

Our stand opposing disinvestment has mass support and we challenge any Black leader who disputes this fact to share a platform with us in Soweto, the country's industrial heartland, to test public opinion.

We inform the United States Government that:

1. No mass meeting of Black South Africans has ever approved of disinvestment as a strategy against apartheid.

2. No democratically elected leader in a membership based organisation of any importance has ever been given a mandate to accept disinvestment as a viable Black political option.

On behalf of Black South Africa, we petition President Reagan, the Senators of the United States and its Congressmen to reject all pressures exerted on them to express abhorrence of apartheid through disinvestment in South Africa.

We thus petition because:

1. Disinvestment will minimise positive Western influences which we need in South Africa to speed up the process of change.

2. Disinvestment will further the politics of violence and damage the politics of reason:

3. Disinvestment is advocated by those who can not see that economic progress gives rise to intergroup dependencies which favour the politics of non-violent negotiation:

4. Disinvestment is most vehemently called for by those who favour the employment of violence to bring about change:

5. Whatever happens in this country, massive backlogs in Black housing, education, health and welfare services and all things Americans recognise to be essential to a decent qualities of human life, will only be wiped out at some future time if we do not damage the economic foundations of South Africa in liberating it from the tyranny of racial oppression.

6. Existing Black poverty will be greatly increased if effective disinvestment campaigns deepen already very problematic unemployment levels:

7. The United States, as the world's leading industrial democracy, should do everything in its power to foster the economic development of the whole of Southern Africa. This obligation to Africa and to the Third World will not be served by damaging not only the South African Economy, but also impoverished neighbouring economies.

DECLARATION OF INTENT

We the undersigned hereby declare our commitment to serve God in obedience to His divine will for our country and together: Recognise that:

The history of mankind shows the need for adaptive change among all peoples and all nations.

Nations which have managed to avoid the use of violence in the achievement of national objectives are the nations which have grown in wisdom.

Both mistakes and lessons not yet learned led to errors of judgement in the mainsteam politics in both the Black and White sections of our society.

The South African people are a family of mankind, seeking to live in harmony in the African community of nations and seeking to do so by expressing civilised ideals in the practical social, economic and political affairs of our country.

The South African constitution as it is now written is by force of history and reality a first step in constitutional reform which urgently needs the second step to be taken of enriching the constitution to make it as acceptable to the broad mass of African opinion as it has been made acceptable to the broad mass of White opinion.

The Westminister model of government was not ordained by God to be the only form of good government. We therefore accept:

The need to make the preamble to the South African constitution of equal value to all the groups and peoples of the country by enriching the clause: "To respect, to further and to protect the self-determination of population groups and peoples" to include the notion that this can best be done by sharing power. We need to share power in such a way that no one can dictate to any other group how to express its own self-determination, and we also need to share power in a formula within which the hallowed values of good government are not compromised.

The need to preserve the constitutionality of the adaptive democratic process on which we will jointly rely in being subservient to the divine will for our country. We will therefore together seek:

To negotiate as leaders to amend the South African constitution to make it more acceptable to all groups.

To find an alternative political system to that which the world at large understands by the word 'apartheid' and also to seek an alternative political system in which universal adult suffrage is expressed in constitutional terms acceptable to all the peoples of South Africa.

To give expression to the common citizenship of all South Africa's peoples without qualifying the meaning of citizenship for any group.

To use the opportunities presented in practical politics at first, second and third tier levels of government to fashion national unity by deepening the democratic process, and to use the democratic process in exploration of what needs to be done to get the people to legitimise the instruments of government. We therefore pledge ourselves:

To express national pride and patriotism by insisting that South Africans will decide South Africa's future in the acceptance of each other as individuals and groups and the acceptance of each other's culturual rights to be who they are.

To start where we find ourselves in history and to move from there to build on all that is positive and valuable and to change that which is negative and undesirable.

Each to work in our own constituencies to develop a South African pride in managing our own South African affairs in harmony with internationally accepted standards of civilised decency without being dictated to from without.

Having thus declared we stand together to defend our right even with our lives to take the steps and the time needed to establish consensus between groups and to win support for our joint efforts in the South African family of nations.

And furthermore to stand together to defend South Africa from external onslaughts and to stand together to resist any use of violence which threatens the politics of negotiation aimed at national reconciliation.

I make only one thing totally non-negotiable. South Africa is one country, and there must be one citizenship for one nation.

SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, as we are all aware, events in South Africa have recently taken a tragic turn for the worse. A day does not pass without one more story of riots, violence, angry demonstrations, and deaths. These difficulties have further strained the South African economy. I have said in the past, South Africa is at a crossroads in her history. I now believe South Africa is on the brink.

Some of my colleagues have been highly critical of legislative initiatives which have tried to address the problems in South Africa. Many claim we should not interfere in another nation's internal troubles. Others argue the situation is not out of control, that the violence is confined to black communities, and that the South African Government can bring quiet to the streets. Essentially, these critics would have you believe that if the United States and Congress would mind their own business, South Africa's problems would disappear. Underlying this argument is a confidence in the South African Government's willingness to exercise whatever security force is necessary to protect and preserve the white population's power and position. I, too, am confident the government will exercise its capable police and military force. We have seen all too many demonstrations of its ability to disperse crowds. But this is not the solution. We will not see peaceful change progress and stability restored with cattle prods, whips, tear gas, and rubber bullets.

While the situation in South Africa is disturbing, other nations are also experiencing internal strife. Many are asking why should Congress and the President break with our policy of constructive engagement? Why target South Africa? Contrary to some critics' beliefs, Congress has not arbitrarily singled South Africa out for punishment. The South African Government's policy and practices have singled it out. We have not weighed the evidence of the Soviet Union's human rights practices against South Africa's. The issue is not one of relativity. South Africa is an important ally. No other U.S. ally has a legislated, legally enforced system of racial segregation. No other ally has brutally enforced the racial repression of the pass laws and homeland's policy. South Africa is unique in the community of Western nations. It is not the threat of Congress or the administration actions which is bringing South Africans into the streets. The U.S. Government is not the political force motivating marches, riots and demonstrations. What is happening in South Africa is a response to apartheid. The grievances are painful and real. The opposition would be acting with or without us.

Today, we have an opportunity to take a position which reflects our interest in change. We have the opportunity to side with voices and forces for reform. There is no doubt peaceful change will benefit all South Africans. We share an interest with South Africans seeking an alternative to the violence and disruption of the past few months. Today, we can make clear the urgency of reform.

When I left for the August recess, I fully intended to return to the Senate and support a motion for cloture on the conference report. The escalation in violence over August convinced me the United States must convey a strong message to the South African Government to carry out meaningful reforms. I am pleased the President recognized the urgency of this concern and chose to issue an Executive order for action on South Africa. Virtually every provision in the legislation Senators ROTH, DODD, and I introduced in April has been included in the President's plan. The administration has responded to congressional concerns with a sound balance of positive and punitive measures. The President has done exactly what Congress asked of him. I am supporting the President's call for a vote against cloture on the conference report because I believe this policy should be given a chance to work. My support is founded on the belief that the administration has recognized the need for a new approach to problems in South Africa. The administration and Congress now share both the goal to end apartheid and the plan to accomplish it. This consensus of opinion of Congress and the President will strengthen our case with the South African Government.

This order is not the end of the issue. It is a beginning. It is an order for action which must be carried out with vigor and dedication if it is to succeed. I am confident the President will assume this responsibility with his customary strong commitment to achievement. Congress should stand by him as he embarks on this critical new course.

RECESS SUBJECT TO THE CALL OF THE CHAIR

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, and let me say that I have cleared this with the distinguished minority leader, that the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 1 p.m., recessed subject to the call of the Chair.

The Senate reassembled at 3:12 p.m., when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. WILSON).

QUORUM CALL

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. Let me indicate there will be a rollcall vote. There will be a live quorum that will go rather quickly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll and the following Senators entered the Chamber and answered to their names:

[Quorum No. 15 Leg.]

Cochran	Garn	Pressler
Cranston	Hecht	Trible
Dole	Helms	Wilson
Ford	Matsunaga

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is not present. The clerk will call the names of the absentees.

The legislative clerk resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to request the attendance of absent Senators, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE]. The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE], the Senator from New York [Mr. D'AMATO], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. EAST], the Senator from Washington [Mr. EVANS], the Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. LAXALT], the Senator from Alaska [Mr. MURKOWSKI], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER], are necessarily absent.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK], the Senator from Florida [Mr. CHILES], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HART], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE], are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber wishing to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 79, nays 3, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 170 Leg.]

YEAS—79

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I send a cloture motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the cloture motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on the conference report on H.R. 1460, the Anti-Apartheid Act of 1985.

Edward M. Kennedy, Lowell Weicker, Charles McC. Mathias, Alan Cranston, Claiborne Pell, Paul Simon, Howard Metzenbaum, Patrick Leahy, Jim Sasser, John D. Rockefeller, Dale Bumpers, Paul Sarbanes, Spark Matsunaga, George J. Mitchell, Albert Gore, Jr., Jeff Bingaman, J. Bennett Johnston, Bill Bradley, John Glenn, Max Baucus, J. James Exon, and Daniel P. Moynihan.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the majority leader hold for a moment to respond to an inquiry?

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me also at this time ask if there might be some inclination that we could vitiate the vote on the yeas and nays that is scheduled for 4 o'clock. Would there be objection to that request?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, will the majority indicate what reason the Senate would be denied an opportunity to vote on this extremely important and timely measure which has been debated in the Foreign Relations Committee, the Banking Committee, on the floor of the Senate, and in the conference? Will the majority leader elaborate on the reasons for making such a request of this body at this time?

Mr. DOLE. I beg the pardon of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts. Was there a question?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes. I am interested, if the majority leader will tell us, why such a request would be made of this body at this time on this issue.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, as I said earlier this morning, it would seem to me that if the President now, as someone indicated, but for whatever reason, in effect adopted the Senate position, it would be in our interest to go forward together, a bipartisan Senate—we have had bipartisan support on the bill—with the President of the United States; it would send a much stronger signal to the South African Government. I think everyone will agree that the original Senate bill, for all practical purposes, has now been made a part of the Executive order. So what I was suggesting this morning, for those of us who feel strongly, as does the Senator from Kansas, the Senator from Massachusetts, and others, is that we ought to postpone consideration of the conference report, make sure the administration lives up to the terms of the Executive order and, if not, we will have the conference report before us. That was the one reason I was hoping we might work that out.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, further reserving the right to object, it seems to me that these issues have been debated. What we are talking about is a basic and fundamental question upon which this country was built, the equality of all persons. The House of Representatives has responded to this issue; they have voted. As I gather from the majority leader, he is making a request that we vitiate the opportunity for the Senate to fulfill its legislative obligation to speak on this issue at this time and to rely solely upon an Executive order than the benefit of legislation on an issue of fundamental importance and a principle upon which I think this country stands. If we represent anything to ourselves and to the countries of the world, it is equality of individuals. Apartheid runs contrary to that. I think it is imperative we speak to that issue. We have debated it in the Foreign Relations Committee and the Banking Committee. They have done outstanding work. I paid tribute to Senator LUGAR and the members of the Foreign Relations Committee. As the leader has pointed out, we have had a strong bipartisan effort, and I wish we would have that same effort when we pass this legislation, and hopefully the President will find that he would be able to sign it. My own view is that he was well-intentioned in his actions today, but they are ill-suited on this issue, and therefore I would object to the unanimous-consent-request.

Mr. CRANSTON. The President has changed his tune on South Africa. But he still doesn't know all the words to the freedom song for blacks in South Africa.

All Americans should be pleased that the President is no longer denying the realities of racial injustice in South Africa as he did less than 2 weeks ago. I am pleased that he is no longer saying that racial segregation has ended and implying that apartheid has gone away.

Instead, the President has a new script—and it shows most of all, that he can count. He knows the Senate has been prepared to pass a tough South Africa economic sanctions bill despite his opposition.

Unfortunately, his new script is incomplete. It's less than half a solution to a problem that demands our total commitment.

Therefore, I support the motion to end debate on the South Africa conference report and prepare to send this measure to the President.

I believe it is incumbent upon this body to complete the efforts we have undertaken together with the House the past several months to craft a clear, balanced measure to guide future U.S. relations with the people and Government of South Africa.

It would be a serious mistake for the Senate to duck the fundamental issue before us today. We need to speak clearly and to enact an unambiguous statute to define our policy.

The President's belated action this morning imposing certain export curbs on business with South Africa does not meet this need. The President's effort was seriously flawed in a number of respects.

It did not contain the immediate ban on Krugerrand imports supported by the bipartisan House-Senate conference committee, rather it unnecessarily referred this issue to a multilateral international tribunal where it will doubtless face needless delays.

It did not provide for minting of a U.S. gold coin to compete with the Krugerrand, rather left this to yet another study.

It did not provide for mandatory application of the Sullivan principles to U.S. firms' South African operations, rather made these voluntary with no monitoring and reporting provisions or criminal penalties for noncompliance.

It deleted entirely the key provision of the congressional legislation requiring additional sanctions if progress is not made on ending apartheid in the year ahead.

And it inserted a mischievously broad loophole in the ban on nuclear commerce, a loophole which could permit business as usual under the terms of the Executive order.

Finally, and perhaps most seriously, the President's response provides no guidelines as to when and under what conditions U.S. sanctions will be lifted. In other words, there are no benchmarks for progress in ending apartheid established and we are left essentially with a Presidental insistence on total discretion as he says "trust me."

But the sad fact is that this President is out of step with the American people and with Republicans and Democrats in Congress on this issue. Can we trust a President who just last month was claiming absurdly, that segregation had been "totally eliminated" in South Africa?

Regardless of the personalities and the politics of this issue, I think we would do well to remember that ours is a government of laws not men. We do not set matters of crucial national policy by executive fiat, by 11th-hour, loophole-ridden Executive orders.

Given the 180° reversal in the position of this administration on the issue of imposing South Africa sanctions, there is no reason why completion of congressional action on the measure before us need provoke a confrontation. Let the President sign the measure, for it is consistent with his entirely new rhetorical position. If he still wishes to veto it, let us work our will on an override effort. But let us abandon our important legislative work nine-tenths completed. Let us not impose the limited, sloppy White House sanctions, let us enact a clear law with balanced, carefully crafted compromise provisions, let us avert a partisan breakdown on this issue by sending the measure on to the White House.

CLOTURE MOTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the hour of 4 p.m. having arrived, the clerk will state the motion to invoke cloture.

The bill clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on the conference report on H.R. 1460, the Anti-Apartheid Act of 1985.

Lowell Weicker, Nancy Landon Kassebaum, Arlen Specter, Dave Durenberger, Bill Cohen, Bob Dole, John H. Chafee, John Danforth, Al Simpson, Daniel J. Evans, Rudy Boschwitz, Bob Packwood, John Heinz, Frank Murkowski, Charles McC. Mathias, and Mark Andrews.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

[Quorum No. 16 Leg.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

VOTE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Is it the sense of the Senate that debate on the conference report on H.R. 1460 shall be brought to a close? The yeas and nays are mandatory under the rule.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. EAST], the Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. LAXALT], the Senator from Alaska [Mr. MURKOWSKI], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. EAST] would vote "nay."

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI] the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HART], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HART], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE] would each vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MATTINGLY). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 53, nays 34, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 53, nays are 34, three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is not agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to Senate Joint Resolution 31.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, would the Chair indicate as to whether or not this resolution is a privileged or nonprivileged matter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a privileged resolution.

Mr. WEICKER. And is it correct, Mr. President, that it is possible to ask for the yeas and nays on the motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I would like to say on the matter of apartheid that while we lost the first cloture vote, it is by no means clear that we would lose——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a nondebatable motion pending at this time.

Mr. CRANSTON. I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to speak for 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

ANTIAPARTHEID ACTION ACT OF 1985

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, although we lost the first vote on cloture on apartheid, it is by no means clear that we would lose the vote if all Senators were present, and it is very clear that we would win by a majority vote were we to have the opportunity to vote up or down on the issue of sanctions applied to South Africa until they dismantle apartheid.

The President is seeking to deal with a political problem in the United States. A Senate majority and the House of Representatives seeks to deal with the moral and human rights issue in South Africa. That majority in the Senate is composed of all Democrats and a significant number of Republicans. Therefore, we will keep this matter before the Senate or get it before the Senate in one way or another where we can have an up or down vote. If we are unable to bring the present legislation to a vote, we will have that opportunity before long on measures that will come before the Senate that cannot be filibustered forever because they have to be dealt with.

All Democrats are firmly for this measure; that is 47. Eleven Republicans voted to end cloture. That gets us up to 58. I know that one Republican, who is absent, would vote for cloture when present. That gets us up to 59. And it is quite possible that another one or two of the Republican absentees today would have voted for cloture were they present.

So we are very close to cloture, and without any question we have a majority and we will win on this issue when we bring this matter to a vote in the Senate. That will occur sooner or later. Those of us who feel so strongly about apartheid are not about to abandon this battle.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak for 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, it should be noted that severe transportation problems, particularly in the Northeast corridor, prevented some Senators from arriving in Washington, DC, to cast their vote on the motion to invoke cloture on the conference report on H.R. 1460, the South African antiapartheid legislation.

Had Senators DODD, HART, DECONCINI, and RIEGLE been present and voting, they would have voted "aye" in favor of invoking cloture on the conference report on H.R. 1460.

Mr. President, I wish to express appreciation to the distinguished majority leader for being so accommodating in leaving the vote stand open for a good 30, 40, or 50 minutes in order to accommodate one or more of the Senators whose airplanes were unable to land on schedule. I deeply appreciate it and I am sure that the day will come when perhaps we can also be accommodating in circumstances such as these.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished minority leader. I again regret that the distinguished Senator from Arizona who was scheduled to be here at 4 o'clock and then delayed until 4:30 and now he is caught in the thunderstorm over National Airport and Senator DECONCINI was not able to vote. We did try to accommodate Senator DECONCINI and, indirectly, Senator LAUTENBERG.

I assume there will be another vote on Wednesday. A cloture motion has been filed. We will see what happens on cloture. I think the one important factor is there were 34 votes against cloture, which certainly would be enough to sustain a veto without additional votes, if we went that route. There are additional absentees, so I guess that the vote on Wednesday will be fairly close, as this vote was fairly close.

I regret the distinguished Senator from California now seeks to make this a partisan issue. The issue would not be before the Senate now if it were not for a majority of Republicans, including the majority leader, who supported the efforts of a bipartisan group, and that is still the spirit we hope will be maintained.

In my view, those of us who support this legislation have won a victory and we have not lost a thing. We still have the option, if we can agree to postpone further action on the conference report until a date certain, of testing the administration and determining whether or not the administration will follow everything in the Executive order, plus the Krugerrand action, plus the gold coin action, plus possibly sanctions that could be recommended by the administration.

So it would seem to me that the focus has shifted now from South Africa to playing politics. Can we somehow embarrass the President of the United States who, though belatedly, has gotten on board? The view of this Senator is we send a much stronger signal to those in the South African Government if we have some semblance of bipartisanship, not just in the Congress, but including the executive branch. So it would seem to me we have made some progress. I hope, after we have another cloture vote, that those of us who have gotten the bill this far can get together and agree that our best strategy for keeping everyone's feet to the fire is to postpone final action. Then, if it does not happen, the majority leader will be, as he has been, on the side of the Senator from Massachusetts, the Senator from Connecticut, and others who have been in the forefront for this legislation.

Mr. President, I hope that we might be able to proceed to Senate Joint Resolution 31 without a rollcall vote. If there is a demand for a rollcall vote, then it would be my hope we can postpone that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would advise the majority leader that the motion is nondebatable now.

Mr. DOLE. That is why I was not debating it.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr President, I withdraw the inquiry and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold on that request to permit me to speak briefly on the apartheid issue? I know the motion is not debatable

Mr. DOLE. I have no objection if the Senator does not intend to file an additional cloture motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, the Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, one of the founding principles on which America was created is the proposition that all persons are created equal. Apartheid is a system of government which denies that fundamental right to millions of people in South Africa. Racism is always wrong. It is wrong in the United States, it is wrong in South Africa, and it is wrong in any nation on Earth—and so long as apartheid exists, the United States must speak clearly and unmistakeably against it.

The best way and the right way for the United States to speak out in opposition to apartheid in South Africa is for Congress and the President to act together to enact our country's policy into law.

The President's announcement today is well intentioned, and it is a step in the right direction. But it is too little and too late.

An Executive order that excludes the participation of Congress is not as effective or as appropriate as a statute in expressing the policy of the United States on an issue as important as our abhorrence of apartheid. Moreover, in a number of key areas, the Executive order is an unfortunate retreat from the provisions of the legislation now awaiting final action by the Senate. And even these inadequate provisions could be further weakened or rescinded by some future Executive order, without the approval of Congress.

As representatives of the people of America, the U.S. Senate has its own responsibility to speak out on the issue of South Africa and to state our position on apartheid. Yet the President is asking us today to abdicate that responsibility by abandoning the pending bill.

The legislative process has worked effectively so far to produce a strong bipartisan measure that is worthy of the principles of our Nation. Instead of accepting an Executive order with a watered-down version of this impressive joint effort, the Senate ought to pass the bill and urge the President to sign it.

By doing so, we will be true to our principles as a nation, true to our responsibilities as Members of the Senate, and true to the aspirations of millions of South Africans who hope for freedom and who look to America for help.

The Congress of the United States has been working on this historic legislation for many months. We have had lengthy hearings—both in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and in The Senate Banking Committee. We have heard eloquence on this floor in our debates. The legislative process has worked—and worked effectively. And out of this work, we have forged an extraordinary consensus on the issue of South Africa.

Now, at the 11th hour, we are asked to withhold further action, and abdicate our responsibility as legislators to make law. But that consensus was too important and this issue is too profound for Congress now to stay its hand.

I do not believe that the President's Executive order should serve as a substitute for the historic legislation that we have been working on.

There comes a time in the life of a country when it must live up to the principles that made that country special and different in the world and in the history. Now is that time for the United States on this issue on apartheid. Apartheid challenges the most fundamental principles of our society stated in the Declaration of Independence—that all people are created equal and that they are endowed with certain inalienable rights, including life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Millions of Americans died to make that principle a reality for our own country, and now we are being tested again on the application of that principle to South Africa.

That nation has become associated with an oppressive and racist regime that denies the most basic human rights to 23 million men, women, and children because of the color of their skin.

It is not enough for the United States to speak to the evil of apartheid through an Executive order. On an issue as important as this, America should act by statute.

That is the first reason why I believe that we should enact the Anti-Apartheid Action Act of 1985: we speak on apartheid through law, not through Executive order.

Second, the Executive order is much, much weaker in a number of important respects.

It eliminates a key provision that requires the President to report back to Congress after 1 year on whether substantial progress has been made in dismantling apartheid in South Africa, and which requires him to recommend additional sanctions if no progress has been made. This is a major weakening of our bipartisan legislation.

The Executive order also raises grave doubts about the Krugerrand ban. While the bill would produce an immediate ban on the importation of Krugerrands, the Executive order only calls on the Secretary of the Treasury and the U.S. Trade Representative to consult with our major trading partners and with GATT on the issue of a Krugerrand ban—perhaps to be imposed at some indefinite time in the indefinite future.

The Executive order also opens a substantial loophole in the ban on new bank loans to the Government of South Africa. It allows the Secretary of the Treasury to authorize exceptions to the ban in the case of loans that would enhance the economic well-being of black South Africans. This loophole may well be used to permit American banks to finance the institutions of apartheid—such as the homelands governments, the township councils, and the social programs of apartheid which are so thoroughly segregated—even though they may be related to health or welfare or economic development.

One of the essential features of our pending legislation is to stop the United States from funding apartheid. The Executive order will not do that.

As we take up once again the tragedy that is South Africa today, let us think of those brave South Africans who have been such examples of selfless dedication in the struggle to end apartheid in their community.

Let us think of the Reverend Allan Boesak, the president of the World Alliance of Reformed Churches, who even as we meet today, sits in a prison cell, in solitary confinement, somewhere in South Africa. And what is his crime? To dream of freedom, to deplore injustice, and to lead his people along a nonviolent path in their struggle against apartheid.

And let us think of Bishop Desmond Tutu, a man of God and a symbol and inspiration to all peoples everywhere of South Africa's hope for freedom.

And let us think of Winnie Mandela—a brave woman, a loyal wife, and a dedicated mother—who has been driven into exile and whose tiny house—which she calls her prison cell—was recently razed and looted by the agents of apartheid.

And let us think of the children of Soweto who have disappeared and who have been arrested because they stayed away from school to show their opposition to apartheid.

And let us think of the 670 South Africans who have died in the violence of apartheid as the South African Army keeps apartheid alive with the club, the bullet, and the tank.

These people have looked to the United States for assistance in their struggle. We owe it to them, and we owe it to the founding principles of our Nation, to send the strongest message that we can muster. "The American people are with you—and you shall overcome."

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I do not intend to ask for the yeas and nays on the motion proposed by the distinguished majority leader. I would like to say that I think it is more important that the Senate address itself to the outrages that occur daily in South Africa rather than to address itself to the potential outrage of a Presidential defeat on this issue if it passes the House and the Senate.

It is absolutely essential on a moral issue such as this that the United States speak out loud and clear. In essence, what we do with the adoption of the Executive order is to weaken that message. It is to allow the advocates of antiapartheid here in the United States to be the administration that has dragged its feet on the issue of being against apartheid. The House and the Senate have both spoken very clearly. There is no mistaking the words or the intent of the statute.

Now we have something less before us. Granted we are not going to go ahead and change the laws of South Africa. This was always the matter of symbol, and a matter of perception. A lot of people either died or put themselves in jeopardy of death waiting for that symbol, and that perception from the United States of America. Now it will come in a watered-down version. That does not speak very well either in terms of what we do today or in terms of the history that we leave behind. I hope that the U.S. Senate will invoke cloture on Wednesday, that we will have that opportunity, and that we will move together—the President and Congress—to tell the world what is said in the Constitution of the United States we both live by and are willing to die for. That is what is important.

I yield the floor.

NATIONAL FAMILY WEEK

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, is the question on the motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas to proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 31, National Family Week.

The motion was agreed to. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the House as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution from the Senate (S.J. Res. 31) entitled "Joint resolution to designate the week of November 24 through November 30, 1985, as 'National Family Week' ", do pass with the following amendments:

Line 5, after "1985," the second time it appears, insert: "and the week of November 23, 1986, through November 29, 1986,".

Amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution to designate the week of November 24 through November 30, 1985, and the week of November 23 through November 29, 1986, as 'National Family Week'.".

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I suggest that there now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 6 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me thank the distinguished Senator from Connecticut because we could have had another rollcall vote, or we could have delayed until tomorrow. I indicated to him that we would not attempt to proceed to the consideration of S. 47 this evening. We will probably do that tomorrow.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING THE ADJOURNMENT

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of January 3, 1985, the Secretary of the Senate on September 4, 1985, during the adjournment of the Senate, received a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a treaty.

JOB TRAINING FOR DISLOCATED WORKERS IN THE FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING THE ADJOURNMENT—PM 74

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of January 3, 1985, the Secretary of the Senate, on August 28, 1985, during the adjournment of the Senate, received the following message from the President of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with section 203(b)(2) of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2253(b)(2)), I am writing to inform you of my decision today to direct the Secretary of Labor to develop a plan to utilize the Job Training and Partnership Act of 1982 to aid dislocated workers in the nonrubber footwear industry. At the request of the Senate Finance Committee, the United States International Trade Commission (ITC) instituted an investigation to determine whether increasing imports of nonrubber footwear were injuring the domestic nonrubber footwear industry. The ITC found that nonrubber footwear imports are a substantial cause of serious injury, or threat thereof, to the domestic footwear industry.

While the escape clause provisions of the Trade Act of 1974 require the ITC to determine the question of whether a domestic industry has been seriously injured as a result of increased imports, I am charged with the responsibility of determining whether the provision of import relief to the domestic industry is in the national economic interest. After considering all relevant aspects of the case, including those set forth in section 202(c) of the Trade Act of 1974, I have determined that granting import relief would not be in the national economic interest. I believe my decision today will promote our national economic interest by encouraging an open, nondiscriminatory and fair world economic system, a system in which jobs are created and prosperity grows through increased productivity and competitiveness in an open market. As my determination does not provide import relief to the industry, I am setting forth the reasons for my decision.

First, import relief would place a costly and unjustifiable burden on U.S. consumers and the U.S. economy. The Council of Economic Advisers estimates that the global quota remedy recommended by the ITC would create between 13,000 to 22,000 jobs with an average annual wage of $14,000. However, the cost to consumers to create these jobs would be $26,300 per job, amounting to a total consumer cost which could be as high as $2.9 billion over the next 5 years. Moreover, these jobs would not provide permanent employment and would be likely only to last during the 5-year relief period.

Second, import relief would result in serious damage to U.S. trade in two ways. If the ITC global remedy were imposed, U.S. trade would stand to suffer as much as $2.1 billion in trade damage either through compensatory tariff reductions or retaliatory actions by foreign suppliers. This would mean a loss of U.S. jobs and a reduction in U.S. exports. U.S. trade would also suffer because of the adverse impact import relief would have on major foreign suppliers, such as Brazil, who are heavily indebted and highly dependent on footwear exports. Import relief would lessen the ability of these foreign footwear suppliers to import goods from the United States and thus cause an additional decline in U.S. exports.

Third, I do not believe that providing relief in this case would promote industry adjustment to increased import competition. While imports of nonrubber footwear have increased rapidly over the last 12 months, I believe that the industry has been and is in the process of successfully adjusting to increased import competition. An industry that was once characterized by many small firms with limited manufacturing capability, has now emerged as an industry led by larger, more efficient producers who have invested in state of the art manufacturing equipment, diversified into profitable retail operations, and filled out their product lines with imports to respond to rapidly changing consumer taste.

In order to address the difficult problems faced by workers in the industry, I have directed the Secretary of Labor to work with State and local officials to develop a retraining and relocation assistance program specifically designed to aid workers in the nonrubber footwear industry. Appropriate programs of the Job Training Partnership Act are to be used to the fullest extent possible under U.S. law.

RONALD REAGAN.

REPORT ON FEDERAL PAY COMPARABILITY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING THE ADJOURNMENT—PM 75

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of January 3, 1985, the Secretary of the Senate, on August 29, 1985, during the adjournment of the Senate, received the following message from the President of the United States, together with accompanying papers; which was referred to the Committee on Governmental Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

Under the Federal Pay Comparability Act of 1970, the President is required to make a decision each year on what, if any, pay adjustment should be provided for Federal employees under the General Schedule and the related statutory pay systems.

My pay advisors have reported to me that an increase in pay rates averaging 19.15 percent, to be effective in October 1985, would be required under existing procedures to raise Federal pay rates to comparability with private sector pay rates for the same levels of work. However, the law also empowers me to prepare and transmit to the Congress an alternative plan for the pay adjustment if I consider such an alternative plan appropriate because of "national emergency or economic conditions affecting the general welfare."

Accordingly, after reviewing the reports of my Pay Agent and the Advisory Committee on Federal Pay, and after considering the adverse effect that a 19.15 percent increase in Federal pay rates might have on our continuing national economic recovery, I have determined that economic conditions affecting the general welfare require the following alternative plan for this pay adjustment:

In accordance with section 5305(c)(1) of title 5, United States Code, the pay rates of the General Schedule and the related statutory pay schedules as adjusted by Section 1 of Executive Order No. 12496 of December 28, 1984, shall remain in effect without change.

Accompanying this report and made a part hereof are the pay schedules that will remain in effect under this alternative plan, including, as required by section 5382(c) of title 5, United States Code, the rates of basic pay for the Senior Executive Service.

RONALD REAGAN.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Saunders, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

ACTIONS REGARDING SOUTH AFRICA—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 76

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with accompanying papers, which was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to section 204(b) of the International Emergency Economic Powers Act, 50 U.S.C. 1703(b), I hereby report to the Congress that I have exercised my statutory authority to declare that the policies and actions of the Government of South Africa constitute an unusual and extraordinary threat to the foreign policy and economy of the United States and to declare a national emergency to deal with the threat.

Pursuant to this and other legal authorities, I have prohibited certain transactions, including the following: (1) the making or approval of bank loans to the South African Government, with certain narrow exceptions; (2) the export of computers and related goods and technology to certain government agencies and any apartheid enforcing entity of the South African Government; (3) all nuclear exports to South Africa and related transactions, with certain narrow exceptions; (4) the import into the United States of arms, ammunition, or military vehicles produced in South Africa; and (5) the extension of export marketing support to U.S. firms employing at least twenty-five persons in South Africa which do not adhere to certain fair labor standards.

In addition, I have directed (6) the Secretary of State and the United States Trade Representative to consult with other parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade with a view toward adopting a prohibition on the import of Krugerrands; (7) the Secretary of the Treasury to complete a study within 60 days regarding the feasibility of minting U.S. gold coins; and (8) the Secretary of State to take the steps necessary to increase the amounts provided for scholarships in South Africa for those disadvantaged by the system of apartheid and to increase the amounts allocated for South Africa in the Human Rights Fund; and (9) the Secretary of State to establish an Advisory Committee to provide recommendations on measures to encourage peaceful change in South Africa.

Finally, this Order (10) commends the efforts of U.S. firms in South Africa that have voluntarily adhered to fair labor, nondiscrimination principles and encourages all U.S. firms to do likewise.

I am enclosing a copy of the Executive Order that I have issued making this declaration and exercising this authority.

1. I have authorized these steps in response to the current situation in South Africa. It is the foreign policy of the United States to seek peaceful change in South Africa, and in particular an end to the repugnant practice and policy of apartheid and the establishment of a government based on the consent of the governed. Recent developments in South Africa have serious implications for the prospects for peaceful change and the stability of the region as a whole, a region of strategic importance to the United States. The recent declaration of a state of emergency in 36 magisterial districts by the Government of South Africa, the mass arrests and detentions, and the ensuing financial crisis are of direct concern to the foreign policy and economy of the United States. The pace of reform in South Africa has not fulfilled the expectations of the world community nor the people of South Africa. Recent government actions regarding negotiations on the participation of all South Africans in the government of that country have not sufficiently diffused tensions and may have indeed exacerbated the situation.

Under these circumstances, I believe that it is necessary for this Nation to recognize that our foreign policy of seeking change through peaceful means is seriously threatened. In order for this Nation successfully to influence events in that country, it is necessary for the United States to speak with one voice and to demonstrate our opposition to apartheid by taking certain actions directed specifically at key apartheid policies and agencies.

2. The above-described measures, many of which reflect congressional concerns, will immediately demonstrate to the South African Government the seriousness of our concern with the situation in that country. Furthermore, this declaration mobilizes the influence of the private sector to promote an improvement in the economic prosperity, freedom, and political influence of blacks and other nonwhites in South Africa.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 9, 1985.

EXECUTIVE ORDER

PROHIBITING TRADE AND CERTAIN OTHER TRANSACTIONS INVOLVING SOUTH AFRICA

By the authority vested in me as President by the Constitution and laws of the United States of America, including the International Emergency Economic Powers Act (50 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.), the National Emergencies Act (50 U.S.C. 1601 et seq.), the Foreign Assistance Act (22 U.S.C. 2151 et seq.), the United Nations Participation Act (22 U.S.C. 287), the Arms Export Control Act (22 U.S.C. 2751 et seq.), the Export Administration Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2401 et seq.), the Atomic Energy Act (42 U.S.C. 2011 et seq.), the Foreign Service Act (22 U.S.C. 3901 et seq.), the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App. I), Section 301 of Title 3 of the United States Code, and considering the measures which the United Nations Security Council has decided on or recommended in Security Council Resolutions No. 418 of November 4, 1977, No. 558 of December 13, 1984, and No. 569 of July 26, 1985, and considering that the policy and practice of apartheid are repugnant to the moral and political values of democratic and free societies and run counter to United States policies to promote democratic governments throughout the world and respect for human rights, and the policy of the United States to influence peaceful change in South Africa, as well as the threat posed to United States interests by recent events in that country,

I, Ronald Reagan, President of the United States of America, find that the policies and actions of the Government of South Africa constitute an unusual and extraordinary threat to the foreign policy and economy of the United States and hereby declare a national emergency to deal with that threat.

Section 1. Except as otherwise provided in this section, the following transactions are prohibited effective October 11, 1985:

(a) The making or approval of any loans by financial institutions in the United States to the Government of South Africa or to entities owned or controlled by that Government. This prohibition shall enter into force on November 11, 1985. It shall not apply to (i) any loan or extension of credit for any educational, housing, or health facility which is available to all persons on a nondiscriminatory basis and which is located in a geographic area accessible to all population groups without any legal or administrative restriction; or (ii) any loan or extension of credit for which an agreement is entered into before the date of this Order.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out this subsection. The initial rules and regulations shall be issued within 60 days. The Secretary of the Treasury may, in consultation with the Secretary of State, permit exceptions to this prohibition only if the Secretary of the Treasury determines that the loan or extension of credit will improve the welfare or expand the economic opportunities of persons in South Africa disadvantaged by the apartheid system, provided that no exception may be made for any apartheid enforcing entity.

(b) All exports of computers, computer software, or goods or technology intended to service computers to or for use by any of the following entities of the Government of South Africa:

(1) The military;

(2) The police;

(3) The prison system;

(4) The national security agencies;

(5) ARMSCOR and its subsidiaries or the weapons research activities of the Council for Scientific and Industrial Research;

(6) The administering authorities for the black passbook and similar controls;

(7) Any apartheid enforcing agency;

(8) Any local or regional government or "homeland" entity which performs any function of any entity described in paragraphs (1) and (7).

The Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized to promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out this subsection and to implement a system of end use verification to ensure that any computers exported directly or indirectly to South Africa will not be used by any entity set forth in this subsection.

(c)(1) Issuance of any license for the export to South Africa of goods or technology which are to be used in a nuclear production or utilization facility, or which, in the judgment of the Secretary of State, are likely to be diverted for use in such a facility; any authorization to engage, directly or indirectly, in the production of any special nuclear material in South Africa; any license for the export to South Africa of component parts or other items or substances especially relevant from the standpoint of export control because of their significance for nuclear explosive purposes; and any approval of retransfers to South Africa of any goods, technology, special nuclear material, components, items, or substances described in this section. The Secretaries of State, Energy, Commerce, and Treasury are hereby authorized to take such actions as may be necessary to carry out this subsection.

(2) Nothing in this section shall preclude assistance for International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards or IAEA programs generally available to its member states, or for technical programs for the purpose of reducing proliferation risks, such as for reducing the use of highly enriched uranium and activities envisaged by section 223 of the Nuclear Waste Policy Act (42 U.S.C. 10203) or for exports which the Secretary of State determines are necessary for humanitarian reasons to protect the public health and safety.

(d) The import into the United States of any arms, ammunition, or military vehicles produced in South Africa or of any manufacturing data for such articles. The Secretaries of State, Treasury, and Defense are hereby authorized to take such actions as may be necessary to carry out this subsection.

Sec. 2. (a) The majority of United States firms in South Africa have voluntarily adhered to fair labor principles which have benefitted those in South Africa who have been disadvantaged by the apartheid system. It is the policy of the United States to encourage strongly all United States firms in South Africa to follow this commendable example.

(b) Accordingly, no department or agency of the United States may intercede after December 31, 1985, with any foreign government regarding the export marketing activity in any country of any national of the United States employing more than 25 individuals in South Africa who does not adhere to the principles stated in subsection (c) with respect to that national's operations in South Africa. The Secretary of State shall promulgate regulations to further define the employers that will be subject to the requirements of this subsection and procedures to ensure that such nationals may register that they have adhered to the principles.

(c) The principles referred to in subsection (b) are as follows:

(1) Desegregating the races in each employment facility;

(2) Providing equal employment opportunity for all employees without regard to race or ethnic origin;

(3) Assuring that the pay system is applied to all employees without regard to race or ethnic origin;

(4) Establishing a minimum wage and salary structure based on the appropriate local minimum economic level which takes into account the needs of employees and their families;

(5) Increasing by appropriate means the number of persons in managerial, supervisory, administrative, clerical, and technical jobs who are disadvantaged by the apartheid system for the purpose of significantly increasing their representation in such jobs;

(6) Taking reasonable steps to improve the quality of employees' lives outside the work environment with respect to housing, transportation, schooling, recreation, and health;

(7) Implementing fair labor practices by recognizing the right of all employees, regardless of racial or other distinctions, to self-organization and to form, join, or assist labor organizations, freely and without penalty or reprisal, and recognizing the right to refrain from any such activity.

(d) United States nationals referred to in subsection (b) are encouraged to take reasonable measures to extend the scope of their influence on activities outside the workplace, by measures such as supporting the right of all businesses, regardless of the racial character of their owners or employees, to locate in urban areas, by influencing other companies in South Africa to follow the standards specified in subsection (c) and by supporting the freedom of mobility of all workers, regardless of race, to seek employment opportunities wherever they exist, and by making provision for adequate housing for families of employees within the proximity of the employee's place of work.

Sec. 3. The Secretary of State and the head of any other department or agency of the United States carrying out activities in South Africa shall promptly take, to the extent permitted by law, the necessary steps to ensure that the labor practices described in section (2)(c) are applied to their South African employees.

Sec. 4. The Secretary of State and the head of any other department or agency of the United States carrying out activities in South Africa shall, to the maximum extent practicable and to the extent permitted by law, in procuring goods or services in South Africa, make affirmative efforts to assist business enterprises having more than 50 percent beneficial ownership by persons in South Africa disadvantaged by the apartheid system.

Sec. 5. (a) The Secretary of State and the United States Trade Representative are directed to consult with other parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade with a view toward adopting a prohibition on the import of Krugerrands.

(b) The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to conduct a study to be completed within 60 days regarding the feasibility of minting and issuing gold coins with a view toward expeditiously seeking legislative authority to accomplish the goal of issuing such coins.

Sec. 6. In carrying out their respective functions and responsibilities under this Order, the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Commerce shall consult with the Secretary of State. Each such Secretary shall consult, as appropriate, with other government agencies and private persons.

Sec. 7. The Secretary of State shall establish, pursuant to appropriate legal authority, an Advisory Committee on South Africa to provide recommendations on measures to encourage peaceful change in South Africa. The Advisory Committee shall provide its initial report within twelve months.

Sec. 8. The Secretary of State is directed to take the steps necessary pursuant to the Foreign Assistance Act and related legislation to (a) increase the amount of internal scholarships provided to South Africans disadvantaged by the apartheid system up to $8 million from funds made available for fiscal year 1986, and (b) increase the amount allocated for South Africa from funds made available for fiscal year 1986 in the Human Rights Fund up to $1.5 million. At least one-third of the latter amount shall be used for legal assistance for South Africans. Appropriate increases in the amounts made available for these purposes will be considered in future fiscal years.

Sec. 9. This Order is intended to express and implement the foreign policy of the United States. It is not intended to create any right or benefit, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law by a party against the United States, its agencies, its officers, or any person.

RONALD REAGAN.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. MOYNIHAN:

S. 1607. A bill to amend section 103(e)(4) of title 23, United States Code, to extend the deadline for withdrawal of approval of the Westway project in New York and for approval of highway and transit projects substituted for such project until December 30, 1985; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

APPROVAL OF HIGHWAY AND TRANSIT PROJECTS IN NEW YORK

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I am introducing today a bill to extend by 90 days the deadline for withdrawal of approval of the Westway project in New York and for approval of highway and transit projects substituted for such project until December 30, 1985.

This matter is currently sub judice. The Court's decision will in no way be affected by this measure; but it will avoid a situation in which New York loses both its present options—which is to say either build the Westway or trade it in—simply because the clock has run out.

My distinguished colleagues and friends in the House, Mr. HOWARD and Mr. BIAGGI have introduced similar bills.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1607

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the third sentence of section 103(e)(4) of title 23, United States Code, is amended by striking out "September 30, 1985" and inserting in lieu thereof "December 30, 1985".●

S. 1609. A bill to provide for an equitable distribution of net receipts associated with the Federal Onshore Mineral Leasing Program; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

FEDERAL ONSHORE MINERAL LEASING RECEIPTS

● Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, at the request of the Department of the Interior, I send to the desk for appropriate reference a bill to provide for an equitable distribution of net receipts associated with the Federal Onshore Mineral Leasing Program.

Mr. President, this draft legislation was submitted and recommended by the Department of the Interior, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill, and the executive communication which accompanied the proposal from the Under Secretary of the Interior, be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, I have introduced and will continue to introduce legislation within the jurisdiction of the committee at the request of the administration as a courtesy. This is one of those instances in which the administration has submitted an idea whose time should never come. This idea has surfaced in past administrations and Congress has had the consistent good judgment not to enact it. I see no reason why anything should be different this time around.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1609

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, notwithstanding any other provision of law and effective October 1, 1985, there shall be deducted from Federal onshore mineral leasing receipts prior to the division and distribution of such receipts between the States and the U.S. Treasury, in a manner determined by the Secretary of the Interior, an amount that the Secretary of the Interior determines to be equal to the cost to the U.S. Government of administering Federal onshore mineral leasing programs. Such amount shall not include any costs related to mineral activities on Indian lands.

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, DC, July 22, 1985.

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
President of the Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: There is enclosed a draft bill, "To provide for an equitable distribution of net receipts associated with the Federal onshore mineral leasing program."

We recommend that the draft bill be introduced, to the appropriate committee for consideration, and enacted.

The enclosed draft bill would require that a deduction be made from Federal onshore mineral leasing receipts prior to their division and distribution between the States and the U.S. Treasury. The amount of that deduction would be determined by the Secretary of the Interior and would equal the costs of administering the Federal onshore mineral leasing programs.

Under the Mineral Leasing Act, except for Alaska, States receive 50 percent of the revenues from Federal mineral leasing activities conducted on public lands within their borders. Another 40 percent of those revenues is deposited into the Reclamation Fund which is used to construct water projects in the Western States. Alaska receives 90 percent of those revenues with no revenues from Federal mineral leasing activities in Alaska deposited into the Reclamation Fund.

States, or in some instances counties, also receive a share of the revenues from Federal mineral leasing activities on acquired and other lands under a variety of laws. Under current law, however, the costs of issuing and supervising mineral leases, collecting and accounting for mineral revenues, and otherwise managing and administering the mineral leasing programs are not deducted before calculating the monies to be shared with the States and to be deposited to the Reclamation Fund. The Administration believes that States and counties should share the net gains from public land activities rather than gross receipts. Sharing on a gross basis, since it ignores costs, bears on relationship to the actual gain or benefits from the activity and results in a subsidy to the States and counties from Federal taxpayers. Under the enclosed draft bill, receipts would be shared on a basis that is net of costs.

The President's fiscal year 1986 Budget estimates that the amount to be deducted in fiscal year 1986 would be $125.2 million. This includes $33.2 million for the direct costs to the Minerals Management Service of collecting, accounting for, and distributing Federal onshore mineral leasing revenues, and related administrative costs; $77.9 million for the direct costs to the Bureau of Land Management of Federal mineral leasing activities, and related administrative costs; and $14.1 million for the direct costs to the Forest Service of mineral leasing activities. The estimated costs related to mineral activities on Indian lands were excluded in deriving these amounts.

For fiscal year 1986, if this draft bill is enacted, we estimate that payments to the States from receipts under the Mineral Leasing Act would be reduced by $54 million, or about 10 percent of the $532 million they would otherwise receive. Payments to States and counties under other laws from Federal onshore mineral leasing receipts would also be reduced by about 10 percent. Overall, this costsharing proposal, if enacted, would reduce the Federal deficit by about $300 million during the five years from fiscal year 1986 through fiscal year 1990. Therefore, we recommend that this proposal be introduced enacted by the Congress.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that the submission of this proposed legislation is in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely,

ANN MCLAUGHLIN.●

By Mr. GARN (by request):

S. 1610. A bill to require the Secretary of the Treasury to impose fees upon obligations of Government-Sponsored Enterprises, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

GOVERNMENT-SPONSORED ENTERPRISE USER FEE ACT

● Mr. GARN. Mr. President, I am today introducing the "Government-Sponsored Enterprise User Fee Act of 1985," and I ask unanimous consent that a section-by-section analysis of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the analysis was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GOVERNMENT-SPONSORED ENTERPRISES USER FEE ACT OF 1985—SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1 states the title of the bill, the "Government-Sponsored Enterprises User Fee Act of 1985".

Section 2 sets forth the reasons for the bill. Government sponsorship has pro-vided Government-Sponsored Enterprises ("GSE's") various benefits not otherwise available to private entities in the credit market place. These benefits include in most, but not all cases: exemption of their income from Federal, State and local income taxation; exemption of interest on their debt from State and local taxation; exemption of their securities from SEC regulation; eligibility of securities for special treatment by the Federal Reserve; and lines of credit with the Federal Government. Because of these specific advantages and the overall Federal sponsorship, the GSE's are perceived by the securities market to have a special relationship with the Federal Government. As a result (and despite the absence of Federal guarantees), the GSE's can borrow at interest rates only slightly higher than the interest rates paid by the Treasury on comparable issues of public debt securities. In consequence of these privileges, this Act will impose a fee on all obligations issued by the GSE's after September 30, 1985.

Section 3 provides definitions.

Subsection (1) defines "Government-Sponsored Enterprises". The definition includes both entities set out by name in the section and their subsidiaries, and entities that might be created (or modified) by statute to respond to a specific credit problem by acting as financial intermediaries, and which would not be government owned but which would enjoy some or all of the following advantages: exemption from securities laws and regulation; exemption of their income from Federal, State or local income taxes, and of interest on their debt from such taxes; eligibility of securities for special treatment by the Federal Reserve; and back-up lines of credit with the Federal Government (either direct or indirect).

Subsection (2) defines "obligation(s) outstanding" as an obligation issued by a GSE after September 30, 1985, which remains unpaid in whole or in part. This includes obligations issued for the purposes of refunding previously outstanding obligations.

Subsection (3) defines a "quarter" as a period of time consisting of three consecutive calendar months during each year, beginning October 1, 1985.

Subsection (4) defines "Secretary" as the Secretary of the Treasury.

Subsection (5) defines "secured obligations." Secured obligations are limited to obligations issued by the GSE's after September 30, 1985, which are backed by specific assets of the GSE, including pools of assets or specific income streams. Thus, securities currently issued by GSE's as mortgage-backed pass-through securities and collateralized mortgage obligations would be secured obligations for the purposes of this Act if issued after September 30, 1985.

Subsection (6) defines "subsidiary" to include all entities owned or controlled by one or more GSE's

Subsection (7) defines "unsecured obligations" as all obligations issued by a GSE after September 30, 1985 that are not "secured obligations."

Section 4 established a fee on obligations of the GSE's issued and outstanding after September 30, 1985, and a mechanism for collection of the fee.

Subsection (1) provides that beginning on January 1, 1986, the Secretary will, in consultation with each GSE, retrospectively determine the average principal amount of secured and unsecured obligations of each GSE that were outstanding during the previous quarter. For the quarter starting October 1, 1985, obligations that will be included in the calculation shall be only those obligations issued during that quarter. For subsequent quarters outstanding obligations shall include obligations issued during previous quarters that remain outstanding during all or any part of the quarter plus obligations issued during that quarter. In all cases obligations issued for refunding purposes shall be treated the same as those issued to raise new cash.

Subsection (2) sets forth the fee to be assessed. The fee is to be assessed on all outstanding obligations at an annual base rate of fifty one-thousands of one percent (.00050) of the average principal amount calculated pursuant to subsection (1). For unsecured obligations issued after September 30, 1986, the Secretary will assess an additional fee at an annual rate of thirty-three one-thousandths of one percent (.00033) of the average principal amount calculated pursuant to subsection (1). Therefore, on unsecured obligations issued after September 30, 1986, the annual fee will be eighty-three one-thousandths of one percent (.00083) of the average principal amount. Unsecured obligations issued after September 30, 1985, but before October 1, 1986 will be assessed at the base rate so long as they remain outstanding. As with the calculation of outstanding obligations, refunding obligations are treated the same as obligations issued to raise new cash.

Subsection (3) provides that the fee is due prior to the end of the quarter during which it is assessed, and any fee not paid by the due date is to be assessed a late charge. The amount of the late charge is based on one hundred-fifty percent of the 13-week Treasury Bill rate. The late charge will be added to the fee for the purpose of calculating additional late charges due in the event of a further failure to pay.

Subsection (4) provides that all fees paid under the Act will be deposited in miscellaneous receipts of the United States Treasury.

Subsection (5) states that the Secretary is authorized to prescribe such regulations as are necessary or appropriate to administer the provisions of the Act.●

By Mr. SIMON (for himself, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. METZENBAUM):

S. 1611. A bill to provide improved safety and health standards for railroad employees, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

FEDERAL RAILROAD EMPLOYEES SAFETY AND HEALTH ACT

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which would transfer the railroad safety jurisdiction of the Department of Transportation to the Department of Labor. There are several advantages to such a transfer. First, safety would be improved; second, in this cost conscious Congress, substantial sums could be saved by consolidating some of the Occupational Health and Safety Administration [OSHA] and rail safety enforcement; third, the agency hopefully would be more responsive to the laws and directions of Congress as well as to the needs of the public.

The Federal Railroad Administration [FRA] was created within the Department of Transportation in 1966. At that time the rail safety functions which had been administered by the Interstate Commerce Commission were transferred to the Department of Transportation. Very little was accomplished in rail safety until the enactment of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970. Since that time the FRA has been subject to much criticism, not only from the workers, but from Congress and independent agencies as well. During the early years after enactment of the 1970 law, the FRA refused to comply with the statutory mandate that regulations be adopted within 1 year from date of enactment. It was in late 1973 before the first regulation under the act went into effect. From the beginning, the FRA refused to implement the State participation provisions set forth under the act. Only after hearings were scheduled by Congress in 1974 did FRA indicate any willingness to start such a program, even though it was mandated in the law. The next year Congress continued to have concerns with Federal Railroad Administration's failure to do an adequate job. On page 5 of the House Report No. 94-240, 94th Congress, 1st session (1975), the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce stated:

> The Committee feels that these statistics are telling the story that the Federal Railroad Administration [FRA] is not doing its job adequately. The Committee also feels that a major reason for this problem is that the FRA has consistently failed to avail itself of the safety inspectors and funds authorized by this Committee.

Because of the lack of responsiveness of FRA to safety problems, Congress adopted a number of amendments in 1976 designed to strengthen safety enforcement. For example, evidence produced at the hearings showed that the FRA was compromising penalties at figures substantially below the minimum penalties set forth in the various safety statutes. As a result, Congress required that penalties could not be compromised below the penalty assessed originally. Another matter Congress had to deal with in 1976 required the Secretary to decide any petition filed within 1 year from its receipt. The evidence shows that some petitions would sit at FRA for years without a response from the agency. The continued problems with FRA caused Congress to request that the Office of Technology Assessment [OTA] evaluate the Federal Railroad Safety Program and report the results to Congress. The OTA completed its study in 1978. In general, the study concluded that FRA had failed to set safety goals and had not been able to implement its enforcement authority effectively. In particular, data collection was found to be piecemeal and inadequate; inspections did not correlate with demonstrated needs for a decrease in accidents; regulations did not appropriately set forth performance standards; and penalties were not being assessed in a rational manner. The State Participation Program was not being administered effectively as indicated by the small number of States involved.

In 1978 the Administrator of the FRA, testifying before the Senate Subcommittee on Surface Transportation, admitted that the railroad safety problem had worsened instead of improving since 1970 when the Federal Railroad Safety Act was passed. The situation was so intolerable that it prompted nine members of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to file separate views on FRA's lack of attention to railroad safety. One of those members is the current chairman of the committee, Representative JOHN D. DINGELL.

The members pointed out that FRA's failure to enforce the Federal railroad safety laws has been paralleled by an alarming increase in rail accidents. They also pointed out that FRA recognized that the real answer to the railroad safety crisis lies in enforcing existing laws and regulations against often recalcitrant railroads. They called for definitive action by Congress in three areas. First, Congress should seek ways to force FRA to initiate an aggressive program of enforcing Federal safety statutes and regulations. Second, an appropriation should not be limited to amounts the FRA requests. Third, in view of FRA's failures, the various States should be given greater authority over rail safety. It is interesting to note that this year the Department of Transportation is once again seeking to entirely delete funding for the various States in railroad safety enforcement.

In December 1981, the Department of Transportation submitted a report to Congress entitled "Department of Transportation Systems Safety Plan for Improving the Management of Railroad Safety Programs." The plan sets forth the methodology by which FRA intends to administer its Rail Safety Program. In particular, it shifts away from the imposition of fines for violations to consultation and other types of remedial alternatives. This plan has been criticized by the Comptroller General in a report entitled "The Federal Approach to Rail Safety Inspection and Enforcement: Time For Change." The General Accounting Office's [GAO] report refers to internal legal memoranda from the FRA's chief counsel's office in which the agency lawyers admit that the enforcement policies in the system safety plan exceed the relatively narrow prosecutorial discretion which FRA has. In summarizing the GAO's report, the Comptroller General in a letter dated December 21, 1982, to my colleague in the House, Representative JAMES FLORIO, chairman of the House Subcommittee on Engery and Commerce, stated that the imposition of civil penalties for safety violations is central to the enforcement scheme of the various railroad safety laws, and that the plan is questionable from a legal standpoint. The Comptroller General pointed out that the FRA inspectors may well interpret the plan as a signal to generally avoid citing violations in a wide range of circumstances. In effect, the GAO stated that the plan exceeded FRA's legal authority. Yet the plan is still in full force and effect in 1985.

FRA's enforcement activity to date demonstrates what Congress has complained about for so many years. Even though thousands of defects are discovered annually, only a very small percentage result in citing a railroad for a violation. In only about 5 percent of all cases where defects exist are fines imposed. For example, last year the FRA inspectors discovered 286,771 defects and the Agency sought fines in only 13,000 cases, which is less than 4 percent.

The proof of the pudding is that safety is not getting better, as some suggest, since the adoption of the systems safety plan in 1982. Comparing 1983 with 1984 statistics, every major category appears to be worse. For example, at public and private rail-highway grade crossings, in 1984 there were 648 fatalities and 2,911 injuries. In 1983 there were 575 fatalities and 2,623 injuries. Overall statistics covering accidents and incidents on the railroad show increases as well. Injuries from accidents nearly doubled in 1984. There were 893 injuries which were sustained in accidents during 1984, as compared with 502 injuries in 1983. A "train accident" in railroad terminology is defined as a collision, derailment, or other event involving the operation of railroad on-track equipment resulting in physical property damages that exceed $4,500. That figure has been increased to $4,900 this year. A "train incident" is an event involving the movement of railroad on-track equipment that results in a death, a reportable injury, or a reportable illness but in which railroad property damages do not exceed $4,500. In 1983 there were 432 deaths resulting from train incidents, and 5,182 injuries. In 1984, there were 515 deaths and 5,528 injuries.

I have had personal experiences with the FRA. As a result of a catastrophic accident in my old southern Illinois congressional district approximately 10 years ago, I introduced a bill in 1977 (H.R. 8017), which, if enacted, would have required the Secretary of Transportation to issue regulations requiring locomotives to be equipped with strobe lighting. The regulation would have required that the strobe lights be operated at grade crossings and at other locations where the Secretary finds it is required in the interests of safety. That legislation was not adopted, but Congress required that the Secretary conduct a study to determine whether strobe lights would be more effective than the standard head-light now in use. The FRA concluded that strobe lights should not be placed on locomotives. Frankly, I did not expect anything else from the FRA since they opposed the legislation. I still believe that strobe lights would be an effective deterrent to accidents at rail-highway grade crossings.

In conclusion, I think my recitation of the history of FRA's enforcement activities makes it pretty clear that FRA has done a poor job in its administration of the Federal railroad safety laws. The time has come for a change, and I submit that the appropriate agency to have jurisdiction over rail safety is the Department of Labor. The Occupational Safety and Health Administration already exercises jurisdiction in the rail industry. In particular their regulations cover railroad shops, offices, and other locations where occupational hazards exist in the rail industry. By transferring the jurisdiction to the Department of Labor, I believe that enforcement would be more evenhanded and there would be a long term cost savings to the Federal Government. I join with three others, my friend and colleague on the committee from Vermont, Senator ROBERT STAFFORD; the distinguished ranking minority member of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, Senator KENNEDY; and my friend from Ohio, the ranking minority member of the Labor Subcommittee, Senator METZENBAUM, to offer this bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a brief summary of the proposed bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF LEGISLATION TO TRANSFER RAIL SAFETY JURISDICTION TO OSHA

TITLE I—TRANSFER OF CERTAIN RAILROAD SAFETY FUNCTIONS

Section 101(a) transfers to the Secretary of Labor the powers presently in the Secretary of Transportation with respect to the following laws:

(1) Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970.

(2) All of the safety appliance acts (including Locomotive Inspection Act, Power Brake law, Boiler Inspection Act), Accident Reports Act, and Reorganization Plan No. 3 of 1965.

(3) Hours of Service Act.

(4) Signal Inspection Act.

The jurisdiction over Hazardous Materials Transportation Act, will remain in the Department of Transportation.

Section 101(b) makes it clear that the powers of the Secretary of Transportation with respect to research and development (except for training and determination of causes of accidents) will remain with the Secretary of Transportation. This section also requires that DOT promptly forward any recommendations concerning improved safety to the Secretary of Labor.

Section 101(c) makes it clear that Department of Transportation's powers will not be diminished as to the laws that are not transferred, and correspondingly, the Department of Labor will have the same powers as the Secretary of Transportation had in the laws that are being transferred.

Section 101(d). This section provides that the laws that are being transferred will be enforced in accordance with Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) procedures, except for the cease and desist provisions. Among the differences in the enforcement under the existing railroad safety laws and OSHA in that in OSHA, the inspector may immediately issue a citation for a violation. Under the procedures now used by Federal Railroad Administration (FRA), the safety inspector writes up a notice of a violation which is sent to Washington, and then an official in the Washington Office later determines whether a claim should be processed as a violation.

Also, this section preserves enforcement by the Federal Government (rather than by the states) except where the Federal Government fails to take appropriate action.

TITLE II—ADDITIONAL MEMBERS ON THE OCCUPATIONAL SAFETY AND HEALTH REVIEW COMMISSION

Section 201(a) This increases the number of members on the Occupational Safety and Health Review Commission (OSHRC) from three (3) to five (5). With respect to the additional two (2) members, one must be a representative from labor and the other one from management, and both shall be especially qualified in the field of railroad safety and health.

Section 201(b) provides that the terms of the two additional members shall be six (6) years, except that initially one of the members shall serve for a term of two (2) years, and the other for a term of six (6) years.

Section 201(c) provides that three members of the commission shall constitute a quorum. An equally divided vote by the Commission will operate to affirm the order being reviewed.

Section 201(d) permits the creation within the Commission of a special railroad safety and health panel composed of both members who are especially qualified in the field of railroad safety. This panel could decide all of the railroad safety matters.

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Section 301 generally establishes with the mechanics of transferring the personnel, appropriations, property, records, etc. 301(c)(1) directs that all of the personnel of the FRA handling enforcement and compliance will be transferred to the Department of Labor. This section also makes it clear that all of the personnel of the FRA will be protected for one year without reduction in qualification or compensation.

Section 302(a) establishes in the Department of Labor a "Federal Railroad Safety and Health Administration."

Section 302(b) reduces the status of the Federal Railroad Administrator. At the present, his income is the same as the Chairman of the OSHRC. This change would place him in the same category as the Assistant Secretary of Labor, and the remaining members of the Commission.

Section 303 makes it clear that nothing in this Act shall be construed to authorize the Secretary of Labor to reduce the number of inspectors engaged in enforcing the laws being transferred, or to reduce the number of inspectors engaged in the enforcement of OSHA.

Section 305 abolishes the FRA (the functions relating to research and development, hazardous materials that are retained in the DOT will be carried out by other divisions within the Department of Transportation.)●

By Mr. DIXON:

S. 1612. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to extend the targeted jobs credit for 3 years; to the Committee on Finance.

EXTENSION OF TARGETED JOBS CREDIT

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, Congress will have to consider a great number of issues this fall. Many of these issues are difficult and complex, and extremely controversial. I'm sure they will take most of our time and attention.

It is vitally important, however, as Congress attempts to resolve the numerous complex and contentious issues before it, that we ensure that agenda items that are not controversial are not lost in the process.

The targeted Jobs Tax Credit Program expires at the end of this year unless Congress acts to renew it. This program has enjoyed broad support in Congress since it was first created in the late seventies. What is more, it has worked efficiently and in a cost-effective manner to create literally hundreds of thousands of jobs for the disadvantaged.

In 1983, for example, the targeted jobs tax credit resulted in the employment of 431,182 persons. Last year, 653,381 people were employed, and this year the total is expected to exceed 650,000.

The program accomplishes objectives with a minimum of redtape. As the figures convincingly demonstrate, it puts people to work—people who have been hard to place in jobs and many of whom would otherwise be drawing welfare checks or other forms of public assistance. Over 60 percent of those assisted are disadvantaged youths, a group with an unemployment rate over 50 percent in many parts of our country.

The targeted jobs tax credit created over 22,000 jobs in my own State of Illinois last year, Mr. President, and this year it could create as many as 35,000 jobs in Illinois. Further, according to Jobs for Youth/Chicago, an organization dealing with economicaliy disadvantaged youths between 16 and 21 in Illinois, this job creation does not cost the Treasury money, but in fact benefits the Federal Government. Over 80 percent of the people Jobs for Youth/Chicago helps are on welfare. Once employed and even after allowing for the direct cost of the tax credit, the Federal Treasury gains $500 for each targeted jobs tax credit participant, as opposed to spending an average of $1,200 on assistance payments for the same individual.

A recent editorial from the Chicago Tribune entitled "Save the Jobs Tax Credit" makes the same point. According to the editorial, the tax credit will be:

> Responsible for the hiring of about 10,500 hard-to-place people here [in Chicago] in fiscal 1985. After the tax credit involved is subtracted, net welfare savings will come to about $7 million this year and former welfare recipients who now hold jobs will pay an estimated $4 million in taxes.

Mr. President, we cannot afford to let a program lapse that creates real private sector jobs while at the same time creating net budget savings for the Federal Government. Allowing the targeted jobs tax credit to expire would not save money, in fact, it would add to the deficit. We don't have very many Federal programs that work this well in any area. The targeted jobs tax credit should be extended now for a period long enough to give the program more stability.

I'm sure that the great majority of my colleagues in both the Senate and the House of Representatives will support extension of this essential tax credit program. I am today introducing legislation to extend it for 3 years in order to demonstrate my own commitment to this program, and to help ensure that this program receives the attention and prompt extension it deserves.

Congress will debate tax reform, budget issues, and many other issues this year. Many issues will no doubt not be resolved this year, but will be carried over to next year's session. Extension of the targeted jobs tax credit, however, need not wait and should not wait. Prompt and timely extension would take very little time on the floor, and would ensure that this sensible and fiscally responsible job creation measure is able to continue aiding those who most need our help.

I urge my colleagues, therefore, to join me in working to see that congressional action on extension of the targeted jobs tax credit occurs as quickly as possible.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the Chicago Tribune editorial and the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1612

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 51 (c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to the termination of the targeted jobs credit) is amended by striking out "1985" and inserting in lieu thereof "1988".

[From the Chicago Tribune, Sept. 1, 1985]

SAVE THE JOBS TAX CREDIT

Unless Congress has the good sense to extend it, one of the nation's best strategies for generating private-sector jobs for hard-to-place jobs for hard-to-place people will expire at the end of the year.

At stake is the Targeted Jobs Tax Credit program that gives a federal tax break to employers who hire economically disadvantaged 18- to 24-year-olds, handicapped people, Vietnam veterans, welfare recipients and ex-offenders. It's one of those rare situations in which everyone—including the American taxpayers—wins.

The program lets inexperienced, untrained, disadvantaged applicants give employers a compelling reason to hire them: part of their salary for two years can be deducted from taxes. Once hired, most of these employees gain training and a work record that helps them move up or on to better jobs, as nearly "five years of experience with the program shows. Many community organizations use the tax credit program as a way to persuade employers to take a chance on the jobless people they are trying to help.

The tax break allows many small businesses to hire additional workers they could not otherwise afford; in some instances, these low-cost employees have kept small enterprises from failing. And the tax credit encourages larger employers to take the risk of hiring inexperienced, untrained applicants by reducing the payroll costs of doing so.

Taxpayers benefit, too. The government initially loses revenue from the tax credits. But it saves considerably more in welfare payments that are no longer necessary for the workers and their dependents—savings that many continue for decades as disadvantaged people who might have been stuck on public aid for most of their lives have a chance to become productive taxpayers.

Chicago employers and community organizations have made particularly effective use of the Targeted Jobs Tax Credit. It will be responsible for the hiring of about 10,500 hard-to-place people here in fiscal 1985. After the tax credit involved is subtracted, net welfare savings will come to about $7 million this year and former welfare recipients who now hold jobs will pay an estimated $4 million in taxes. Employers and community organizations who help in job placements say most of these individuals would not have been hired without the incentive of the tax credit.

Nationally, about 565,000 people got jobs last year through the Targeted Jobs Tax Credit program; as many as 750,000 will this year. As in Chicago, savings in welfare and other public assistance payments will be at least twice the cost to the government in tax credits.

There seems to be little opposition in Congress to renewing the tax credit when it expires on Dec. 31. It does not require a congressional appropriation. But supporters fear it could get lost in the debate over major tax reform legislation this fall.

A program that helps create more jobs and fills them with people unlikely to get work on their own does enormous good. When it also saves the government at least twice as much or more in welfare spending as it costs in tax revenues, there should be no question about its renewal. Congress should not only extend the Targeted Jobs Tax Credit program but should also increase the credit and broaden the definition of those who qualify for its help, as its advocates are urging.

By Mr. KENNEDY:

S. 1613. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide for greater equity in the medicare program: to the Committee on Finance.

S. 1614. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act with respect to payment reform under that title, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

S. 1615. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to permit continuation of health benefits coverage for certain uninsured individuals, to provide incentives for the establishement of statewide insurance pools, to prohibit hospitals from refusing to examine or provide appropriate treatment to stabilize patients in medical emergencies, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

HEALTH CARE LEGISLATION

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I rise to offer three bills designed to begin to deal with the most pressing health needs of the American people. This legislation was developed jointly with Congressman PETE STARK of California, who is introducing companion legislation in the House of Representatives. I would also like to thank Congresswoman KENNELLY for her contribution to this legislation.

Our proposal was divided into three bills for jurisdictional reasons. S. 1613 and S. 1614 propose reforms to the Medicare Program; S. 1615 amends the Public Health Service Act. But all three bills address related problems.

We are introducing this legislation because the crisis in health care the American people confront today demands immediate action.

You do not need an electrocardiogram or even a stethescope to confirm that this crisis exists. Whether the issue is availability of health insurance, denial of needed care, or excessive cost, the condition of the patient is clear: serious, deteriorating, and potentially critical.

I recognize the vital importance of deficit reduction. So the proposals I am advancing today will not mean major new commitments of Federal resources, but they will mean major improvements in health for the American people.

My proposal is directed at several key problems:

The increasing number of Americans without any health insurance;

The decreasing willingness of our Nation's hospitals to provide care to those who cannot pay;

The ever growing burden of health care costs for our Nation's elderly; and

Continued waste in Medicare payments to for profit hospitals and physicians.

Since 1977, the number of Americans without any health insurance coverage has increased a whopping 40 percent, from 25 million people to 35 million people.

At the same time that the number of Americans without health insurance is climbing, the traditional commitment of our country's voluntary hospitals to provide charity care is eroding. According to the American Hospital Association, one in every seven community hospitals adopted explicit limits on charity care in 1982 and 1983 alone.

In every region of the country, public hospitals are reporting four and fivefold increases in economic transfers—a euphemism for turning the needy away. And in Tennessee, in California, in South Carolina, in Alabama, in Arizona, and all across our country emergency patients are being killed or crippled because they cannot find a hospital that will take them in.

Indeed, a recent survey funded by the Robert Woods Johnson Foundation found that 1 million Americans every year are denied medical care because they cannot afford to pay for it. And 5 million Americans do not even seek the health care they need because they know they cannot pay.

We can no longer allow the American people's access to the health care they need to continue to deteriorate.

The elderly are one of the groups that suffer most from the high cost of health care and gaps in health insurance coverage—because they need so much more health care than other members of our population. Reagan benefit cuts and premium increases already enacted will take $11.5 billion from the elderly over the next 5 years. The budget package enacted by the Senate will take another $9.6 billion over the same period if it becomes law. Today, our elderly and disabled Medicare beneficiaries have to pay more than $1 in every $7 of their limited incomes to purchase health care—the same unacceptably high percentage they paid in the dark days before Medicare.

I am pledged to continue to fight the unfair beneficiary cuts proposed by the Republican budget, but it is not enough to try to prevent the Reagan administration from making the elderly's situation even worse. We must take positive steps to address the problems that already exist.

Solving the overall financial problems the high cost of health care poses for the elderly will require more sweeping reforms than are possible in this Congress. But we can make a significant start in this Congress by ensuring that the elderly do not have to pay the price of Medicare reimbursement reforms already enacted. In particular, we can put the calculation of the Medicare hospital deductible and the nursing home copayment on a fairer basis.

Every time a senior citizen enters the hospital, he must pay the deductible. And because the increase in the deductible is calculated based on payment methods Medicare no longer uses, it will increase an outrageous $76 next year, to a staggering $476. And the nursing copayment, which is now $50 a day will increase proportionately.

This 20-percent increase will occur even though the Reagan budget proposes no increase at all in the amount Medicare will pay for a hospital admission.

I say it is unfair for the Government to reap all the savings from prospective payment while Medicare beneficiaries experience only additional costs.

For too long, Medicare has been oriented to providing care only after our senior citizens become sick rather than investing in the preventive care that can keep them well. I believe it is good for beneficiaries and cost-effective for the country to make a modest investment in health to offset the billions we spend on sickness.

At the same time that Medicare beneficiaries are asked to pay far too much for the health care they need and the Reagan administration proposes further draconian cuts in benefits and increases in premiums, the Federal Government still tolerates excessive payments to certain providers. For profit hospitals are still paid an unjustified, $200 million per year bonus called return on equity. Under the administration's budget, Medicare payments to physicians will increase over 12 percent next year, three times as much as the Consumer Price Index, and almost four times as much as payments to hospitals.

The time is now to abolish unjustified bonuses to for-profit hospitals and to lay the groundwork for reforms of physician payments that could save the taxpayers billions of dollars every year.

To respond to these major health problems—the increase in the number of people without health insurance coverage, the decline in charity care, the excessive out of pocket costs faced by Medicare beneficiaries, and the continued wasteful payment by Medicare for some health services—the legislation I am presenting today includes the following steps.

HEALTH INSURANCE COVERAGE

In the area of expanded health insurance coverage, this legislation will require employers to allow laid-off workers to purchase health insurance coverage at lower group rates and to allow open enrollment in family plan health insurance coverage when one member of a family with two workers loses a job and health insurance coverage. Approximately 4 million Americans could potentially benefit from these two provisions.

The legislation will also offer widows, divorcees, and their children the opportunity to continue in employment based health insurance plans for up to 5 years if they are able to pay the premium. There are approximately 5 million Americans who have lost health insurance coverage as a result of divorce or death in the family.

States would be encouraged to set up subsidized group insurance pools for those who do not have access to group health plans and are prevented from purchasing individual health insurance coverage at an affordable price because of preexisting conditions. A few States already have such plans; all States should establish them.

Finally, this legislation will establish a research and demonstration program to develop methods of reducing the cost of health insurance to small employers. Small employers are far less likely to offer health insurance to their employees than larger employers, and even when they do, their employees are unlikely to participate.

The average cost of health insurance in small firms is 40-percent higher than in large firms—an annual premium difference that can add up to a cost of from $950 to $2,400 for family coverage. The bulk of this differential is in higher marketing and administrative costs, and ways to bring this differential down must be developed.

CHARITY CARE

To deal with the problem of charity and emergency care for those without insurance, this legislation will establish a Federal antidumping statute with clear standards for appropriate care and stiff penalties for violation. When one of our citizens arrives at a hospital emergency room with a potentially life-threatening illness or injury he deserves a checkup and treatment, not a credit check and a trip down the road.

This legislation will mandate the Secretary of HHS adjust Medicare payment rates to fairly pay the higher Medicare costs incurred by hospitals that take responsibility for caring for the poor.

And it will require the Secretary of HHS to study and report to the Congress on the adjustments in reimbursements needed to reflect the higher wage costs experienced by inner-city and some rural hospitals that carry heavy charity care loads.

MEDICARE BENEFICIARY COSTS

This legislation will establish a new, fairer basis for calculating the annual increase in the hospital deductible Medicare beneficiaries must pay when they enter the hospital. Under this legislation, the hospital deductible will increase at the same rate as Medicare's payment for a hospital admission and course of treatment, so that our senior citizens share in the economies of prospective payment rather than bearing additional costs. The legislation will lower the nursing home copayment. And it will establish a new demonstration program of prevention centers for our senior citizens to be funded out of the Medicare trust fund.

MEDICARE REIMBURSEMENT REFORMS

To assure that Medicare does not continue to waste money on excessive payments to health care providers, this legislation will abolish the current $200 million per year return on equity subsidy to for-profit hospitals. It will establish a Physician's Payment Commission to study all of the questions surrounding physician reimbursement and to publish, on an expedited basis, a relative value schedule which will provide a basis for a fairer, more cost-effective, reimbursement system of physicians. And it will require the Secretary of HHS to begin to demonstrate a system of paying physicians for inpatient services on the same prospective basis that has been so effective in reducing Medicare's hospital costs. Were such a program in effect today, the Government could save as much as $3 billion over the next 3 years.

CONCLUSION

The legislation I am offering today is a long way from a solution to these extremely important problems. Rather, it is a first step—and a fairly small first step at that. But first steps are important—particularly when the country has been walking backward for the last 5 years.

For too long, the health agenda of the U.S. Congress has been dominated by the narrow, short-sighted, ideological, and mean-spirited agenda of the Reagan administration. I hope that the Senate, by prompt action on this legislation, will serve notice that it is time for a change.

Deficit reduction is vital, but it is not the only objective of the American people and their Government. This year, we intend to show that it is possible to enact a health program that will cut health spending where it needs to be cut, but will also begin the process of healing the grave illnesses that afflict the American health care system.

I call on my colleagues in Congress and the American people to join us in this urgent task.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of these bills be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bills were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1613

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Medicare Miscellaneous Amendments of 1985".

SEC. 2. CHANGE IN DEDUCTIBLE AND COINSURANCE FOR INPATIENT HOSPITAL SERVICES AND FOR POST-HOSPITAL EXTENDED CARE SERVICES.

(a) CHANGE IN PART A HOSPITAL DEDUCTIBLE.—Section 1813(b)(2) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395e(b)(2)) is amended—

(1) by amending the second sentence to read as follows: "Such inpatient hospital deductible shall be equal to the inpatient hospital deductible promulgated for the previous calendar year subject to the same percentage change as the percentage change determined by the Secretary under section 1886(e)(4) (relating to changes in the DRG prospective payment rates) for hospital discharges occurring in the fiscal year that begins in that previous calendar year.", and

(2) by striking out the fourth sentence.

(b) CHANGE IN PART A COINSURANCE FOR POST-HOSPITAL EXTENDED CARE SERVICES.—Section 1813 of such Act is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(3), by striking out "one-eighth of the inpatient hospital deductible" and inserting in lieu thereof "the extended care coinsurance amount", and

(2) by adding at the end of subsection (b) the following new paragraph:

"(3) The extended care coinsurance amount which shall be applicable for the purposes of subsection (a)(3) for a year is one-twelfth of the inpatient hospital deductible for the year. Any amount determined under the preceding sentence which is not a multiple of $1 shall be rounded to the nearest multiple of $1 (or, if it is midway between multiples of $1, to the higher multiple of $1).".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to calendar years beginning with 1986.

SEC. 3. STUDY OF METHODOLOGY FOR AREA WAGE ADJUSTMENT FOR CENTRAL CITIES AND RURAL AREAS.

(a) REQUIREMENT.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services, in consultation with the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission, shall collect information and shall develop one or more methodologies to permit the adjustment of the wage indices used for purposes of section 1886(d)(3)(E) of the Social Security Act, in order to more accurately reflect hospital labor markets, by taking into account variations in wages and wage-related costs—

(1) between the central city portion of urban areas and other parts of urban areas, and

(2) among different rural areas within a State.

(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary shall report to Congress on the information collected and the methodologies developed under subsection (a) not later than May 1, 1986. The report shall include a recommendation as to the feasibility and desirability of implementing such methodologies.

SEC. 4. DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS FOR PAYMENT FOR INPATIENT SERVICES OF PHYSICIANS ON THE BASIS OF DIAGNOSIS-RELATED GROUPS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services, in consultation with the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission (established under section 1886(e) of the Social Security Act) shall conduct demonstration projects in accordance with this section on the feasibility of making payments under title XVIII of the Social Security Act for physicians' services furnished to individuals receiving inpatient hospital services from subsection (d) hospitals (as defined in section 1886(d)(1)(B) of the Social Security Act) on the basis of the classification of discharges by diagnosis-related groups established under section 1886(d)(4) of that Act.

(b) CONDUCT OF DEMONSTRATIONS.—(1) The demonstration projects shall be conducted at a variety of types of hospitals, including hospitals located in rural and urban areas, teaching and non-teaching hospitals, and public hospitals, and hospitals with different types of medical staff arrangements.

(2) The demonstration projects shall include projects to demonstrate—

(A) payment under part B of title XVIII of the Social Security Act, and

(B) a combined payment, to a hospital or to appropriate physician group, including both amounts payable under part A as well as amounts payable under part B.

(3) The demonstration projects shall include projects that test the desirability of providing payment based on all the classifications of discharges, as well as only selected classifications.

(4) The demonstration projects shall be designed in a manner to assure that individuals entitled to benefits under title XVIII are not required to pay more for the receipt of health care services than would be the case if the projects were not in operation.

(5) The Secretary shall provide under the demonstration projects for payment of amounts that exceed the amounts otherwise payable under title XVIII of the Social Security Act if the Secretary determines that such increased payments are necessary in order to induce hospital and physician participation in a demonstration project.

(d) TIMETABLE FOR AND REPORT ON PROJECTS.—(1) The Secretary shall first provide for the establishment of demonstration projects not later than July 1, 1986.

(2) The Secretary shall make an interim report to Congress on the demonstration projects conducted under this section not later than January 1, 1988.

(3) The Secretary shall make a final report to Congress on the demonstration projects conducted under this section not later than July 1, 1989.

(e) FUNDING.—There are transferred to the Secretary in appropriate proportions from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund (established under section 1817 of the Social Security Act) and from the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund (established by section 1841 of that Act) such sums as the Secretary determines to be appropriate to carry out this section. Grants and payments under contracts may be made either in advance or by way of reimbursement, as may be determined by the Secretary, and shall be made in such installments and on such conditions as the Secretary finds necessary to carry out the purpose of this section.

(f) WAIVER OF MEDICARE REQUIREMENTS.—The Secretary shall waive compliance with such requirements of title XVIII of the Social Security Act to the extent consistent with this section and for the period the Secretary finds necessary for the conduct of the demonstration program.

S. 1614

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Medicare Budget Reconciliation Amendments of 1985".

SEC. 2. COMPUTATION OF ADDITIONAL PAYMENT AMOUNTS FOR HOSPITALS SERVING A DISPROPORTIONATE SHARE OF LOW-INCOME PATIENTS.

(a) REQUIRING ADJUSTMENT.—Section 1886(d)(5) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ww(d)(5)) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(F)(i) The Secretary shall provide under this subparagraph, for discharges occurring during fiscal years 1986 and 1987, for an additional payment amount, for discharges occurring in a cost reporting period of a hospital, for a subsection (d) hospital that is located in an urban area, that has 100 or more beds, and that—

"(I) serves a significantly disproportionate number of patients who have low income (as defined in clause (iv)(I)), or

"(II) can demonstrate that its net inpatient care revenues (excluding any of such revenues attributable to this title or State plans approved under title (XIX) during the cost reporting period for indigent care from State and local government sources exceed 30 percent of its total of such revenues during the period.

"(ii) The amount of such payment for each discharge shall be the amount determined under paragraph (1)(A)(ii)(II) (or, of applicable, the amount determined under paragraph (1)(A)(iii)) for that discharge multiplied by the disproportionate share adjustment percentage established under clause (iii) for the cost reporting period in which the discharge occurs.

"(iii) The disproportionate share adjustment percentage for a cost reporting period—

"(I) for a hospital described in clause (i)(II) is equal to 16 percent, and

"(II) for other hospitals is equal to seven-tenths of the excess low income patient percentage (as defined in clause (iv)(IV)) for that period, but in no case may the percentage for any hospital for any period exceed 16 percent.

"(iv) In this subparagraph:

"(I) A hospital 'serves a significantly disproportionate number of patients who have low income' for a cost reporting period if the hospital has a low income patient percentage (as defined in subclause (II)) for that period which equals, or exceeds 15 percent.

"(II) The term 'low income patient percentage' means, with respect to a cost reporting period of a hospital, the percentage of its total number of patient days of inpatient hospital services it provided during period which are attributable to low income patients (as defined in subclause (III)).

"(III) The term 'low income patient' means, with respect to inpatient hospital services provided to a patient, a patient who was, or is determined to have been, entitled to medical assistance under title XIX with respect to some or all of such services during the hospital stay, and includes such an individual notwithstanding the fact that some or all of such services were actually paid for under this title.

"(IV) The term 'excess low income patient percentage' means, for a cost reporting of a hospital, the hospital's low income patient percentage (as defined in subclause (II)) for that period minus 15 percent.".

(b) RESTANDARDIZING DRG PAYMENT AMOUNTS TO REFLECT DISPROPORTIONATE SHARE PAYMENTS.—Section 1886(d)(2)(C) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (ii),

(2) by striking out the period at the end of clause (iii) and inserting in lieu thereof ", and", and

(3) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(iv) for discharges occurring during fiscal years 1986 and 1987, excluding an estimate of the additional payments to certain hospitals to be made under paragraph (5)(F).".

SEC. 3. RETURN ON EQUITY CAPITAL FOR INPATIENT HOSPITAL SERVICES AND OTHER SERVICES.

(a) INPATIENT HOSPITAL SERVICES.—(1) Section 1861(v)(1) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(v)(1)) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(P) Such regulations may not provide for any payment, with respect to the reasonable costs of inpatient hospital services, for a return on equity capital for hospitals.".

(2) Section 1886(g) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ww(g)) is amended—

(A) by striking out "(1)" after "(g)", and

(B) by striking out paragraph (2).

(b) OTHER SERVICES.—(1) Section 1861(v)(1)(P) of such Act, as added by subsection (a)(1), is amended by inserting "(i)" after "(P)" and by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(ii) If such regulations provide for the payment for a return on equity capital, the rate of return to be recognized, for determining the reasonable cost of services furnished in a cost reporting period, shall be equal to the average of the rates of interest, for each of the months any part of which is included in the period, on obligations issued for purchase by the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund.".

(2) Section 1861(v)(1)(B) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(v)(1)(B)) is amended—

(A) by striking out "any fiscal period" and "such fiscal period" and inserting in lieu thereof, "any cost reporting period" and "the period", respectively, and

(B) by striking out "not exceed one and one-half times" in the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "be equal to".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATES.—(1) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply to payments made, on the basis of reasonable cost, for hospital cost reporting periods beginning on or after October 1, 1986. Costs attributable to a return on equity capital shall not be included in determining national and regional adjusted DRG prospective payment rates (under section 1886(d) of the Social Security Act) for discharges occurring on or after October 1, 1986.

(2) The amendments made by subsection (b) shall apply to cost reporting periods beginning on or after October 1, 1985.

SEC. 4. EXPANSION OF MEMBERSHIP AND DUTIES OF THE PROSPECTIVE PAYMENT ASSESSMENT COMMISSION TO INCLUDE REVIEW OF PAYMENTS FOR PHYSICIANS' SERVICES.

(a) EXPANSION AND ESTABLISHMENT OF SUBCOMMITTEES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1886(e)(6) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ww(e)(6) is amended—

(A) by amending subparagraph (A) to read as follows:

"(A)(i) The Commission shall consist of 23 members. Fifteen members of the Commission shall first be appointed no later than April 1, 1984, and the remaining members shall first be appointed no later than January 1, 1986, for a term of three years, except that the Director may provide for such shorter terms as will insure that (on a continuing basis) the terms of no more than eight members expire in any one year. The Director shall appoint a member to serve as Chairman.

"(ii) The Chairman of the Commission shall provide for two subcommittees of the Commission, one with functions and responsibilities relating primarily to hospital payment issues and the other with functions and responsibilities relating primarily to physician payment issues. The Chairman may assign members of the Commission to serve on either or both subcommittees of the Commission."; and

(B) in subparagraph (B), by inserting "representatives of consumer and elderly groups," after "third party payors,".

(2) INITIAL ASSIGNMENT OF MEMBERS TO SUBCOMMITTEES.—The Chairman of the Commission shall initially assign—

(A) to serve on the hospital payment subcommittee of the Commission—

(i) all the members of the Commission serving in positions established before the date of the enactment of this Act, and

(ii) two of the members appointed to the Commission for additional positions established by the amendment made by paragraph (1), and

(B) to serve on the physician payment subcommittee of the Commission the six remaining members of the Commission who are appointed to serve in the additional positions so established.

(b) ADDITIONAL FUNCTIONS RELATING TO PHYSICIANS' PAYMENTS.—Section 1886(e) of such Act is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(7)(A) The Commission shall make recommendations to the Congress, not later than February 1 of each year (beginning with 1987), regarding adjustments to the reasonable charge levels for physicians' services recognized under section 1842(b) and changes in the methodology for determining the rates of payment, and for making payment, for physicians' services under this title and other items and services under part B.

"(B) In making its recommendations, the Commission shall—

"(i) consider, and make recommendations on the feasibility and desirability of reducing, the differences in payment amounts for physicians' services under part B which are based on differences in geographic location or specialty;

"(ii) review the input costs (including time, professional skills, and risks) associated with the provision of different physicians' services;

"(iii) identify those charges recognized as reasonable under section 1842(b) which are significantly out-of-line, based on the considerations of clauses (i) and (ii);

"(iv) assess the likely impact of different adjustments in payment rates, particularly their impact on physician participation in the participation program established under section 1842(h) and on beneficiary access to necessary physicians' services;

"(v) make recommendations on ways to increase physician participation in that participation program and the acceptance of payment under part B on an assignment-related basis;

"(vi) make recommendations respecting the advisability and feasibility of making changes in the payment system for physicians' services under part B based on (I) the Secretary's study under section 603(b)(2) of the Social Security Amendments of 1983 (relating to payments for physicians' services furnished to hospital inpatients on the basis of diagnosis-related groups) and (II) the Offices' report under section 2309 of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 (relating to physician reimbursement under part B);

"(vii) identify those procedures, involving the use of assistants at surgery, for which payment for those assistants should not be made under this title; and

"(viii) identify those procedures for which an opinion of a second physician should be required before payment is made under this title.

"(C) The Commission also shall advise and make recommendations to the Secretary respecting the development of the relative value scale under section 1845.".

(c) STUDY OF RELATIVE VALUE SCALE FOR PHYSICIANS' SERVICES.—Part B of title XVIII of such Act is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"STUDY OF RELATIVE VALUE SCALE FOR PHYSICIANS' SERVICES

"SEC. 1845. (a) The Secretary shall develop a relative value scale that establishes a numerical relationship among the various physicians' services for which payment may be made under this part.

"(b) In developing the scale, the Secretary shall consider among other items—

"(1) the report of the Office of Technology Assessment under section 2309 of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984,

"(2) the recommendations of the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission under section 1886(e)(7)(C), and

"(3) factors with respect to the input costs for furnishing particular physicians' services, such as—

"(A) the differences in costs of furnishing services in different settings,

"(B) the differences in skill levels and training required to perform the services, and

"(C) the time required, and risk involved, in furnishing different services.

"(c) The Secretary shall complete the development of the relative value scale under this section, and report to Congress on the development, not later than April 1, 1987. The report shall include recommendations for the application of the scale to the payment for physicians' services furnished under this part on or after October 1, 1987.".

(d) MODIFICATION OF FUNDING FORMULA.—Section 1886(e)(6)(I)(ii) of such Act is amended by striking out "Eighty-five" and "15" and inserting in lieu thereof "Fifty" and "50".

(e) STAFFING.—Section 1886(e)(6)(C)(i) of such Act is amended by striking out "25" and inserting in lieu thereof "35".

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect on October 1, 1985.

SEC. 5. DEMONSTRATION OF PREVENTIVE HEALTH SERVICES UNDER MEDICARE.

(a) DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") shall establish a demonstration program designed to reduce disability and dependency through the provision of preventive health services to individuals entitled to benefits under title XVIII of the Social Security Act (hereinafter in this section referred to as "medicare beneficiaries").

(b) PREVENTIVE HEALTH SERVICES UNDER DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM.—The preventive health services to be made available under the demonstration program shall include—

(1) health screenings,

(2) health risk appraisals,

(3) immunizations, and

(4) counseling on and instruction in—

(A) diet and nutrition,

(B) reduction of stress,

(C) exercise and exercise programs,

(D) sleep regulation,

(E) injury prevention,

(F) prevention of alcohol and drug abuse,

(G) prevention of mental health disorders,

(H) self-care, including use of medication, and

(I) reduction of smoking.

(c) CONDUCT OF PROGRAM.—The demonstration program shall—

(1) be conducted under the direction of accredited public or private nonprofit schools of public health;

(2) be conducted in no fewer than five sites, which sites shall be chosen to as to be geographically diverse and shall be readily accessible to a significant number of medicare beneficiaries;

(3) involve community outreach efforts at each site to enroll the maximum number of medicare beneficiaries in the program; and

(4) be designed—

(A) to test alternative methods of payment for preventive health services; including payment on a prepayment basis as well as payment on a fee-for-service basis,

(B) to permit a variety of appropriate health care providers to furnish preventive health services, including physicians, health educators, nurses, allied health personnel, dieticians, and clinical psychologists, and

(C) to facilitate evaluation under subsection (d).

(d) EVALUATION.—The Secretary shall evaluate the demonstration project in order to determine—

(1) the short-term and long-term costs and benefits of providing preventive health services for medicare beneficiaries, including any reduction in inpatient services resulting from providing the services, and

(2) what practical financing mechanisms exist to provide payment for preventive health services under title XVIII of the Social Security Act.

(e) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—(1) Not later than three years after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a preliminary report to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and to the Committee on Finance of the Senate in the progress made in the demonstration program, including a description of the sites at which the program is being conducted and the preventive health services being provided at the different sites.

(2) Not later than five years after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a final report to those Committees on the demonstration program and shall include in the report—

(A) the evaluation described in subsection (d), and

(B) recommendations for appropriate legislative changes to incorporate payment for cost-effective preventive health services into the medicare program.

(f) FUNDING.—Expenditures made for the demonstration program shall be made from the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund (established by section 1841 of the Social Security Act). Grants and payments under contracts may be made either in advance or by way of reimbursement, as may be determined by the Secretary, and shall be made in such installments and on such conditions as the Secretary finds necessary to carry out the purpose of this section.

(g) WAIVER OF MEDICARE REQUIREMENTS.—The Secretary shall waive compliance with such requirements of title XVIII of the Social Security Act to the extent and for the period the Secretary finds necessary for the conduct of the demonstration program.

S. 1615

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 101. TEMPORARY EXTENSION OF COVERAGE AT GROUP RATES FOR LAID-OFF WORKERS AND FOR FAMILY MEMBERS OF DECEASED OR DIVORCED WORKERS; OPEN ENROLLMENT FOR SPOUSES OF UNEMPLOYED WORKERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Public Health Service Act is amended by adding at the end the following new title:

"TITLE XXII—REQUIREMENTS FOR CERTAIN GROUP HEALTH INSURANCE POLICIES

"REQUIREMENT OF CONTINUATION COVERAGE AND OPEN ENROLLMENT PERIOD

"SEC. 2201. (a) In accordance with regulations which the Secretary shall prescribe—

"(1) each employer—

"(A) which is now or hereafter required during any calendar quarter to pay its employees the minimum wage prescribed by section 6 of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (or would be required to pay its employees such wage but for section 13(a) of such Act), and

"(B) which during such calendar quarter employed an average number of employees of not less than 25, shall include in any health benefits plan, and

(2) any State and each political subdivision thereof which during any calendar quarter employed an average number of employees of not less than 25, as a condition of payment to the State of funds under section 314(d), 317, 318, 1002, 1525, or 1613, shall include in any health benefits plan, offered to such employees in the calendar year beginning after such calendar quarter of the Secretary (i) the option of continuation coverage specified in section 2202, and (ii) the spousal open enrollment period specified in section 2203.

"(b) DEFINITION OF EMPLOYER.—For purposes of this section, the term 'employer' does not include—

"(1) the Government of the United States, the government of the District of Columbia or any territory or possession of the United States or any agency or instrumentality (including the United States Postal Service and Postal Rate Commission) of any of the foregoing, except that such term includes nonappropriated fund instrumentalities of the Government of the United States;

"(2) a church, convention or association or churches, or any organization operated, supervised or controlled by a church, convention or association of churches which organization is an organization described in section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954; or

"(3) a State or any political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality thereof.

"OPTION OF CONTINUATION COVERAGE

"SEC. 2202. (a) REQUIRED OPTION.—The requirement of continuation coverage referred to in clause (i) of section 2201(a) is that each covered employee or other qualified beneficiary, who would lose coverage under the health benefits plan because of a qualifying event, is given, in accordance with this section, the option of electing continuation coverage under the plan.

"(b) ELECTION.—

"(1) ELECTION PERIOD.—The option of electing continuation coverage must be offered during a period that—

"(A) begins not later than the termination date (as defined in subsection (c)(2)),

"(B) is of at least 60 days duration, and

"(C) ends not earlier than 60 days after the date the qualified beneficiary is notified under subsection (f)(4) or the termination date, whichever date is later.

"(2) EFFECT OF ELECTION ON OTHER BENEFICIARIES.—Unless otherwise specified in the election—

"(A) any such election by a covered employee shall be deemed to include an election with respect to all other qualified beneficiaries of the employee whose coverage would, but for continuation coverage provided in accordance with this section, be affected by the qualifying event; and

"(B) except as provided in subparagraph (A), any such election by an individual who is a qualified beneficiary described in subsection (g)(2)(A) shall be deemed to include an election of continuation coverage on behalf of any other qualified beneficiary (other than the covered employee) whose coverage would, but for continuation coverage provided in accordance with this section, be affected by the qualifying event.

"(c) QUALIFYING EVENT AND TERMINATION DATE.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) A qualifying event under a health benefits plan, with respect to a covered employee, is any of the following events if the coverage of a qualified beneficiary under the plan would, but for continuation coverage provided in compliance with this section, be terminated by the occurrence of the event:

"(A) The termination, or reduction of hours, of the covered employee's employment (other than for cause).

"(B) The death of the covered employee.

"(C) The divorce or separation of the covered employee from his or her spouse.

"(D) The covered employee becoming entitled to benefits under title XVIII of the Social Security Act.

"(2) The term 'termination date' means, with respect to a qualifying event, the date on which coverage of a qualified beneficiary under a group health plan would be terminated under the plan but for continuation coverage provided in compliance with this section.

"(d) TERMS OF CONTINUATION COVERAGE.—Any continuation coverage elected by or on behalf of a qualified beneficiary shall meet the following requirements:

"(1) NO REQUIREMENT OF INSURABILITY.—The coverage may not be conditioned upon, or discriminate on the basis of lack of, evidence of insurability.

"(2) CONTINUED BENEFITS.—The coverage shall consist of coverage which is identical to the coverage provided under the plan to similarly situated beneficaries under the plan with respect to whom a qualifying event has not occurred.

"(3) FAMILY OPTION.—If, at the time of the qualifying event, an individual was covered under the health benefits plan because of the individual's relationship to a covered employee and the individual is a qualified beneficiary, the option must be provided of continuing coverage of the individual.

"(4) PERIOD OF CONTINUED COVERAGE.—The coverage shall be for a period commencing upon the expiration date and ending not earlier than the earliest of the following:

"(A) ONE YEAR FOR UNEMPLOYED.—In the case of a qualifying event described in subsection (c)(1)(A) (relating to unemployment or reduction of employment), one year after the date the continued coverage begins.

"(B) FIVE YEARS FOR OTHERS.—In the case of a qualifying event not described in subsection (c)(1)(A), five years after the date the continued coverage begins.

"(C) END OF PLAN.—The date on which the employer ceases to provide any health benefits plan to employees.

"(D) FAILURE TO PAY PREMIUMS.—The date on which there is a failure in making timely payment of any premium required under the plan with respect to the qualified beneficary.

"(E) REEMPLOYMENT OR MEDICARE ELIGIBILITY.—The date on which the qualified beneficiary first becomes, after the date of the election, a covered employee under any other health benefits plan offered by an employer or becomes entitled to benefits under title XVIII of the Social Security Act.

"(F) REMARRIAGE OF SPOUSE.—In the case of a qualified beneficiary spouse described in subsection (g)(2)(A), the date on which the qualified beneficiary remarries and becomes covered under a health benefits plan as the spouse of a covered employee.

"(G) CHILD TURNING MAJORITY.—In the case of any individual who is a qualified beneficiary by reason of having been a covered dependent child of a covered employee, the date on which the individual ceases to be a covered dependent child of the qualified beneficiary.

"(5) CONVERSION OPTION.—In the case of a qualified beneficiary whose period of continued coverage expires under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (4), the plan must provide to the beneficiary, during the 180-day period ending on the date of expiration of the period of continued coverage, the option of enrollment under a conversion health plan otherwise generally available to beneficiaries under the plan.

"(e) PREMIUMS FOR CONTINUATION COVERAGE.—

"(1) AMOUNT.—The total premium charged by a health benefits plan with respect to any qualified beneficiary for continuation coverage under the plan shall not exceed the sum of employer premiums and employee premiums generally charged with respect to coverage under the plan of similarly situated beneficiaries with respect to whom a qualifying event has not occurred. The total of all premiums charged by the plan in any plan year may be based upon reasonably anticipated community costs for such plan year of the entire pool of covered employees and other beneficiaries under the plan, including qualified beneficiaries receiving continuation coverage under the plan under this section.

"(2) PAYMENTS.—The plan may provide for payment of the total premium by the qualified beneficiary receiving such coverage, or for payment of all or part of such premium by the employer or other party and payment of the remainder of such premium by such beneficiary. The plan shall provide for payment of any premium by a qualified beneficiary in monthly installments if so elected by the beneficiary. If an election is made during an election period but after the termination date, the plan shall permit payment of any premium for continuation coverage during the preceding period to be made within 45 days of the date of the election.

"(3) PREMIUM DEFINED.—As used in this subsection, the term 'premium' means any amount payable with respect to the provision of coverage under a health benefits plan.

"(f) NOTICE REQUIREMENTS.—In accordance with regulations of the Secretary—

"(1) the health benefits plan must provide, at the time of commencement of coverage under the plan, for written notice to each covered employee and spouse of the employee (if any) of the rights under this section;

"(2) the employer of a covered employee under the plan must notify the health benefits plan administrator if the employee dies;

"(3) each covered employee is responsible for notifying the health benefits plan administrator of the occurrence of any qualifying event (other than that described in subsection (c)(1)(B)) respecting that employee; and

"(4) the health benefits plan administrator must notify each qualified beneficiary, within a period of 14 days after the date the administrator is notified concerning a qualifying event affecting that beneficiary, of—

"(A) the termination date with respect to the beneficiary, and

"(B) the beneficiary's right to elect continuation coverage under this section and the election period established under subsection (b)(1) during which the beneficiary can exercise that right.

"(g) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) COVERED EMPLOYEE.—The term 'covered employee' means an individual who is (or was) provided coverage under a health benefits plan by virtue of the individual's employment or previous employment with an employer.

"(2) QUALIFIED BENEFICIARY.—The term 'qualified beneficiary' means, with respect to a covered employee under a health benefits plan, the covered individual and any other individual who, on the date before the date of a qualifying event for that employee—

"(A) is a beneficiary under the plan as the spouse of the employee and has been married to the employee for at least the immediately preceding 30-day period, or

"(B) is a beneficiary under the plan as a covered dependent child of the employee.

"(3) COVERED DEPENDENT CHILD.—The term 'covered dependent child' means, with respect to a covered employee, and individual who meets the generally applicable requirements of the plan for treatment as a dependent child covered under the plan by reason of the coverage of the employee under the plan.

"(4) GROUP HEALTH PLAN ADMINISTRATION.—The term 'health benefits plan administrator' means, in connection with a health benefits plan, any person who provides for administrative functions relating to enrollment of individuals under the plan. For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'person' includes one or more individuals, governments or agencies of the United States or any State or political subdivision thereof, labor unions, partnerships, associations, corporations, legal representatives, mutual companies, joint ventures, joint stock companies, societies, trusts, unincorporated organizations, trustees, trustees in bankruptcy, receivers, and fiduciaries.

"OPEN ENROLLMENT FOR SPOUSES OF UNEMPLOYED WORKERS

"SEC. 2203. (a) REQUIRING OPEN ENROLLMENT PERIOD.—The requirement of a spousal open enrollment period referred to in clause (ii) of section 2201(a) is that for each married employee the plan must provide for an open enrollment period (meeting the requirements of this section) for each married employee—

"(1) who is (or, but for a previous election, would be) covered under the plan, and

"(2) whose spouse loses or will lose coverage under a health benefits plan due to the spouse's separation (other than for cause) from employment.

"(b) OPEN ENROLLMENT PERIOD.—The open enrollment period must—

"(1) be a period of not less than 60 days, and

"(2) begin not earlier than 30 days before the date of the spouse's separation from employment and not later than such date, except, at the option of the employee, the period may be delayed to begin on a date not later than the date the employee's spouse actually loses coverage under a health benefits plan.

"(c) LOSS OF COVERAGE.—For purposes of this section, a spouse shall not be considered to have lost coverage during any period (after the separation from employment) in which the coverage is continued and for which a contribution toward the cost of the coverage is being made by an employer, union, or entity other than the spouse.

"(d) TERMS OF ENROLLMENT OPTION.—

"(1) NO REQUIREMENT OF INSURABILITY.—The terms of such an enrollment may not require, or discriminate on the basis of lack of, evidence of insurability.

"(2) BENEFITS AND ENROLLMENT.—Except as provided in paragraph (3), the coverage and terms of an enrollment during an open enrollment period provided under subsection (a) shall be the same as the terms (including any option for coverage of immediate family members) most recently offered with respect to the enrollment of that employee or (at the employer's option), of newly hired or other employees similarly situated.

"(3) EFFECTIVE DATE OF COVERAGE.—Except as provided in paragraph (4), the coverage provided pursuant to an individual's enrollment during an open enrollment period under this section shall be effective no later than—

"(A) the first day of the first pay period that begins more than 5 days after the date the individual enrolls, or

"(B) 30 days after the date the individual enrolls, whichever is earlier.

"(4) IMMEDIATE COVERAGE OF ADDED FAMILY MEMBERS.—If an employee was previously covered and only exercises the option to cover immediate family members, the coverage of the immediate family members shall begin not later than the first day of the first pay period that begins after the date the individual exercises the option.".

ENFORCEMENT

"SEC. 2204. (a) CIVIL PENALTY.—Any employer (other than a State or political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality thereof) who knowingly does not comply with one or more of the requirements of this title shall be subject to a civil penalty of not more than $10,000. If such noncompliance continues, a civil penalty may be assessed and collected under this subsection for each 30-day period such noncompliance continues. Such penalty may be assessed by the Secretary and collected in a civil action brought by the United States in a United States district court.

"(b) NOTICE AND HEARING RIGHTS.—In any proceeding by the Secretary to assess a civil penalty under this section, no penalty shall be assessed until the employer charged shall have been given notice and an opportunity to present its views on such charge. In determining the amount of the penalty, or the amount agreed upon in compromise, the Secretary shall consider the gravity of the noncompliance and the demonstrated good faith of the employer charged in attempting to achieve rapid compliance after notification by by the Secretary of a noncompliance.

"(c) TRIAL DE NOVO.—In any civil action brought to review the assessment of a civil penalty assessed under this section, the court shall, at the request of any party to such action, hold a trial de novo on the assessment of such civil penalty and in any civil action to collect such a civil penalty, the court shall, at the request of any party to such action, hold a trial de novo on the assessment of such civil penalty unless in a prior civil action to review the assesment of such penalty the court held a trial de novo on such assessment.

"(d) PRIVATE RIGHT OF ACTION.—Any employer (other than a State or political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality thereof) who knowingly does not comply with one or more of the requirements of this title shall be liable to individuals for damages (including health care costs incurred) resulting from the employer's failure to comply with the requirements.

"(e) ENFORCEMENT AGAINST STATES.—If the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing to a State, finds that it or any of its political subdivisions has failed to comply with one or more requirements of this title, the Secretary shall terminate payments to such State under section 314(d), 317, 318, 1002, 1525, and 1613 and notify the Governor of such State that further payments under such sections will not be made to the State until the Secretary is satisfied that there will no longer be any such failure to comply.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) GENERAL RULE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to plan years beginning on or after January 1, 1986.

(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENTS.—In the case of a health benefits plan maintained pursuant to one or more collective bargaining agreements between employee representatives and one or more employers ratified before the date of the enactment of this Act, the amendments made by this section shall not apply to plan years beginning before the earlier of—

(A) the date on which the last of the collective bargaining agreements relating to the plan terminates (determined without regard to any extension thereof agreed to after the date of the enactment of this Act), or

(B) January 1, 1987.

For purposes of subparagraph (A), any plan amendment made pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement relating to the plan which amends the plan solely to conform to any requirement added by this section shall not be treated as a termination of such collective bargaining agreement.

(c) NOTIFICATION TO COVERED EMPLOYEES.—At the time that the amendments made by this section apply to a health benefits plan described in section 2201 of the Public Health Service Act, the plan shall notifiy each covered employee, and spouse of the employee (if any), who is covered under the plan at that time of the continuation coverage and open enrollment period required under sections 2202 and 2203 of that Act. The notice furnished under this subsection is in lieu of notice that may otherwise be required under section 2202(f)(1) of that Act.

TITLE II—INCENTIVES FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF STATEWIDE INSURANCE POOLS

SEC. 201. PROVIDING FOR LARGE EMPLOYERS' PARTICIPATION IN QUALIFIED STATE POOLING ASSOCIATIONS.

(a) ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENT UNDER PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE ACT.—Title XXII of the Public Health Service Act (as added by part A of this title) is amended as follows:

(1) In section 2201(a)—

(A) redesignate subsection (b) as subsection (c), and

(B) insert after subsection (a) the following new subsection:

"(b) PARTICIPATION IN QUALIFIED STATE POOLING ASSOCIATIONS.—

"(1) REQUIREMENT.—In accordance with regulations which the Secretary shall prescribe, in the case of each employer described in subsection (a)(1) that offers a health benefits plan, either the employer or the entity through which benefits under the plan are offered must be a member of a qualified pooling association (described in paragraph (2)) in each State in which benefits under the plan are offered as a result of employment in that State.

"(2) QUALIFIED POOLING ASSOCIATION.—In paragraph (1), the term 'qualified pooling association' means any organization which—

"(A) is a nonprofit corporation established pursuant to and regulated by State law;

"(B) permits any of the following doing business in the State to be participating members:

"(i) insurers writing expense incurred health insurance,

"(ii) hospital and medical service plan corporations,

"(iii) health maintenance organizations, and

"(iv) employers and other health financing entities;

"(C) makes available (without regard to health conditions) to all residents of the State, who are not eligible for benefits under part A of title XVIII of the Social Security, levels of health insurance typical of the levels of coverage provided through large employer groups;

"(D) charges a pool premium rate expected to be self-supporting based upon a reasonable actuarial determination of anticipated experience and expected expenses, such pool premium rate in no event to exceed 150 percent of average premium rates for individual standard risks in the State for comparable coverage; and

"(E) assesses losses of the pool equitably among all participating members.".

(2) In section 2204(a), insert before the period at the end of the first sentence the following: "(or, in the case of a failure to comply with a requirement of section 2201(b), a civil penalty of not more than 10 percent of the amount of an employer's expenditures for plans which do not comply with that requirement)".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This amendments made by this section take effect on January 1, 1987.

TITLE III—PROHIBITING REFUSAL OF EXAMINATION OR APPROPRIATE CARE TO STABILIZE PATIENTS IN MEDICAL EMERGENCIES

SEC. 301. RESPONSIBILITIES OF HOSPITALS IN EMERGENCY CASES.

(a) MEDICAL SCREENING REQUIREMENT.—In the case of a hospital (as defined in subsection (e)(3)) that has a hospital emergency department, if any individual comes to the emergency department and a request is made on the individual's behalf for examination or treatment for a medical condition, the hospital must provide for an appropriate medical screening examination to determine whether or not an emergency medical condition (within the meaning of subsection (e)(1)) exists or to determine if the individual is in active labor (within the meaning of subsection (e)(2)).

(b) NECESSARY STABILIZING TREATMENT FOR EMERGENCY MEDICAL CONDITIONS AND ACTIVE LABOR.—If any individual comes to the hospital and the individual is determined (through the screening described in subsection (a) or otherwise) by qualified medical personnel to have an emergency medical condition or to be in active labor, the hospital must provide either—

(1) within the staff and facilities available at the hospital, for such further medical examination and such treatment as may be required to stabilize the medical condition or to provide for treatment of the labor, unless the examination or treatment is refused, or

(2) for transfer of the patient to another medical facility in accordance with subsection (c).

(c) RESTRICTING TRANSFERS UNTIL PATIENT STABILIZED.—

(1) RULE.—If a patient at a hospital has an emergency medical condition which has not been stabilized (within the meaning of subsection (e)(4)(B)) or is in active labor, the hospital may not transfer the patient unless—

(A) there has been a written determination by a physician (within the meaning of section 1861(r)(1) of the Social Security Act) that, based upon the reasonable risks and benefits to the patient, and based upon the information available at the time, the benefits obtained from the provision of appropriate medical treatment at another medical facility outweigh the increased risks to the individual's medical condition from effecting the transfer, and

(B) the transfer is an appropriate transfer (within the meaning of paragraph (2)) to that facility.

(2) APPROPRIATE TRANSFER.—An appropriate transfer to a medical facility is a transfer—

(A) in which the receiving facility—

(i) has available space and qualified personnel for the treatment of the patient,

(ii) has agreed to accept transfer of the patient and to provide appropriate medical treatment, and

(iii) is being provided appropriate medical records (or copies thereof) of the examination and treatment effected at the transferring facility;

(B) in which the transfer is effected through qualified personnel and transportation equipment, including the use of medically appropriate life support measures during the transfer; and

(C) which meets such other requirements as the Secretary may find necessary in the interest of the health and safety of patients transferred.

(d) ENFORCEMENT.—

(1) AS CONDITION OF MEDICARE PROVIDER AGREEMENT.—Failure of a hospital to meet the requirements of this section subjects the hospital to termination of its medicare provider agreement under title XVIII of the Social Security Act, in accordance with section 1866(b) of that Act.

(2) CIVIL MONETARY PENALTIES.—In addition to the other grounds for imposition of a civil money penalty under section 1128A(a) of the Social Security Act, a hospital that has entered into a participation agreement under section 1866 of that Act that knowingly violates a requirement of this section is subject, under that section 1128(a) of that Act to a civil money penalty of not more than $25,000 for each such violation.

(3) CIVIL ENFORCEMENT.—Any person that is adversely affected directly by a hospital's violation of a requirement of this section may bring an appropriate action, in an appropriate court of general jurisdiction of the State in which the hospital is located or in the appropriate Federal district court, for damages to the person arising from the violation and for such other equitable relief as may be appropriate to remedy the violation or deter subsequent violations.

(4) CRIMINAL PENALTIES.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—A responsible physician (as defined in subparagraph (B)) who—

(i) has professional responsibilities for the provision of a screening examination of a patient in the hospital's emergency department and either (I) knowingly fails to provide for any screening examination required under subsection (a) if the failure represents a gross deviation from the prevailing local standards of medical practice, or (II) provides for such a screening examination which is conducted in a manner that is so inappropriate as to represent a gross deviation from the prevailing local standards of medical practice, or

(ii) has professional responsibilities for the treatment of a patient, knows (or has reason to know) that the patient has an emergency medical condition or is in active labor, and who, within the staff and facilities available at the hospital, either (I) knowingly fails to carry out the individual's responsibilities to provide for treatment of the patient under subsection (b) if the failure represents a gross deviation from the prevailing local standards of medical practice, or (II) provides for such treatment in a manner that is so inappropriate as to represent a gross deviation from the prevailing local standards of medical practice, or

(iii) has professional responsibilities for the treatment of a patient, knows (or has reason to know) that either the patient has an emergency medical condition which has not been stabilized or the patient is in active labor, and either—

(I) knowingly transfers (or orders the transfer of) the patient other than to another medical facility, or

(II) knowingly transfers (or orders the transfer of) the patient to another medical facility, if the physician knows (or has reason to know) that the other facility does not have space available for the treatment of the patient and has not agreed to accept the patient.

shall be fined not more than $100,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both; except that, if, as a direct result of the violation of this paragraph, the patient dies, the physician shall be fined not more than $250,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(B) RESPONSIBLE PHYSICIAN DEFINED.—As used in subparagraph (A), the term "responsible physician" means, with respect to a patient, a physician who—

(i) is employed by, or under contract with, a hospital, and

(ii) acting as such an employee or under such a contract, has professional responsibilities for the provision of examinations or treatments for the patient or tranfers of the patient.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) The term "emergency medical condition" means a medical condition manifesting itself by acute symptoms of sufficient severity (including severe pain) such that the absence of immediate medical attention could reasonably be expected to result in—

(A) placing the patient's health in serious jeopardy,

(B) serious impairment to bodily functions, or

(C) serious dysfunction of any bodily organ or part.

(2) The term "active labor" means labor at a time at which—

(A) delivery is imminent,

(B) there is inadequate time to effect safe transfer to another hospital, or

(C) a transfer may pose a threat of the health and safety of the patient or the unborn child.

(3) The term "hospital" includes only a hospital that receives Federal financial assistance (including payments under title XVIII of the Social Security Act).

(4)(A) The term "to stabilize" means, with respect to a medical condition, to provide such medical treatment of the condition as may be necesary to assure that no material deterioration of the condition is likely to result from the transfer of the individual from a facility.

(B) The term "stabilized" means, with respect to a medical condition, that no material deterioration of the condition is likely to result from the transfer of the individual from a facility.

(5) The term "transfer" means the movement (including the discharge) of a patient outside a hospital's facilities at the direction of any person employed by (or affiliated or associated, directly or indirectly, with) the hospital, but does not include such a movement of a patient who (A) has been declared dead, or (B) leaves the facility without the permission of any such person.

(f) PREEMPTION.—The provisions of this section do not preempt any State or local law requirement respecting hospitals, except to the extent that the requirement directly conflicts with a requirement of this section.

(g) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This section shall apply to individuals who come to hospitals on or after October 1, 1985.

TITLE IV—DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS ON IMPROVING ACCESS TO HEALTH INSURANCE FOR SMALL EMPLOYERS AND SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS

SEC. 401. IMPROVING ACCESS TO HEALTH INSURANCE FOR SMALL EMPLOYERS AND SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS.

(a) STUDIES AND DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall provide for the conduct of studies and demonstration projects on ways to reduce the costs for small employers and self-employed individuals in obtaining health insurance. In particular the Secretary shall examine, demonstrate, and evaluate how savings in marketing and administrative costs can be achieved through the use of—

(1) standardized policy packages,
(2) State arrangements for the pooling of health insurance,
(3) State or Federal reinsurance of group health contracts,
(4) contracts with banks to offer such insurance to depositors or other groups,
(5) contracts with medicare carriers,
(6) contracts or grants to Chambers of Commerce or similar groups representing business, and
(7) other innovative means.

(b) REPORT.—The Secretary shall report to Congress on the results of the studies and demonstration projects not later than January 1, 1988.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year (beginning with fiscal year 1986) such sums as may be appropriate to carry out this section.

By Mr. McCLURE (by request):

S.J. Res. 192. Joint resolution to authorize financial assistance for the Northern Mariana Islands, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR THE NORTHERN MARIANA ISLANDS

● Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, at the request of the Department of the Interior, I send to the desk for appropriate reference a joint resolution to authorize financial assistance for the Northern Mariana Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. President, this draft legislation was submitted and recommended by the Department of the Interior, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill, and the executive communication which accompanied the proposal from the Assistant Secretary for Territorial and International Affairs be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 2 of Public Law 94-241 (97 Stat. 1461) is amended—

(1) in Section 703, subsection (a), after the words "Section 702" add the words "and Section 705";

(2) in Section 704, subsections (a), (b) and (d), after the words "Section 702" add the words "and Section 705";

(3) in Section 704, delete subsection (c), and redesignate subsection (d) as subsection (c);

(4) after Section 704 add a new Section 705, as follows:

"Section 705. Enactment of this section by the United States Congress and approval by the President shall constitute a commitment and pledge of the full faith and credit of the United States for the payment, as well as an authorization for the appropriation, of $228 million at guaranteed annual amounts of direct grant assistance for the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands for an additional period of seven fiscal years after the expiration of the initial seven-year period specified in Section 702, which assistance shall be provided according to the Agreement of the Special Representatives on Future United States Financial Assistance for the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands, executed July 19, 1985, between the special representative of the President of the United States and the special representatives of the Governor of the Northern Mariana Islands. The islands of Rota and Tinian shall each receive no less than a ⅛ share and the island of Saipan shall receive no less than a ⅜ share of annualized capital improvement project funds, which shall be no less than 80% of the capital development funds identified in the schedule of payments in paragraph 2 of part II of the Agreement of the special representatives."; and

(5) In Section 1003, subsection (b), delete "Article VII" and insert in lieu thereof "701-704"; redesignate subsection (c) as subsection (d); and add a new subsection (c) as follows:

"(c) Section 705 will become effective on October 1, 1985.".

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, DC, July 29, 1985.

Hon. GEORGE BUSH,
President of the Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Enclosed are the Agreement of the Special Representatives on Future United States Financial Assistance for the Northern Mariana Islands, and draft joint resolution "To authorize financial assistance for the Northern Mariana Islands."

We recommend that the joint resolution be referred to the appropriate committee for consideration, and that it be enacted.

Section 902 of the Covenant to Establish a Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands in Political Union with the United States of America, approved by the Congress in Public Law 94-241, provides that the President, and Governor of the Northern Mariana Islands shall appoint special representatives for the Northern Mariana Islands. President Ronald W. Reagan and Governor Pedro P. Tenorio, respectively, appointed the special representatives. On July 10, 1985, in Saipan, Northern Mariana Islands, the special representatives signed the Agreement of the Special Representatives on Future United States Financial Assistance for the Northern Mariana Islands (hereinafter referred to as "agreement").

At such time as the recommended legislation is enacted by the Congress, the agreement will provide the framework for United States financial assistance for the Northern Mariana Islands for a second seven-year period, fiscal years 1986 through 1992. The United States full faith and credit guarantee would continue to be applicable under the agreement to the negotiated $228 million in United States funding over the seven-year period. This funding includes $126 million for capital development, $100.5 million for government operations, and $1.5 million for hospital start-up costs and pension planning. The government operations portion of the funds is conditioned on the Northern Mariana Islands meeting a series of performance standards.

The agreement in other respects, is a departure from past practice. The first seven-year period saw funding, indexed to 1975 prices, with no strings attached for operations, the economic development loan fund, or construction.

The new agreement provides a schedule of annual financing based on the principles of:

Priority for capital and economic development (with augmenting private bonding) over government operations,

Reduction in government operations by at least $1 million a year,

Continuation of Northern Mariana Islands' independent and autonomous regulatory authorities governing utilities, borrowing and economic development, which will put utilities on a full user-fee/pay-as-you-go basis within three years,

Planning for full funding of the government's pension system by the end of the agreement's seven-year period, and Privatization.

The agreement includes standards to ensure performance under the above principles in addition to calling for Federal technical assistance, biennial meetings to assess progress under the agreement, and annual reports to the Congress. Should performance be found lacking the Secretary of the Interior would be authorized to propose deferral of the Northern Mariana Islands government operations funds.

Also understood by the special representatives are the facts that indexing would no longer be applicable to Northern Mariana Islands funds, and that legislature expenses would be reduced according to public law enacted by the Northern Mariana Islands legislature.

The agreement does not change the amount requested for fiscal year 1986 for the Northern Mariana Islands by the Department of the Interior—$27,726,000. Appropriations language in current appropriations bills, therefore, is not affected by the agreement. Enactment of the attached joint resolution, however, is vital for fulfillment of the agreement and its requirements. With agreement emphasis on capital development, and reduced and efficient government administration, we strongly urge early action by the Congress.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that enactment of this draft joint resolution would be in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely,

RICHARD MONTOYA,
Assistant Secretary.

AGREEMENT OF THE SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVES ON FUTURE UNITED STATES FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR THE NORTHERN MARIANA ISLANDS

Whereas, under the Covenant to Establish a Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands in Political Union with the United States of America (Covenant) the peoples of the Northern Mariana Islands and the United States of America desire to improve their mutually beneficial relationship, and to develop the economic resources referenced in Section 701 needed to meet the financial responsibilities of local self-government in the Northern Mariana Islands; and

Whereas, the guaranteed annual levels of direct grant assistance will expire at the end of fiscal year 1985; and

Whereas, Section 704(d) of the Covenant provides that the Congress may appropriate different amounts at the end of the seven-year period of guaranteed annual direct grant assistance provided by Section 702 of the Covenant; and

Whereas, the Covenant provides for the appointment of special representatives of the two governments to consider and make recommendations regarding future multi-year financial assistance to the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands; and

Whereas, President Ronald Reagan and Governor Pedro P. Tenorio appointed such special representatives who have considered such United States future financial assistance;

Now, therefore, we, Richard T. Montoya, special representative for the President of the United States, and Pedro A. Tenorio, Benjamin T. Manglona, Gregorio C. Sablan, and Ignacio K. Quichocho, special representatives of the Governor of the Northern Mariana Islands, agree as follows:

PART I. POLICY STATEMENT

The Government of the United States and the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands mutually agree that the people of the Northern Mariana Islands will be best served by promoting economic development, lessening dependence on Federal financial assistance for government operations, and reducing the size of government, including the executive and legislative branches. Priority shall be given to maximizing capital development through the use of public and private financing techniques. The Government of the United States recognizes recent significant efforts and the future commitment on the part of the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands to achieve these objectives.

This document affirms the mutual commitment of the Government of the United States and the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands to these goals.

PART II. FUNDING

1. Full Faith and Credit. After approval of this Agreement by the Congress and the President of the United States, payments under this second multi-year financial assistance agreement shall be accorded the full faith and credit of the United States, except that the full faith and credit for the payment of government operations funds shall be subject to the performance standards (paragraph 4 of this Part) and settlement of disputes provisions (paragraph 2 of Part III) contained in this agreement.

2. Schedule of Payments. The Government of the United States shall provide the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands $228 million over a seven-year period, beginning October 1, 1985, and ending September 30, 1992, to be appropriated according to the following schedule:

	Capital development	Government operations	Special programs	Total
Fiscal year:
1986	$8,466,000	$17,760,000	$1,500,000	$27,726,000
1987	18,294,000	17,050,000	.....	35,344,000
1988	18,000,000	16,360,000	.....	34,360,000
1989	25,150,000	15,000,000	.....	40,150,000
1990	20,850,000	13,000,000	.....	33,850,000
1991	17,850,000	11,000,000	.....	28,850,000
1992	17,390,000	10,330,000	.....	27,720,000
Totals	126,000,000	100,500,000	1,500,000	228,000,000

When appropriated, funds shall be granted annually by the Department of the Interior according to such regulations as are applicable to such grants. All previous funds granted under Section 702 of the Covenant remain subject to the provisions and restrictions under which they were granted.

3. Capital Development.

(a) The Government of the Northern Mariana Islands shall develop a seven-year strategic plan for capital improvement projects and economic development activities. At a minimum, eighty percent of the annual capital development funds identified in the schedule of payments (paragraph 2 of this Part) shall be obligated and expended in accordance with such plan that shall provide for essential infrastructure through capital improvement projects in the areas of power, water, sewers, roads, schools, ports and harbors, and public facilities. The balance, not to exceed a maximum of twenty percent of such annual capital development funds, shall be obligated and expended in accordance with the provisions of such plan that shall provide for economic development activities. Such plan and amendments thereto shall be submitted in accordance with Northern Mariana Islands law and mutually agreed upon by the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands and the Secretary of the Interior, or his designee. The plan shall be project specific with sufficient detail to perform cost/benefit analyses and develop financing strategies and alternatives. The Government of the Northern Mariana Islands shall establish a revolving fund, into which repayments of principal and interest from revenue-producing projects shall be deposited for financing of additional revenue-producing capital development projects. Interest earned on capital development funds before such funds are expended shall be treated as capital development funds; interest earned on moneys in the revolving fund shall become part of the revolving fund.

(b) The payment of federally appropriated funds, backed by the full faith and credit of the United States, may be applied or directed by the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands but such an application or direction by the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands shall not be a guarantee of payment by the United States, either directly or indirectly) for the repayment of debt instruments issued by the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands for capital development funds.

(c) The islands of Rota and Tinian shall each receive no less than a ⅛ share and the island of Saipan shall receive no less than a ⅝ share of annualized capital improvement project funds which shall be no less than 80% of the capital development funds identified in the Schedule of Payments in paragraph 2 of this Part.

4. Government Operations. The full faith and credit of the United States for the payment of government operations funds shall be subject to fulfillment of the following performance standards during the entire seven-year period:

(a) The Government of the United States shall provide $100.5 million in operations funds over the seven-year period in the annual amounts set forth in the schedule of payments. These annual funds shall be provided according to a separate payment schedule developed by the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands consistent with Federal regulations.

(b) The Government of the United States, through its designee, subject to the availability of funds, and at the request of and in cooperation with the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands, shall provide technical assistance, including but not limited to the following purposes: (i) the development and operation of a financial management system, (ii) the development of a plan for the transfer to the private sector by the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands of those functions that can be privately owned and operated, (iii) the promotion of government efficiency, (iv) the improvement of Northern Mariana Islands business development capability, (v) the promotion of business development and marketing by the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands, and (vi) assistance in bonding and financing techniques to be used in capital development.

(c) Representatives of both governments shall meet at least biennially to evaluate and discuss progress and achievements made under this agreement.

(d) The Government of the Northern Mariana Islands shall demonstrate a decreasing reliance on Federal Covenant financial assistance for government operations by reducing such assistance by an average of $1 million a year during the seven-year period of this agreement, and by reducing the overall size of government. Capital development funds shall not be spent for government operations purposes.

(e) The Government of the Northern Mariana Islands shall ensure continuation of an independent public agency that sets rates and fees for public utilities as described in Northern Mariana Islands Public Law 4-47. These services shall be fully funded, including both current expenses and long-term debt, without government subsidy through such user rates and fees by the end of the third year after this agreement is effective.

(f) The Government of the Northern Mariana Islands shall ensure the continued administration of capital development funds by an autonomous public agency of the Northern Mariana Islands, as described in Northern Mariana Islands Public Law 4-49. Such administration shall include the coordination and approval of all public financing of capital improvement projects and economic development activities.

(g) The Government of the Northern Mariana Islands shall obligate and expend those capital development funds to be devoted to capital improvement projects only according to definitions now contained in Northern Mariana Islands Public Law 4-46.

(h) The Government of the Northern Mariana Islands, within three months after this agreement becomes effective, shall initiate a study and an implementation plan that shall ensure an actuarially sound, locally funded pension system for the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands by the end of the seven years after this agreement becomes effective. Alternative strategies to bring the pension system into actuarial balance and alternative time periods necessary to accomplish this objective shall also be analyzed. The plan shall be fully implemented within the seven years referred to above unless otherwise mutually agreed by representatives of the Government of the United States and the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands based on long-term financial considerations and sound governmental management.

(i) The Government of the Northern Mariana Islands shall, within one year after this agreement becomes effective, develop a comprehensive plan for the transfer to the private sector of selected functions currently operated by the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands, and thereafter to the extent feasible, shall implement such transfers to the private sector.

5. Special Programs. The Government of the United States shall provide a one-time payment of $1 million for the Commonwealth Health Center operational start-up costs, and $500,000 for special technical assistance for developing a plan to fully fund the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands pension system. Should a portion of these pension study funds remain unexpended, the balance may be used for such technical assistance as the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands may determine.

PART III. CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT AND REPORTING

1. Reporting. In addition to other reports and audits required by the Government of the United States, the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands shall furnish to the Congress of the United States, as part of its annual budget justification, a report on the use of the funds made available under the schedule of payments contained in this agreement. Such annual reports shall outline the achievements to date under the categories of funding (including the status of efforts to provide for capital development through the use of revenue and general obligation bonds, like instruments of public debt, and other financing techniques) and the progress of efforts to transfer selected functions to the private sector.

2. Settlement of Disputes. Should the Government of the United States believe that understandings or the performance standards of this agreement are not being met, it shall notify the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands in writing, with the intent to resolve such issue in a mutually agreeable and expeditious manner. Should the issue not be resolved within thirty days after such notification is received, the Secretary of the Interior may propose deferral of Government of the Northern Mariana Islands operations funds pursuant to the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, (United States Public Law 93-344, 2 U.S.C. 681, et seq.).

PART IV. AMENDMENT OF THIS AGREEMENT

This agreement may be amended from time-to-time as mutually determined by the Secretary of the Interior, or his designee, and the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands, provided that the full faith and credit authorization and appropriation of the capital development funds, and the minimum shares guaranteed for Rota, Tinian and Saipan as provided in Part II, paragraph 3(c), shall not be subject to such amendment.

PART V. RECOMMENDED STATUTORY AMENDMENTS

In order to give effect to this agreement, the parties recommend that the Covenant (Public Law 94-241, 97 Stat. 1461) be amended as follows:

Be it Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Section 2 of Public Law 94-241 (97 Stat. 1461) is amended as follows—

In Section 703, Subsection (a), after the words "Section 702" add the words "and Section 705".

In Section 704, Subsection (a), (b) and (d), after the words "Section 702" add the words "and Section 705".

In Section 704, delete Subsection (c), and redesignate Subsection (d) as Subsection (c).

After Section 704 add a new Section 705, as follows:

"Section 705. Enactment of this section by the United States Congress and approval by the President shall constitute a commitment and pledge of the full faith and credit of the United States for the payment, as well as an authorization for the appropriation, of $228 million at guaranteed annual amounts of direct grant assistance to the Government of the Northern Mariana Islands for an additional period of seven fiscal years after the expiration of the initial seven-year period specified in Section 702, which assistance shall be provided according to the Agreement of the Special Representatives on Future United States Financial Assistance for the Northern Mariana Islands, executed July 10, 1985, between the special representative of the President of the United States and the special representatives of the Governor of the Northern Mariana Islands. The islands of Rota and Tinian shall each receive no less than a ⅛ share and the island of Saipan shall receive no less than a ⅜ share of annualized capital improvement project funds, which shall be no less than 80% of the capital development funds identified in the Schedule of Payments in paragraph 2 of Part II of the Agreement of the Special Representatives."

In Section 1003, Subsection (b), delete "Article VII" and insert in lieu thereof "Section 731-734"; redesignate Subsection (c) as Subsection (d); and add a new Subsection (c) as follows:

(c) Section 705 will become effective on October 1, 1985.

Signed at Saipan, Northern Marina Islands on the tenth day of July, 1985.

For the United States of America:

RICHARD T. MONTOYA,
Special Representative of the President of the United States.

For the Northern Mariana Islands:

PEDRO A. TENORIO,
Special Representative of the Governor of the Northern Mariana Islands.

GREGORIO C. SABLAN,
Special Representative of the Northern Mariana Islands.

BENJAMIN T. MANGLONA,
Special Representative of the Governor of the Northern Mariana Islands.

IGNACIO K. QUICHOCHO,
Special Representative of the Governor of the Northern Mariana Islands.●

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 44

At the request of Mr. THURMOND, the name of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 44, a bill to grant the consent of the Congress of the Southeast Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Management Compact.

S. 72

At the request of Mr. INOUYE, the name of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 72, a bill to amend titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act to provide that mental health counselor services shall be covered under part B of Medicare and shall be a required service under Medicaid.

S. 231

At the request of Mr. DOLE, the names of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] were added as cosponsors of S. 231, a bill to establish a National Commission on Neurofibromatosis.

S. 361

At the request of Mr. MOYNIHAN, the names of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MELCHER] were added as cosponsors of S. 361, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to make permanent the deduction for charitable contributions by nonitemizers.

S. 554

At the request of Mr. ROTH, the name of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES] was added as a cosponsor of S. 554, a bill to amend title 18, United States Code, to include the transportation of males under the Mann Act, to eliminate the lewd and commercial requirements in the prosecution of child pornography cases, and for other purposes.

S. 808

At the request of Mr. KENNEDY, the name of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] was added as a cosponsor of S. 808, a bill to provide grants for school-based child care and early childhood education demonstration projects.

S. 809

At the request of Mr. KENNEDY, the name of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] was added as a cosponsor of S. 809, a bill to provide financial assistance to expand the availability of child care services for college students, particularly low-income students, in order to increase the access of such students to institutions of higher education, and for other purposes.

S. 881

At the request of Mr. KENNEDY, the name of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 881, a bill to extend title X of the Public Health Service Act for 3 years.

S. 887

At the request of Mr. DOLE, the names of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WEICKER], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] were added as cosponsors of S. 887, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to extend the deduction for expenses incurred in connection with the elimination of architectural and transportation barriers for the handicapped and elderly.

S. 908

At the request of Mr. MCCONNELL, the names of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH] were added as cosponsors of S. 908, a bill to provide market expansion and income protection for farmers, assure consumers an abundance of food and fiber at reasonable prices, and for other purposes.

S. 980

At the request of Mr. TRIBLE, the name of the Senator from Texas [Mr.

BENTSEN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 980, a bill to amend title I of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974.

S. 1084

At the request of Mr. GOLDWATER, the names of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM], the Senator from New Hamphire [Mr. RUDMAN], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN] were added as cosponsors of S. 1084, a bill to authorize appropriations of funds for activities of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, and for other purposes.

S. 1181

At the request of Mr. HATCH, the names of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. PACKWOOD], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS] were added as cosponsors of S. 1181, a bill to establish a program for the provision of home and community based services to elderly individuals.

S. 1209

At the request of Mr. CHILES, the names of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] were added as cosponsors of S. 1209, a bill to establish the National Commission to Prevent Infant Mortality.

S. 1223

At the request of Mr. ARMSTRONG, the names of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] were added as cosponsors of S. 1223, a bill to authorize the erection of a memorial on Federal land in the District of Columbia or its environs to honor members of the Armed Forces of the United States who served in the Korean War.

S. 1233

At the request of Mr. DOLE, the names of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SIMON], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER], the Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL] were added as cosponsors of S. 1233, a bill to amend the Animal Welfare Act to ensure the proper treatment of laboratory animals.

S. 1259

At the request of Mr. THURMOND, the name of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1259, a bill to correct certain inequities by providing Federal civil service credit for retirement purposes and for the purpose of computing length of service to determine entitlement to leave, compensation, life insurance, health benefits, severance pay, tenure, and status in the case of certain individuals who performed service as National Guard technicians before January 1, 1969.

S. 1298

At the request of Mr. ANDREWS, the name of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1298, a bill to coordinate and expand services for the prevention, identification, and treatment of alcohol and drug abuse among Indian youth, and for other purposes.

S. 1305

At the request of Mr. TRIBLE, the names of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CHILES], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ] were added as cosponsors of S. 1305, a bill to amend title 18, United States Code, to establish criminal penalties for the transmission by computer of obscene matter, or by computer or other means, of matter pertaining to the sexual exploitation of children, and for other purposes.

S. 1328

At the request of Mr. SIMON, the names of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. COCHRAN]. the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. GLENN], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN] were added as cosponsors of S. 1328, a bill to strengthen programs under title III of the Higher Education Act of 1965, relating to institutional aid, and for other purposes.

S. 1362

At the request of Mr. EVANS, the names of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES], the Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL] were added as cosponsors of S. 1362, a bill to amend part A of title IV of the Social Security Act to provide for a study of quality control standards and procedures under the Aid to Families with Dependent Children Program, to provide for a moratorium on the imposition of penalties for erroneous payments, and for other purposes.

S. 1393

At the request of Mr. ABDNOR, the name of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1393, a bill to provide for a study of the use of unleaded fuel in agricultural machinery, and for other purposes.

At the request of Mr. D'AMATO, his name was added as a cosponsor of S. 1393, supra.

S. 1399

At the request of Mr. DOLE, the name of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1399, a bill to amend the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 to strengthen the Architectural and Transportation Barriers Compliance Board.

S. 1476

At the request of Mr. CHAFEE, the name of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1476, a bill to strengthen the Nation's competitive position in international trade and to improve its ability to respond to unfair and injurious foreign trade practices.

S. 1507

At the request of Mr. NICKLES, his name was added as a cosponsor of S. 1507, a bill to increase the tariff on petroleum used for motor fuel.

S. 1537

At the request of Mr. HELMS, the names of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS] were added as cosponsors of S. 1537, a bill to amend title IV of the Higher Education Act of 1965 to provide standards for students for maintaining satisfactory progress as a condition for assistance under that title.

S. 1570

At the request of Mr. NICKLES, the names of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HELMS], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. DENTON], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. TRIBLE], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. QUAYLE] were added as cosponsors of S. 1570, a bill to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to exclude the employees of States and political subdivisions of States from the provisions of that act relating to maximum hours, to clarify the application of that act to volunteers, and for other purposes.

S. 1578

At the request of Mr. THURMOND, the names of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SASSER], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] were added as cosponsors of S. 1578, a bill to amend the Low-Level Radioactive Waste Policy Act to improve procedures for the implementation of compacts providing for the establishment and operation of regional disposal facilities for low-level radioactive waste, and for other purposes.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 43

At the request of Mr. THURMOND, the name of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 43, a joint resolution to authorize the Armored Force Monument Committee, the United States Armor Association, the World Wars Tank Corps Association, the Veterans of the Battle of the Bulge, the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment Association, the Tank Destroyer Association, the 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, and 16th Armored Division Associations, and the Council of Armored Division Associations, jointly to erect a memorial to the "American Armored Force" on U.S. Government property in Arlington, VA, and for other purposes.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 165

At the request of Mr. SIMON, the names of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 165, a joint resolution designating the month of October 1985 as "National High-Tech Month."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 173

At the request of Mr. EAST, the name of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 173, a joint resolution to designate the month of September 1985 as "National Sewing Month."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 174

At the request of Mr. HEINZ, the names of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. LUGAR], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SARBANES], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. ROTH], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN], the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MCCLURE], the Senator from California [Mr. CRANSTON], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WEICKER], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 174, a joint resolution to designate November 18, 1985, as "Eugene Ormandy Appreciation Day."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 175

At the request of Mr. PROXMIRE, the name of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 175, a joint resolution to designate the week of August 25, 1985, through August 31, 1985, as "National CPR Awareness Week."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 185

At the request of Mr. MOYNIHAN, the names of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. JOHNSTON], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 185, a joint resolution to designate August 18, 1985, as "National Flowers-by-Wire Day."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 186

At the request of Mr. THURMOND, the names of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 186, a joint resolution to designate the week of September 23, 1985, through September 29, 1985, as "National Historically Black Colleges Week."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 189

At the request of Mr. HATCH, the names of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HUMPHREY], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES], the Senator from Florida [Mrs. HAWKINS], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DURENBERGER], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. MCCLURE], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. EAST], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. ABDNOR], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BOSCHWITZ], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG] were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 189, a joint resolution designating the week beginning January 12, 1986 as "National Fetal Alcohol Syndrome Awareness Week."

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 24

At the request of Mr. MATTINGLY, the name of the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. MATSUNAGA] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Concurrent Resolution 24, a concurrent resolution to direct the Commissioner of Social Security and the Secretary of Health and Human Services to develop a plan outlining the steps which might be taken to correct the Social Security benefit disparity known as the notch problem.

SENATE RESOLUTION 174

At the request of Mr. GORE, the names of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD] were added as cosponsors of Senate Resolution 174, a resolution expressing the sense of the Senate with respect to the proposed closing and downgrading of certain offices of the Social Security Administration.

SENATE RESOLUTION 186

At the request of Mr. D'AMATO, the name of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY] was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 186, a resolution expressing the sense of the Senate that the President should call for negotiations with those democratic nations plagued by terrorism for a treaty to prevent and respond to terrorist attacks.

SENATE RESOLUTION 213

At the request of Mr. METZENBAUM, his name was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 213, a resolution to express the sense of the Senate concerning recess appointments.

SENATE RESOLUTION 217—HONORING ALF LANDON

Mr. DOLE (for himself, Mr. BYRD, and Mr. THURMOND) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 217

Whereas Alfred Mossman Landon, former Governor of Kansas and 1936 Republican nominee for President, is celebrating his ninety-eighth birthday today, September 9, 1985;

Whereas Alf Landon has a firm foothold in American political history of another period, and is ever ready to comment on current affairs with an expertise and sensibility that reveals his unique position as a grand old man of the GOP;

Whereas his blend of morality, humanity and practical politics, has led politicians, labor leaders, reporters, and academicians to seek advice and counsel at his west Topeka home over the last forty-nine years;

Whereas as early as 1936, Alf Landon was a man ahead of his times, reminding Americans of the evils of inflation and pointing to the dangers of uncontrolled Government spending;

Whereas his record of fiscal integrity and balanced budgets during his tenure as Governor of Kansas would be the envy of any contemporary President;

Whereas Alf Landon has contributed much to the development and education of young people;

Whereas for over fifty years, Alf Landon has been one of our most respected and inspiring citizens, earning a permanent niche in American history; and

Whereas as a statesman, politician, businessman, counselor, sportsman, and friend, Alf Landon is a model for all who know him: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate hereby extends to the Honorable Alf Landon our affectionate greetings and best wishes on the occasion of his ninety-eighth birthday.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

JAPANESE TECHNICAL LITERATURE ACT OF 1985

BAUCUS (AND ROCKEFELLER) AMENDMENT NO. 590

(Order referred to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.)

Mr. BAUCUS (for himself and Mr. ROCKEFELLER) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill (S. 1073) to amend the Stevenson-Wydler Technology Innovation Act of 1980 for the purpose of improving the availability of Japanese science and engineering literature in the United States, and for other purposes; as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Japanese Technical Literature Act of 1985".

SEC. 2. Section 5 of the Stevenson-Wydler Technology Innovation Act of 1980 (15 U.S.C. 3704) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and

(2) by inserting immediately after subsection (c) the following new subsection:

"(d) JAPANESE TECHNICAL LITERATURE.—(1) In addition to the duties specified in subsection (c), the Secretary shall establish and, through the National Technical Information Service and such other offices within the Department of Commerce as the Secretary considers appropriate, maintain a program (including an office in Japan) which shall, on a continuing basis—

"(A) monitor Japanese technical activities and developments;

"(B) consult with businesses and professional societies in the United States regarding their needs for information on Japanese developments in technology and engineering;

"(C) acquire and translate selected Japanese technical reports and documents that may be of value to agencies and departments of the Federal Government, and to businesses and researchers in the United States; and

"(D) coordinate with other agencies and departments of the Federal Government to identify significant gaps and avoid duplication in efforts by the Federal Government to acquire, translate, and disseminate Japanese technical information.

Activities undertaken pursuant to subparagraph (C) of this paragraph shall only be performed on a cost-reimbursable basis. Translations referred to in such subparagraph shall be performed only to the extent that they are not available from sources within the private sector in the United States.

"(2) Beginning in 1986, the Secretary shall prepare annual reports regarding important Japanese scientific discoveries and technical innovations in such areas as computers, semiconductors, biotechnology, and robotics and manufacturing. In preparing such reports, the Secretary shall consult with professional societies and businesses in the United States. The Secretary may, to the extent provided in advance by appropriation Acts, contract with private organizations to acquire and translate Japanese scientific and technical information relevant to the preparation of such reports.

"(3) The Secretary also shall encourage professional societies and private businesses in the United States to increase their efforts to acquire, screen, translate, and disseminate Japanese technical literature.

"(4) In addition, the Secretary shall compile, publish, and disseminate an annual directory which lists—

"(A) all programs and services in the United States that collect, abstract, translate, and distribute Japanese scientific and technical information; and

"(B) all translations of Japanese technical documents performed by agencies and departments of the Federal Government, in the preceding twelve months that are available to the public.

"(5) The Secretary shall transmit to the Congress, within one year after the date of enactment of the Japanese Technical Literature Act of 1985, a report on the activities of the Federal Government to collect, abstract, translate, and distribute declassified Japanese scientific and technical information.".

"SEC 3. Section 9 of the National Bureau of Standards Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1986 (Public Law 99-73; 99 Stat. 173) is amended by striking "$2,715,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$3,715,000".

● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, some months ago I and my colleague Mr. ROCKEFELLER introduced the Japanese Technical Literature Act of 1985. This bill was designed to be one small block in the rebuilding of U.S. competitiveness. It was aimed at increasing our attention and access to technological developments in Japan.

BACKGROUND

All of us are keenly aware of the large and growing U.S. trade deficit. That trade deficit is not the illness—it is the symptom of a number of illnesses. One of them is our declining productivity growth.

One commonly accepted explanation for Japan's postwar miracle is that country's ability to acquire and incorporate American technological developments. This has not happened accidentally. Japanese students learn English, and so they can read American journals. In addition, the Japanese Government and Japanese companies have worked hard at learning from American technology. The Japanese Information Center of Science and Technology and many individual Japanese businesses gather, abstract, and translate information and articles from around the world.

In contrast, we have paid little attention to Japanese technical literature. Whether or not this was ever the right attitude, it certainly is not today. Today Japan ranks third in scientific research.

There is plenty of published material describing Japanese technical developments. About 10,000 technical journals are published in Japan.

Some American companies and trade associations monitor this material. Some Federal agencies do the same in specialized areas. But the efforts are uncoordinated and inadequate—they cover barely 20 percent of the available material.

THE JAPANESE TECHNICAL LITERATURE ACT

The Japanese Technical Literature Act director the Directed of Industrial Technology in the Commerce Department to increase the availability of Japanese science and engineering literature to U.S. businesses, scientists, and engineers through a number of activities. The Director was given substantial flexibility.

Senator ROCKEFELLER and I are pleased to be able to say that reaction to this proposal has been favorable. The National Association of Manufacturers has endorsed the bill. We have received favorable comments from representatives of the American Electronics Association, the American Chemical Society and the Global Competitiveness Council.

IMPROVEMENTS IN THE BILL

Why then would we propose an amendment to the Japanese Technical Literature Act? Because we have learned things that make us think the bill can be made even better.

In the revised bill, we propose a much more specific program in the Commerce Department—building on existing programs and adding new elements.

We have also made some changes to make absolutely clear that the intent of the bill is to complement ongoing or future private sector efforts—not to supplant them or compete with them.

Specifically, the revised legislation would authorize a $1 million Commerce Department program with four tasks:

Issuing an annual report on Japanese technological trends, especially trends in computers, semiconductors, biotechnology, and robotics;

Operating an office in Japan to monitor Japanese scientific and technical developments and translate selected Japanese scientific and technical documents for government, businesses, and academia, on a cost-reimbursable basis, and only to the extent that those documents are not readily available from private-sector sources;

Coordinating existing Federal Government translation programs, including publishing an annual index of existing Federal translations;

Reporting on overall Federal efforts to translate and disseminate Japanese scientific and technical information.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, this bill is not the single, total answer to all our productivity and competitiveness problems. But we believe this bill represents a significant step.●

● Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, on May 6, Senator BAUCUS and I introduced legislation to encourage the translation of Japanese scientific and technical information and to help American companies and researchers obtain access to this material. In the months since then, we have explored these issues through congressional hearings and other consultations, and have clarified our views about how modest Government resources might be directed to meeting such needs.

From these examinations, we're convinced that this country could benefit considerably from greater availability of Japanese R&D—in much the same way Japan has benefited from the work of others. For years, the Japanese have made strenuous efforts to learn from us: They read our professional journals, send students to study in our universities, attend international meetings and consult with U.S. companies and researchers about discoveries and new technology.

Fluency in English has obviously facilitated such efforts on the part of the Japanese, and many of their brightest scientists and engineers know the language well. But the Japanese Government also makes a systematic effort to collect and translate technical information from all over the world—and encourages companies to use it. Partly because of this, the Japanese have excelled in applying the research findings of others to the development of new products and processes.

But there's no good reason—apart from the language barrier—why this flow of information should go only one-way. Japan devotes over 2 percent of its GNP to R&D and ranks third—after the United States and the Soviet Union—in spending on scientific research. The Japanese have become first-rate innovators and, like us, are engaged in pioneering research in fields like telecommunications equipment, biotechnology, robotics, and computers. At the very least, greater access to Japanese technical literature would alert our industries to the kind of competition they'll be facing. But it could also help us develop and perfect new technologies and products that will keep our industries in the lead.

At present, American researchers and businesses have relatively few opportunities to learn from the Japanese. The language is terribly difficult, and only a few of our largest companies can afford the expense of gathering and translating technical material from Japanese into English. Private services and trade associations are involved in abstracting, indexing, and identifying material which could be useful to read. But translation and dissemination of full texts of articles and reports by either private or government organizations in this country remains very limited—and barely scratches the surface of the Japanese professional literature in most scientific fields.

Our revised bill aims to build on these activities by earmarking $1 million within the Department of Commerce for the following purposes:

To monitor Japanese technical development, collect and translate selected documents, and coordinate the efforts of Federal agencies involved in such information-gathering to make the material available to businesses and researchers.

To prepare annual reports on important Japanese technological developments, in fields like computers, semiconductors, biotechnology, robotics, and manufacturing.

To assist the efforts of professional societies and other private organizations to acquire, screen, translate, and distribute Japanese technical literature.

To publish an annual directory of private and government services to collect and translate Japanese technical information.

To report to the Congress within 1 year on the translation activities of Federal agencies, with recommendations on how they might be improved upon.

We envision a core staff at Commerce to carry out these responsibilities, assisted by an office in Japan to facilitate the identification and acquisition of pertinent documents. With limited resources, the department will need to work closely with professional societies and other potential users to select material to be translated. The legislation further states that government translations be done on a cost-reimbursable basis, and only when the translated document is not available from private sources.

Recent events have proved—in sector after sector—that we can't blithely count on staying in the lead. There are multiple reasons for concern about the competitive position of a wide range of American industries—and the staggering trade imbalances that are sapping our economy's vitality.

We offer this legislation as one important facet of a response to these problems. More effective competition depends on a number of initiatives on our part: We cannot continue to handicap ourselves with an overvalued dollar or to refuse to move against unfair trading practices by some of our competitors. But there are also steps we can and must take to improve our industrial performance—to remain at the forefront of science and technology, to produce high quality products and services.

If Japanese businesses and scientists have access to our best scientific and technical information, it's only right that we should have the same kinds of opportunities to learn from them. The program we've outlined would help bring vital information about Japanese research and technology to the attention of American industry. That's the kind of business help our Government should be providing. And that's why we think the effort is one of the best investments our Government can make.

Mr. President, an article from the New York Times corroborates this view, and I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD. Private sector interest in the material is increasing, making supportive activities by the Government all the more important.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From The New York Times, Sept. 8, 1985]

AMERICANS PICKING JAPANESE BRAINS

(By Nicholas D. Kristof)

After decades of pooh-poohing Japanese scientific research, American business executives no longer patronize the Japanese as "imitators." End "copiers" of American technology. Quite the contrary. In the wake of Japan's drive for technological supremacy, they are scrambling to keep up with the new scientific research in Japan.

It is not an easy task. As Japan finally moves from imitation to innovation—and becomes a formidable competitor in crucial areas such as supercomputers; biotechnology and robotics—American scientists find themselves hard-pressed to learn of Japanese breakthroughs. So in the past year or so, a small industry has been, emerging, consisting of companies that help monitor Japanese technology and, in effect, broker developments to American corporations.

"What's at stake may well be the competitiveness of American-industry," said Richard J. Samuels, who directs a program on Japanese science at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "If you can't pay attention to and assimilate technological information beyond your borders, you're playing the game with one arm tied behind your back."

The new technology brokers are trying to address the problem by translating and indexing Japanese scientific articles. For example, the Japanese Technical Information Service, a Xerox subsidiary, is starting up operations near Philadelphia this fall. (See box inside.) Nissho Iwai, the Japanese trading company, already has done something similar. A year ago, it began publishing Techgram Japan, a magazine full of brief summaries of Japanese technological developments. Here are some recent examples:

A new "killer yeast" that destroys harmful bacteria while fermenting beer.

A machine, run by a microcomputer, that manufactures "riceburgers," a Japanese food consisting of ground meat inside a ball of rice.

A machine that reads aloud from Japanese paperbacks (but takes 25 minutes a page).

So far there are few success stories of American companies successfully adopting Japanese technologies, partly because by the time an invention is practical it is often cheaper to manufacture it in Japan than in the United States. One exception, however, is a missile tracking guidance system developed in part by Toshiba. In June it became the first Japanese military technology officially requested by the United States, which over the years has passed on a great deal of military technology to Japan.

Many scientists say that the new American effort to get at the stream of Japanese research information is too little and too late. Even with the latest undertakings, the vast majority of the 10,000 technical journals published in Japan will be neither indexed nor abstracted in the West. And while the number is rising, only about 400 science students at universities around the country are studying the Japanese language.

"There's a certain hard-to-define intellectual arrogance that everthing on the cutting edge is done here," said Adm. Bobby R. Inman, the former deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency who now heads the Microelectronics and Computer Technology Corporation, a research consortium. "That's been true in the past, but I detect a smugness setting in."

That smugness certainly is not justified. In robotics, an expanding area of high technology, Japan deploys more than twice as many robots as the United States. Fifty-four percent of new chemical patents worldwide now belong to the Japanese. Biotechnology was pioneered by the United States, but Japan is already the dominant producer of amino acids, an important field in biotech, and is generally believed to be improving its work extremely quickly. Likewise, the United States still has the lead in supercomputers, but Fujitsu and Hitachi are frantically designing plans for computers far more powerful than anything that now exists.

These are all emerging scientific areas that the United States cares about immensely and in the last year or so, there has been a surge of American interest in Japanese technology. A Congressional subcommittee published a report emphasizing business concerns about being able to keep up with Japanese technology. Two conferences have addressed the issue. American companies have sent more scientists to Japan to learn about that country's lastest scholarship. For the first time, M.I.T. is offering Japanese classes, beginning this fall. The Commerce Department is proposing a joint venture with industry to program computers to translate Japanese into English.

Some experts in industry even draw an analogy between today's heightened concern about Japanese technology and the national alarm that followed the Soviet Union's launching of the Sputnik satellite in October 1957. Clearly the concern is on a far smaller scale today, but the purpose of the comparison is to urge the same kind of national commitment to science today as was born after Sputnik's launching.

"We need more effort—there's no question," said Robert W. Gibson Jr., head of the library department at the General Motors Research Laboratories.

The technological issues are complicated by the tensions between the United States and Japan over trade relations. Some Americans, such as Representative Doug Walgren, a Pennsylvania Democrat, contend that Japan is taking advantage of the language barrier to limit access to its research. Others say that the onus lies on the Americans to learn Japanese, or at least to translate Japanese periodicals—just as the Japanese have learned English and translated American journals.

Some companies, sensing profits, are happy to bear that burden. One result of the growing concerns in the United States about Japanese scientific progress has been a modest boom in the publication of indexes and abstracts of Japanese scientific articles. For some companies that already do this for other foreign journals, this just means expanding the Japanese section. Chemical Abstracts, for example, already publishes 140-word summaries of articles in 1,500 Japanese chemical magazines, plus innumerable periodicals from other countries. And Engineering Information, a New York company, publishes abstracts from 5,000 journals from around the world, including 150 from Japan.

Last year, sensing a quickening interest, Engineering Information tried to initiate a new service that would publish abstracts from 1,000 Japanese-language journals. The fee was $45,000 a year for full coverage, or $24,000 annually for just the electronic engineering publications. Five companies signed up for each service, but it was not enough to make it worthwhile, so the project was abandoned. Herbert B. Landau, Engineering Information's president, said.

It is Japan's basic research that experts say the United States needs most to monitor, not inventions that already are practical. And to this end, several American companies—including the International Business Machines Corporation, Motorola, Burroughs, TRW, General Motors and Hughes—are said to be improving their surveillance of Japanese technology, normally from offices in Tokyo.

In late July, I.B.M.—whose trade secrets Hitachi and Mitsubishi Electric tried to steal in 1982, resulting in a much publicized court case—reached an unusual deal with the Japanese Government permitting the company to license technology developed by the joint efforts of Japanese, industry and Government. I.B.M. is considered the dean of Japan-watchers, in large part because of its big Japanese subsidiary.

And although Robert C. Kirkwood, director of government affairs at the Hewiett-Packard Company, describes his company's Japanese surveillance as "spotty at best," it does have about 50 Japanese employees in Tokyo who do research in addition to other work.

With the backing of several American companies, and a two-year, $500,000 grant from the Commerce Department, the American Electronics Association opened an office last year in Tokyo, in part to monitor Japanese technology. Several months ago, the office issued a 72-page source list on Japanese technology, and this fall it will begin publishing a newsletter on technological developments.

"With our small staff we can't look at all technology, but we'll try to pick the raisins out of the cake," said Ralph J. Thomson, a senior vice president of the association.

The Government is also limbering up. A bill before the Senate would authorize $1 million for the Commerce Department to monitor Japanese technology more carefully. Translation costs now prevent the Government from tracking Japanese research more comprehensively.

"The key is machine translation," said Bruce Merrifield, an Assistant Secretary of Commerce. "That's where the major breakthrough would come." He has been meeting with business executives and officials from the Patent Office and intelligence agencies, trying to promote a joint effort to develop a computer program that could efficiently translate Japanese journal articles into English. So far, machine translators are clumsy, stumbling over idioms and metaphors.

In the absence of better computer translations, some researchers are encouraging scientists to study Japanese and work in Japanese research labs. M.I.T., for example, has a program to train scientists to speak Japanese and then put them temporarily in Japanese research facilities.

Behind America's scramble to monitor Japanese technology is a fundamental shift in Japanese scientific research. For most of the period since World War II, Japan devoted itself to importing technologies from the United States and other countries and applying them. Du Pont's nylon patent led to Japan's boom in synthetic textiles; Bell Laboratories' break-throughs in making transistors produced Japan's semiconductor industry; RCA's licenses provided the foundation for Japan's color televisions, and so on.

From 1951 through 1984, more than 42,000 contracts were signed to transfer technology to Japan from abroad. Very little technology crossed the ocean going the other way, and indeed very little exciting, basic research was under way in Japan. The Japanese borrowed ideas from abroad, learning English to do so, and often studying at foreign universities, which were viewed on both sides of the Pacific as better than Japanese institutions, at least in the sciences.

Many Japanese scientists still study in the United States, and read English well enough to absorb a journal article, but in the meantime they have constructed their own research industry. A rigorous education system—longer hours and a longer academic year mean that by the time they graduate from high school, Japanese students have had four more years of school than American students—prepared a foundation. Then, goaded by foreigners who called them mere imitators, Japanese industry and business began a major campaign, a bit more than five years ago, to develop a basic research capability second to none.

"It has been said for a long time that the Japanese are good only at applying technology, that they are not skilled enough or talented enough to develop technology on their own," said Yasuo Wataru, general manager of the Washington office of the Nissho Iwsl American Corporation, a Japanese trading company. "I don't think that is true. Certainly we are spending a great deal of money on basis research."

Since 1965, for example, Japan has roughly quadrupled its research expenditures, after adjusting for inflation. In the United States, spending on research has grown by less than 50 percent in the same period.

Moreover, in Japan it is the big companies, the kaisha, that have dominated research and development, which could mean that scholarship is more likely to lead to commercial gains than work financed by, say, America's Pentagon. Half of research in the United States is paid for by the Government—much of it military research—while the Government share of Japanese research is about a quarter.

A study of research spending in the two countries, in a forthcoming book by James C. Abegglen and George Stalk, Jr., two consultants in the Tokyo office of the Boston Consulting Group, found that in 1978 major American and Japanese companies both spent about 3 percent of total revenues on research. But by 1983, the fraction had risen to 5.1 percent in Japan, compared to 3.7 percent here.

Canon was spending 14.6 percent of its income on research, NEC was spending 13 percent, Shionogi stood at 9.6 percent. But with the exception of Eli Lilly, at 9.7 percent, American companies spent substantially smaller fractions. General Electric, for example, spent 3.4 percent on research and development, Xerox spent 6.8 percent and RCA 2.4 percent. In many cases, of course, the American companies are larger and to spend a larger total, even though the percentage is smaller.

In scientific fields, software and aerospace are the only two areas where Japan is indisputably well behind the United States—in part because of past American strengths and heavy military spending on aerospace.

"The competitive strength of Japanese companies has been based on price and on quality of product," Mr. Abegglan and Mr. Stalk of the Boston Consulting Group say in "Kaisha, the Japanese Corporation," their book. "Added now, very rapidly, is a highly competitive level of research and development expenditure, with technological innovation becoming the center of competitive capability."●

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

SUBCOMMITTEE ON ENERGY RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the Senate and the public that the Subcommittee on Energy Research and Development of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources will conduct a hearing on Wednesday, September 18, 1985, beginning at 9:30 a.m. in room SD-366 of the Senate Dirksen Office Building in Washington, DC.

Testimony will be received on S. 1517, a bill to amend the Low-Level Radioactive Waste Policy Act of 1980 to authorize continued financial and technical assistance of the Department of Energy to the regional low-level waste compact regions, and to revise the guidelines and procedures for the establishment and use of regional disposal facilities for low-level radioactive waste, and for other purposes.

Those wishing to testify or who wish to submit written statements for the hearing record should write to the Subcommittee on Energy Research and Development, Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC 20510.

For further information regarding this hearing, please contact Ms. Marilyn Meigs on the subcommittee staff at 202-224-4431.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the public that the Select Committee on Indian Affairs will be holding hearings on September 11, 1985, in Senate Dirksen 628, beginning at 10 a.m., on S. 1396, to settle unresolved claims relating to certain allotted Indian lands on the White Earth Indian Reservation, to remove clouds from the titles to certain lands, and for other purposes. Those wishing additional information on S. 1396, should contract Mike Mahsetky or Peter Taylor of the committee at 224-2251.

On September 18, 1985, in Senate Russell 485, beginning at 10 a.m., on S. 1298, to coordinate and expand services for the prevention, identification, and treatment of alcohol and drug abuse among Indian youth, and for other purposes. Those wishing additional information on this bill should contact Mary Jane Wrenn or Peter Taylor of the committee at 224-2251.

COMMITTEE ON RULES AND ADMINISTRATION

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Committee on Rules and Administration will hold 2 days of hearings on the subject of television and radio coverage of Senate proceedings next week. The committee will meet to receive testimony from Senators on Tuesday, September 17, 1985, at 9:30 a.m., in SR-301, Russell Senate Office Building. On the following day, Wednesday, September 18, at 9:30 a.m., in SR-301, representatives of the media and other interested individuals and organizations will present their views on broadcast coverage of the Senate.

Senators, individuals, and organizations who wish to participate in these hearings or to submit a statement for the hearings record are requested to contact John Swearingen of the Rules Committee staff at 224-9078.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON LABOR

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, the Subcommittee on Labor will hold an oversight hearing on pension policy implications of the President's tax proposals on fringe benefits and retirement savings on October 1, 1985. The hearing is scheduled for 9:30 a.m. in room 430 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building. Persons wishing to testify should submit a written request to Chairman DON NICKLES, Subcommittee on Labor, 428 Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC 20510 by September 16, 1985. If you have any questions concerning the hearing, please contact Rick Lawson, on the subcommittee staff, at 202-224-5546.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

CONGRESSIONAL CALL TO CONSCIENCE FOR SOVIET JEWS

● Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I rise today as a participant in the Congressional Call to Conscience Vigil for Soviet Jews, organized by our distinguished colleague Senator BOSCHWITZ. Embedded in the tradition and the national conscience of the United States is a deep concern for oppressed people, whether they reside within our borders or halfway around the world. It is thus our duty and privilege to speak out in defense of those whose basic rights are denied by governments that do not share our regard for the dignity of all human beings. Foremost in these efforts should be our advocacy for Soviet Jewry, for whom conditions have progressively worsened in recent years.

One such example is that of Igor Gregorovich Malishev. He and his wife, Anna, and their son, Stanislav, first applied for visas in January of 1980 in order to join Igor's sister in Israel. They were denied. Subsequent applications were submitted every 6 months. These visa applications were also denied. Although Anna's mother gave her written permission for them to go to Israel, they were refused on the pretext that they should not split the family by leaving a parent behind.

Until 1979 the Malishevs lived in Kiev where Igor worked as a math lecturer at the university for 11 years. After Igor's dismissal from the university, Malishevs moved to Riga where Igor worked as a relief teacher until 1982 when he was forced to resign in order to submit his sixth application for an exit visa. Since then he has given private tutoring in mathematics.

The continued repression of the Jews in the Soviet Union must be stopped. The Malishevs are only one of the thousands of the Soviet Jewish families wishing to flee the Soviet Union, but who are not permitted. It is our duty to call for the discontinuation of this tyranny of Soviet authorities and to put the full strength of our diplomatic and economic resources behind our words.●

AMENDING THE FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT

● Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I strongly support Senator NICKLES' bill, S. 1570, a bill to exempt States and their political subdivisions from the maximum hour provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act. I am happy to cosponsor this measure.

Mr. President, in a 1976 decision, National League of Cities against Usery, the Supreme Court struck down the 1974 legislation which used the commerce clause to mandate that States and their political subdivisions comply with the maximum hour and minimum wage provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act. Knowing the vital role State autonomy plays in our federalist system, the Court stated that the 10th amendment limits the commerce clause's applicability to the States and their political subdivisions when the State is involved in a "traditional governmental function" such as fire prevention, police protection, sanitation, and public health. Setting wage and hour laws for State and local government employees likewise falls within this perimeter, according to the Court, and therefore, should be exempt from wage and hour provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Mr. President, on February 19, 1985, in Garcia against San Antonio Metropolitan Transit, the Court overturned the 1976 decision and mandated that State and local governments comply with all the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Mr. President, I am gravely concerned about this decision for two reasons. First, Mr. President, Garcia has dealt a serious if not fatal blow to State sovereignty and the power of the 10th amendment to shield the States from Federal intrusion. As Justice Powell stated in his dissenting opinion in Garcia, "the Court today propounds a view of federalism that pays only lip service to the roles of the States."

Mr. President, contrary to what the majority in Garcia would have you believe, the framers of our Constitution were strong proponents of States' rights and the necessary division of authority between the Federal and State Governments. In Federalist Paper No. 45 Madison stated:

The powers delegated by the proposed Constitution to the Federal Government, are few and defined. Those which are to remain in the State Governments are numerous and indefinite. The former will be exercised principally on external objects, as war, peace, negotiation, and foreign commerce; with which last the power of taxation will for the most part be connected. The powers reserved to the several States will extend to all the objects, which in the ordinary course of affairs, concern the lives, liberties and properties of the people; and the internal order, improvement, and prosperity of the State.

Mr. President, the 10th amendment embodies this fundamental belief:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the State, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

Mr. President, this Congress should act without delay to restore the constitutionally mandated balance of power between the States and the Federal Government.

Second, Mr. President, compliance with the maximum hour provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act as mandated by Garcia will fiscally cripple State and local governments in their ability to provide crucial services to their citizenry. The North Carolina Attorney General's office compiled some statistics that past spring on the effect of Garcia on the State government budget. These statistics are based on fiscal year 1983-84 wages. Estimated overtime costs for the State highway patrol will cost an estimated $4,743,277; for the alcohol and law enforcement—$241,731; for State bureau of investigation $1,270,000. In addition, estimates ranging from $7 million to $15 million have been quoted from various State budget sources as the cost to the State of North Carolina to pay overtime and compensatory time to State employees, based on figures from the last fiscal year.

The North Carolina League of Municipalities have compiled statistics on the effect compliance with the Federal maximum hour laws will have on 10 local governments for fiscal year 1985-86. Their estimates predict that compliance will cost these cities a total of $1.75 million for fiscal year 1985-86 alone. Mr. President, in light of this financial burden, the State and local governments have been left with no alternative but to increase taxes and reduce or eliminate crucially needed services to their citizens .

Mr. President, I applaud Senator NICKLES in his efforts to weaken Garcia's blatant assault on our States' fiscal stability and autonomy and I am proud to join him in cosponsoring S. 1570. I urge my other colleagues to support the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma in this endeavor.●

THE BUDGET IRRESOLUTION

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the New York Times had an excellent editorial titled "The Budget Irresolution." It suggests that we are not paying nearly enough attention to the deficit.

I heartily concur in that assumption.

I urge my colleagues to read the editorial if they have not already, and I ask that it be inserted at this point.

The editorial follows:

THE BUDGET IRRESOLUTION

Why all the moaning and groaning that Congress didn't cut the deficit enough? If I remember correctly, it set out to cut $50 billion and the new budget resolution ends up cutting $55 billion. What's so bad about that?

What's bad is that those numbers don't tell the whole story. The Congressional Budget Office says the $55 billion will actually work out to only $39 billion. So we'll still be looking at a deficit next year that's more than $180 billion. Some cut.

And remember, we're still talking about estimates. Budget projections are notoriously unreliable. Tax collections fall short. Spending runs over. In any case, the deficit in the final year year of the Reagan Administration would still be way over $100 billion—and that was the original target of this exercise.

All right, but I'm still impressed. The President pushed Congress and it worked. You just wish it had worked your way.

Worked? The President wanted to eliminate a whole bundle of programs. How many did Congress kill? One—revenue sharing—and it was due to expire in a couple of years anyway. People can disagree on which programs are good or bad. But when Congress can't bring itself to kill any at all, that says something important about the functioning of government. Paralysis.

And so far, we've only been talking about spending cuts. We haven't said a word about holding down Social Security increases, or about new taxes.

Why are you so determined to be gloomy? They cut $55 billion this year. They can cut some more next year.

You've got it backward. If they can't make the tough choices this year, when there's no election, do you really think they'll do it next year, when there is one? This was the critical moment. Congress and the Administration finally acknowledged that deficits had gotten out of hand. They sounded serious.

Then look at what happened. Congress started making real cuts in defense and nondefense programs. There was a moment when it looked as if the President might bend on taxes and Social Security. He actually agreed to a temporary freeze in Social Security, but backed off in a hurry. And for a while, he said he'd consider tax increases as a "last resort." But at last resort, he said no. You may say he has the courage of his convictions. I say his convictions guarantee a deficit crisis long after he's gone.

What crisis? Things are pretty good. Inflation and interest rates are down. Jobs are up. The stock market has never been higher.

All true, but that's just the point. If you can't save during good times, how on earth can you expect to do so when the economy turns down again? Besides, big deficits carry with them the expectation of more inflation, sooner or later, and that's why interest rates are still quite high. The Government's enormous borrowing to cover the deficit just adds to that pressure. And jobs may be up but unemployment is stuck at more than 7 percent.

I'm not gloomy. I'm worried about our leaders' failure to cope with our problems when the time is ripe. Deficits are all right, even desirable, in recessions. But when the next recession comes, the deficit will already be excessive. Why? Because it was reduced so little on Aug. 1, 1985.●

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR REPORT ON SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 43

● Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, on August 1, 1985, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources filed a report on Senate Joint Resolution 43, to authorize the erection of a memorial to the "American Armored Force" on Federal property in Arlington, VA, and for other purposes. At the time that this report was filed no executive communications on the resolution had been received by the committee from the Department of the Interior or the Office of Management and Budget. Those views have now been transmitted to the committee, and I ask unanimous consent that the administration's report be printed in the RECORD.

The report follows:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, DC, July 31, 1985.

Hon. JAMES A. McCLURE,
Chairman, Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This responds to your request for our views on S.J. Res. 43, a bill "To authorize the Armored Force Monument Committee, the United States Armor Association, the World Wars Tank Corps Association, the Veterans of the Battle of the Bulge, the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment Association, the Tank Destroyer Association, and the 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, and 16th Armored Division Associations, and the Council of Armored Division Associations jointly to erect a memorial to the 'American Armored Force' on United States Government property in Arlington, Virginia, and for other purposes."

We recommend against enactment of this joint resolution.

This measure would authorize several military and veterans associations jointly to erect a memorial to honor those who have served in armored units of the United States armed forces, and those who continue to serve to maintain world peace. It would direct the Secretary of the Interior to select, with the approval of the Commission of Fine Arts and the National Capital Planning Commission, a site on government property in Arlington for the memorial. The measure contains the usual provisions requiring approval of the design, providing for private funding except for maintenance, and requiring assurances that funds will be available to insure completion of the memorial. Normally, memorial legislation is not site specific, as it is in this resolution.

Numerous memorial proposals place a constant demand on the parklands of the Nation's Capital and its environs. In order to protect the concept of open space and dignity which contributes so much to the beauty of the capital, the Secretary of the Interior's National Capital Memorial Advisory Committee was established administratively under the Federal Advisory Committee Act. Among the purposes of the Committee was that of recommending broad criteria, guidelines, and policies for memorializing persons and events on Federal lands in the National Capital Region. The Committee's criteria and guidelines recommended limiting the use of the remaining sites to memorialization of exceptional significance, quality and value; and, as to persons, their degrees of achievement. The Committee's policy is that only military memorials commemorating all members of the armed forces identified with a single event should be placed on parklands in the Nation's Capital. The recently completed Vietnam Veterans Memorial, for example, commemorates all members of the armed forces who served in that conflict, and the Navy Memorial which will be constructed soon on Pennsylvania Avenue at 8th Street, will commemorate all U.S. naval personnel.

There are existing 80 memorials which are located on parklands in Washington, DC., and its environs. Many of these commemorate military heroes dating back to the revolutionary war, and various military units. As a result, most of the desirable memorial spaces have been taken. It is our understanding from discussions with the American Battle Monuments Commission (a member of the Memorial Advisory Committee), that there are over 150 division size units of all the armed forces which have participated in combat. If each of these units or groups of units were to ask the Congress for the use of Federal parklands, there would not be enough open space available to accommodate the memorializations.

S.J. Res. 43 would commemorate only those members of the armed forces who served in armored units. In a June 29, 1984, report to the Committee, the Department recommended against the enactment of a similar measure, S.J. Res. 277 in the 98th Congress, because commemorating only certain units of the armed forces would not be consistent with the policy recommended by the Advisory Committee. On July 31, 1984, the Advisory Committee recommended against enactment of S.J. Res. 277 and supported the Department's report. The Department continues to recommend against enactment of this legislation.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that there is no objection to the presentation of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM P. HORN,
Assistant Secretary.●

TAXES MUST RISE

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, one of the more thoughtful observers of the American political scene is Kevin Phillips.

In the Los Angeles Times, of August 4, he published an article that basically says we had better face up to this deficit and, among other things, we are going to have to increase revenue.

He is, of course, absolutely right, as almost all of us admit privately and an increasing number are admitting publicly.

I urge my colleagues to read the Kevin Phillips piece, and I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The article follows:

TIME FOR TRUTH: TAXES MUST RISE
(By Kevin Phillips)

WASHINGTON—Let the truth be told: New or increased taxes are coming in the name of deficit reduction, and the only question is when—and how long it will take President Reagan to come around.

The President feels strongly about the no-tax-increase pledges he made last year. Such is the unhappy legacy of Ronald Reagan's unfolding 12-month response to Democratic presidential nominee Walter F. Mondale's July, 1984, speech urging a tax increase to reduce the federal deficit. That, in retrospect, was a fateful moment in U.S. fiscal history. Not because the subsequent tax debate defeated Mondale and reelected Reagan—its actual impact on November voting was no more than a point or two—but because it created a major misperception about the "mandate" of the 1984 election.

The most recent manifestation, of course, is Reagan's late-July rejection of the Senate GOP's deficit-reduction proposal, involving a $5-a-barrel oil import fee and a biennial instead of annual computation of Social Security cost-of-living increases. These two ideas themselves are debatable. Rejection may be justified. But it is the larger symbolism that disappoints.

What must change is the President's refusal to accept any tax increase—a mistake on three dimensions. First, because although opinion polls did show Americans opposed to Mondale's 1984 tax posture, the major 1980-84 changes in the presidential vote were regional, ethnic and religious; tax policy was only a collateral factor.

Second, because the economic health of the United States now demands that taxes be increased (and new revenue sources found) as part of this autumn's congressional tax-reform process. Deficit-reduction is far more important than revenue-neutral tax reform, which the public rightly dismisses as peripheral.

And finally, from the political standpoint, because the Administration is in the process of dissipating the fiscal responsibility image the Republican Party earned so painfully over so many years.

The probable consequences of failure to increase revenues can be stated easily enough: a mushrooming deficit likely to produce resurgent inflation and rising interest rates would send the country reeling back into recession. Without a tax increase, deficit reduction can't achieve meaningful scale. And if the President doesn't regard the defict as important enough for political sacrifice, why should Congress? In the meantime, several troublesome U.S. economic circumstances are being aggravated by Reagan's no-tax-increase posture.

DEFICIT DANGERS

Angry Senate Republicans now justifiably feel that their efforts to pose hard choices and make sacrifices to reduce the deficit have substantially been for nought. (The budget that Congress finally agreed to last Thursday included an alleged $55-billion deficit-reduction package—as well as a $172-billion shortfall.)

Part of the senators' concern is political. If re-emerging deficit problems start inflation and interest rates ratcheting up, it will be hard for the GOP to maintain Senate control in the 1986 elections. But the President has a stake here, too. Let deficit-reduction hopes implode, and some painful mixture of inflation, interest rates and recession could shred his Second American Revolution. His historical reputation could follow.

The irony is that just when the old GOP politics of commitment to balanced ledgers is becomming the electorate's greatest concern, the White House has eschewed what should be natural Republican leadership. The public, realistic as usual shrugs at the Administration's new tax reform preoccupation. They know the deficit is much more critical. Indeed, mid-July NBC News Poll results found the public putting virtually every other economic priority ahead of tax reform.

In a nutshell, what we need from the President is less attention to tax reform's ideological will-o'-the-wisp and more commitment to what should also be good fiscal policy and good politics: A national mobilization that uses tax overhaul in part for some new revenues and deficit reduction. Time, meanwhile, is becoming an enemy. For the last few years, we've been financing a fair part of the deficit abroad. That won't continue, though, if the dollar keeps dropping.

DOLLAR WORRIES

Since the early 1980s, a considerable percentage of the federal budget deficit has been financed by foreigners, lured by high real interest rates and steadily rising value of the dollar. Belief in the success of Reagan's political economics was also an important part of that equation.

That belief is declining now, though. The President's refusal to come to grips with the deficit is one factor. So is the possibility that the White House might try to stack the Federal Reserve Board with easy-money supporters. And so is the uncertainty about U.S. trade policy and protectionist changes that could occur.

To rebut these fears, the Reagan Administration desperately needs a coherent strategy for coping with the deficit, trade and tax situation. Until one exists, why should foreigners buy dollar-denominated U.S. bonds and other instruments that could depreciate if Reaganomics flounders?

This is not an abstract question. If we're going to have re-escalating deficits because the President won't raise taxes, then skittish overseas investors will stop funding those deficits. That, in turn, means that interest rates would rise. No one can be sure, but the case is plausible.

TAX INCREASE OPTIONS

Nobody wants a significant federal tax increase in the near future. However, if we don't have one, we'll probably suffer an equivalent or worse economic levy in the form of 1) higher interest rates needed to get Americans and foreigners alike to finance the deficit, 2) a resultant slowdown in economic activity and decline in prosperity or 3) resurgent inflation, the so-called "cruelest tax of all."

To avoid these fates, there's a growing sense in Congress, the Fed and the financial community that serious deficit reduction must entail a tax increase. Powerful Republican Senators such as Majority Leader Bob Dole of Kansas, Finance Committee Chairman Bob Packwood of Oregon and Appropriations Committee Chairman Mark O. Hatfield of Oregon have all been privately and semipublicly saying so for a while now. Last week, House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.) forecast a tax increase. And in mid-July, Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul A. Volcker said that if the deficit couldn't be brought down by reducing spending, then increased revenue would be necessary, and "a consumption tax in the long run would be a desirable way to do it."

Taxes can be increased other ways, too, of course. Rostenkowski is suggesting that if a tax-reform package can be worked out by swapping elimination of deductions for bracket reduction, then it would be easy enough to follow up with a tax increase that would raise the new tax rates a point or two. Also, Congress could tell the President it's time to start taxing imports. True, the President just rejected the Senate's idea of an oil-import tax, but, at $5 a barrel, it wouldn't have raised much money—about $9 billion a year. A broader import surcharge, by contrast, could raise a lot. The new Democratic proposal by Rostenkowski and Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen to impose a conditional 25 percent import surcharge on goods from Japan, Korea, Taiwan and Brazil could bring in about $20 billion a year, while a 20 percent across-the-board surcharge could raise roughly $75 billion.

But consumption-tax revenues would be larger still. A 10 percent value-added or national sales tax would raise about $250 billion a year. Modified to exclude food, drugs, basic housing, energy expenses and the like, it would raise about $150 billion a year. Another slightly different version, the business transfer tax (BTT), would apply to business transactions and omit the retail-level tax. Imports coming into the country would pay this levy, and the BTT's designers have also come up with a feature to make it rebateable against federal taxes. The significance: If U.S. corporations can offset their BTT payments against other federal taxes, about half of the net revenue impact—totaling $75 billion a year—would be borne by foreigners exporting into the United States. Not surprisingly, interest is growing in this kind of consumption tax, which would not only raise a lot of money for deficit reduction and tax modification, but also strike a blow at the U.S. trade imbalance.

The changing sentiment in the GOP and the business community could convince the President to shift position later this year or early next year. Almost two decades ago, as governor of California, Reagan jokingly dismissed a "my feet are in concrete" pledge not to increase taxes by telling reporters the sound they heard was cement cracking. Today's fiscal crisis is infinitely greater, and the President may find himself confronting a choice between the cement again cracking around his ankles or the economic and political floor collapsing beneath him.●

ADVANCE NOTIFICATION PROPOSED ARMS SALES

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act requires that Congress receive advance notification of proposed arms sales under that act in excess of $50 million or, in the case of major defense equipment as defined in the act, those in excess of $14 million. Upon receipt of such notification, the Congress has 30 calendar days during which the sale be reviewed. The provisions stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of proposed sales shall be sent to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Pursuant to an informal understanding, the Department of Defense has agreed to provide the committee with a preliminary notification 20 days before transmittal of the official notification. The official notification will be printed in the RECORD in accordance with previous practice.

I wish to inform Members of the Senate that such a notification has been received.

Interested Senators may inquire as to the details of this advance notification at the office of the Committee on Foreign Relations, room SD-423.

The notification follows:

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, DC, August 29, 1985.

In reply refer to I-04829/85ct.

Dr. M. GRAEME BANNERMAN,
Deputy Staff Director,
Committee on Foreign Relations,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR DR. BANNERMAN: By letter dated 18 February 1976, the Director, Defense Security Assistance Agency, indicated that you would be advised of possible transmittals to Congress of information as required by Section 36(b) of the Arms Control Act. At the instruction of the Department of State, I wish to provide the following advance notification.

The Department of State is considering an offer to a Southwest Asian country for major defense equipment tentatively estimated to cost $14 million or more.

Sincerely,

PHILIP C. GAST,
Lieutenant General, USAF, Director.

THE PLIGHT OF THE AMERICAN FARMER

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the plight of the American farmer has been in the national spotlight for many months now. There seems to be no end to declining land values and lower prices. More and more farmers are being forced into bankruptcy and off the land they love. During the congressional recess, I had the opportunity to talk to farmers across Illinois and learn firsthand about the pain they are suffering. In a weekly column I write for newspapers in my State, I have detailed our problems and what might be done by Government to ease the strain on the backbone of our country—the American farmer. I ask to have the column printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The column follows:

THE VANISHING DREAM OF THE AMERICAN FARM

America's farmers are hurting. If anyone has any doubt about that, I wish you would travel across the state with me.

Talk to the Christian County farmer, perhaps thirty years old, who with his wife stretched himself to buy a farm—their dream—and picked up a mortgage. Now it looks like it is all vanishing: their dream, their hard work.

I sense that his pride is hurt as well. One of the generally accepted beliefs in this country is that if you get out and work hard, success will follow. He did that; he and his wife worked incredibly hard. But failure is his lot.

He told me that he hates to go into town because he sees the people to whom he owes money, and he feels guilty.

"I'm not the kind of a guy who doesn't pay his bills," he commented.

"The banker's on me and I don't blame him. I'm afraid those notes I've signed for him aren't worth much unless corn and soybean prices improve."

He is bitter, and understandably so, for the problems he faces—low prices and high interest rates—were not caused by him but by his government.

Twenty-three percent of our nation's farmers are in serious financial difficulty. In some parts of Illinois it is higher than that, in some parts lower, but no farmer will tell you that agriculture is not hurting.

As I was writing this I called Dillinger's Grain Elevator near Carbondale to get current grain prices: corn $2.30, soybeans $5.03. Five year ago, corn was $3.43 and beans $8.96. If you add an inflation factor, in today's prices that would probably be about $4.00 and $10.00, respectively. If those were today's prices, farmers would not be desperate.

Adding to farm woes is the prediction that corn production will be up another 8 percent this year, and soybean production will be up 5 percent to 6 percent. In addition to that, because of the over-valued dollar, farm exports are expected to drop $10 billion more on top of the drops of last year and the year before.

It is a grim picture for farmers, for rural banks, for farm implement dealers and for the many sectors of our economy heavily dependent on agriculture. We are all going to feel it if things don't turn around.

What can the federal government do?

More important that anything else is to get the federal government's financial house in order. If we can get our deficit down, interest rates will go down and exports will go up. That would be of tremendous help to farmers.

There are some short-term, immediate steps that can also be taken, like stopping the dumping of ethanol (gasoline produced from corn) from Brazil that adds to our woes.

But the major legislative need is to produce a good, sound farm bill. My colleague, Senator Alan Dixon, understands the plight of Midwest farmers and is working on the Agriculture Committee to produce something solid, but what will emerge is not clear. A bill that shores up prices and calls for a genuine, long-range conservation program will serve the nation well.

If such a bill does not emerge, the farm situation will worsen before it improves.●

HENRY RAINEY

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, a half century ago Henry Rainey was pushing President Franklin Roosevelt's legislative package through Congress. Today, his memory has faded but his legacy lives on. In a weekly column I write for newspapers in my State, I remember Henry Rainey and his contributions both to Illinois and to the Nation. I ask to have the column printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The column follows:

AN ILLINOISIAN WHO MADE A DIFFERENCE

Who was Henry T. Rainey?

I doubt that one Illinois citizen out of a hundred recognizes his name.

Henry T. Rainey of Illinois served as Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives until his death on Aug. 19, 1934, 51 years ago.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt took a train ride from Washington, D.C., to Carrollton, Ill., to be present for the funeral. This was in the days before a president traveled by plane.

A much more famous speaker of the House from Illinois was Joe Cannon of Danville, for whom the Cannon Building on Capitol Hill in Washington is named.

But half a century ago Henry Rainey was a big name on the national scene. He succeeded John Nance Garner as Speaker when Garner became Roosevelt's vice president.

Born in Carrollton a few months before the Civil War started, he attended Knox College in Illinois, Amherst College in Massachusetts and the no-longer-existing Union College of Law in Chicago, now Northwestern University Law School.

Elected to Congress in 1902, he served 18 years and then lost an election in the Harding landslide of 1920. Two years later he was elected once again, serving until his death.

He called himself "progressive," but his opponents called him "radical." He favored things like an eight-hour day, considered by many to be a radical idea at the time.

On the national scene he was perhaps best known for his fights for a low tariff. For most Illinois citizens, his significant effort was to open up the Illinois River to freight, connecting the Great Lakes to the Mississippi River.

But for the nation as a whole, his greatest contribution was pushing through the House the significant legislative package President Roosevelt presented the nation during FDR's first 100 days in office.

In Carrollton, about 70 miles southwest of Springfield, there is a statue of Rainey.

The last time I had a chance to look at the old Rainey farm home—I am told he was very proud of it—it was gradually falling apart, unoccupied, chickens walking through the place.

A man who contributed as much as Henry T. Rainey to the nation should be remembered.

The Illinois State Historical Society or the Greene County Historical Society should investigate if there is any chance of redeeming what was once a magnificent farm home.

If that is not possible—and it may not be—there ought to be an annual Henry T. Rainey lecture in his hometown of Carrollton. Here the nation paid its final tribute to him. Here the nation could hear an annual message of significance.

He should not be forgotten.●

PROPOSED ARMS SALES

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act requires that Congress receive advance notification of proposed arms sales under that act in excess of $50 million or, in the case of major defense equipment as defined in the act, those in excess of $14 million. Upon such notification, the Congress has 30 calendar days during which the sale may be reviewed. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of proposed sales shall be sent to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

In keeping with the committee's intention to see that such information is immediately available to the full Senate, I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point the notification which has been received. The classified annex referred to in the covering letter is available to Senators in the office of the Foreign Relations Committee, room SD-423.

The notification follows:

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, DC, September 6, 1985.

Hon. RICHARD C. LUGAR,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to the reporting requirements of Section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act, we are forwarding herewith Transmittal No. 85-55 and under separate cover the classified annex thereto. This Transmittal concerns the Department of the Air Force's proposed Letter of Offer to the Federal Republic of Germany for defense articles and services estimated to cost $25 million. Shortly after this letter is delivered to your office, we plan to notify the news media of the unclassified portion of this Transmittal.

Sincerely,

PHILIP C. GAST,
Lieutenant General, USAF, Director.

TRANSMITTAL NO. 85-55—NOTICE OF PROPOSED ISSUANCE OF LETTER OF OFFER PURSUANT TO SECTION 36(b) OF THE ARMS EXPORT CONTROL ACT

(i) Prospective Purchaser: Federal Republic of Germany.

(ii) Total Estimated Value: Major Defense Equipment,[1] $22 million; Other, $3 million; Total, $25 million.

(iii) Description of Articles or Services Offered: Three hundred ten AGM-65B MAVERICK missiles, with related initial spares and support equipment.

(iv) Military Department: Air Force (YDJ).

(v) Sales Commission, Fee, etc., Paid, Offered, or Agreed to be Paid: None.

(vi) Sensitivity of Technology Contained in the Defense Articles or Defense Services Proposed to be Sold: See Annex under separate cover.

(vii) Section 28 Report: Case not included in Section 28 report.

(viii) Date Report Delivered to Congress: September 6, 1985.

---

[1] As defined in Section 47(6) of the Arms Export Control Act.

POLICY JUSTIFICATION

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY—AGM—65B MAVERICK MISSILES

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany (FRG) has requested the purchase of 310 AGM-65B MAVERICK missiles, with related initial spares and support equipment. The estimated cost is $25 million.

This sale will contribute to the foreign policy and national security objectives of the United States by improving the military capabilities of the FRG; furthering NATO rationalization, standardization, and interoperability; and enhancing the defense of the Western Alliance.

The sale is essential to the FRG as the AGM-65B MAVERICK missiles will provide the electro-optical conventional weapons delivery capability for which German Air Force F-4F aircraft have recently been modified through the Improved Armament Capability Program. The AGM-65B capability fulfills one of the inter-operability objectives between the U.S. and FRG. This is a follow-on sale. The FRG procured 450 AGM-65B missiles in 1982 and an additional 120 missiles in 1985.

The sale of this equipment and support will not affect the basic military balance in the region.

The prime contractor will be Hughes Aircraft Company of Tucson, Arizona.

Implementation of this sale will not require the assignment of any additional U.S. Government personnel or contractor representatives to the FRG.

There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.●

HITLER, SOUTH AFRICA AND "THE THIN VENEER"

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, the lessons we learned by not speaking loudly enough to protest Adolf Hitler's campaign to extinguish the Jews should provide some direction now as we struggle with our stance on South Africa and apartheid. If we need some reminders of those lessons, David Wyman's "The Abandonment of the Jews" is must reading. In a weekly column I write for newspapers in my State, I have drawn some comparisons between those two oppressive governments and the direction we can receive from Mr. Wyman's book. I ask that the column be printed in the RECORD.

The column follows:

HITLER, SOUTH AFRICA AND "THE THIN VENEER"

(By Senator Paul Simon)

A thin veneer sometimes holds civilizations together.

That thin veneer is threatened, in part, by our fears and those who appeal to fears.

An obvious example is that civilization is threatened by nuclear obliteration because we have fears of the Soviets, and they have fears of us, and each side piles up more and more nuclear weapons—far beyond the point of reason on either side. We are spending more and more on nuclear weapons, less and less to understand each other. The result is that our fears are multiplied.

But the lesson of the problems caused by those who appeal to fears was brought home to me recently by one of the most powerful books I have ever read. It is The Abandonment of the Jews by David Wyman.

It is not comforting reading for Protestants, Catholics, Jews and others, or for Americans with no affiliation.

It tells the story of the years during World War II when word gradually filtered from Germany and German-conquered territory about what was happening.

U.S. leadership, from the President on down, was nominally opposed to what Hitler was doing, but time and again when opportunities presented themselves to save thousands of Jews, the opportunities were not seized.

Sometimes Jews in the United States did not stand up because they feared they might spread the poison of anti-Semitism that Hitler encouraged, and an anti-Semitism that had penetrated into our society as well as in other nations.

Protestants and Catholics were also far too timid. The strong message of condemnation of this mass murder that you might expect came not in a torrent, but in a trickle.

As a Lutheran, I wish I could relate that Lutherans were an exception to the general rule; they were not. Nor were Catholics, Baptists, Presbyterians—and the list goes on.

Two groups did speak out forcefully: the Quakers (Friends) and the Unitarians. Even those two groups, which did much better than the others, could have done more.

Religious journals were audibly silent.

In Congress, the voices of humanity and the calls for help were few. The nation was so wrapped up in winning the war that anything else seemed secondary.

But history is not likely to judge us kindly for not opening our shores to desperate people; for not taking advantage of neutral nations that could have saved hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions; for not bombing railroad lines that led to the mass execution sites, and for not bombing those sites themselves.

What can we learn from this?

When there is injustice, in whatever form, we must speak out.

That is true in our communities; it is true in the community of nations. South Africa's situation is a clear example today, with uncomfortable parallels to the beginning of WWII policy, except for a different group being suppressed.

In our desires to reach working accommodation with the Soviet Union and other countries—and I favor getting along better with others—we should not hesitate to speak out about injustices we see. They point out our blemishes, like unemployment, as they should, and we should not hesitate to speak out about their human rights violations. And within our country and our communities, whenever we see people oppressed or criticized or held down solely on the basis of race, creed, national background or sex, we should stand up.

David Wyman's book will haunt you if you read it. We need to be haunted.●

THE NECESSITY OF PEACE CONVERSION

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, during the congressional recess, I went through a great variety of things that I had accumulated, and one of them was the testimony of a California businessman, Theodore Williams, chief executive officer of Bell Industries in California, before this State's senate committee on investment priorities.

This testimony was given a few years ago, but it seems to me just as applicable today as it was then.

We have to move off the present course which, ultimately, has to be a catastrophic course.

We must reduce the arms race; we must build a base of understanding between nations.

I ask that the testimony of Theodore Williams be inserted at this point, and I urge my colleagues to read it.

The testimony follows:

TESTIMONY OF THEODORE WILLIAMS

My name is Theodore Williams. I am President, Chairman of the Board and Chief Executive Officer of Bell Industries, a California corporation. I am a Mechanical and Industrial Engineer and have done graduate work in Business Administration. After graduation, I went into the business of manufacturing aircraft engine parts and ordnance tooling during World War II for approximately 2½ years, and then served in the Army as an ordnance officer in the South Pacific. After the war I moved to California where I became a manufacturer of aircraft hydraulic components and computer hardware. In 1968, I merged my company with Bell Industries and assumed my present position in 1970.

Bell Industries is a diversified NYSE listed company whose sales last year were $132 MM with earnings of $5 MM after taxes. We expect to exceed $150 MM in sales this year with approximately 50 percent in electronic products, 25 percent in recreational products and 25 percent in residential products. We have 1600 employees located in 28 divisions, 18 of which are in California, the balance in Oregon, Illinois, Washington, Colorado, New Mexico, Minnesota, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Utah. Since 1970, we have tripled in size and concentrated our efforts in non-defense-oriented businesses. At this point in time we have only one division that is totally defense-oriented.

We have the following objections to defense work:

(a) Too much government looking over our shoulder during the period it takes to fill the order.

(b) Always the possibility of renegotiation even if, due to our own ingenuity, we make a high profit. This is true even on fixed price sealed bid contracts.

(c) We feel more comfortable with a broader customer base, so that the loss of any one order does not have too great an impact on our overall business.

(d) It is very difficult to mix commercial and military business. The excess paperwork, manufacturing and quality control are not warranted in commercial products.

Let me direct your attention to the following points made in a recent publication of the Businessmen's Education Fund about military spending and unemployment:

"Military spending aggravates the problem of unemployment both directly and indirectly. Directly, on the average the number of jobs created by the expenditure of a given sum for defense creates fewer jobs than the same amount spent for civilian goods and/or services. The making of military hardware requires relatively far more capital than most civilian production. Indirectly, so much military spending has gone to finance research and development that a large proportion of American scientists and engineers (some estimates are over half) are engaged in military work. This has resulted in the nondefense industry of the United States falling behind in development of new or improved products. Foreign countries are getting an increased share of the American market in many fields as is easily noticeable in regard to autos, radios, TVs and cameras and less noticeable in regard to machine tools and similar products requiring high technology.

"Some of our older industries, such as steel, are suffering from obsolescence due to a shortage of capital for development of new and improved facilities.

"The U.S. balance of payments has suffered by the fact that in so many lines our products are no longer among the best in the world. This has contributed to the decline of our dollar, a decline which makes our products more attractive to foreigners while making it harder for us to pay for imports of the raw materials we need. Employment has therefore been lessened.

"Military spending does not increase employment—it generates unemployment, according to 'The Empty Pork Barrel,' a report of the Michigan Public Interest Research Group (590 Hollister Road, Lansing, Michigan, 48933). During the years 1970–1974 every time the military budget went up $1 billion, 11,600 jobs disappeared in the United States. That meant that between 1970–74 there was an annual net loss of 907,000 jobs when the military budget averaged $78 billion."

According to the Center for Defense Information, using data from the Department of Defense, Congressional Budget Office, and Bureau of Labor Statistics, about 62 percent of U.S. federal R&D spending is for military and space; only about 13 percent for energy, even though the energy crisis is one of the most important threats to our nation we have yet had to face.

A document called "More Jobs: Converting to a Peaceful, Productive Economy," distributed by several major national unions, states:

"The facts show that defense production is one of the least effective ways of creating employment. As military production has become more capital intensive and automated, the volume of employment has dropped.

In California, defense spending is at an all time high, but total aerospace employment has dropped from a 1968 high of 750,000 to approximately 440,000 today.

If just a fraction of the money now spent on the military were redirected to human and social needs, many additional new jobs could be created in the economy. Unemployment lines would shorten, and welfare and poverty rolls could be reduced."

Perhaps the greatest cost of the defense budget is the diversion of needed technology away from civilian production. For over a generation, approximately half of all scientists and engineers in the country have worked on military-related projects. As a result, the United States has the most advanced missiles and warplanes in the world, but we cannot build a decent railroad. Arms manufacturers prosper, while the heart of the industrial economy decays. A major reason for the present crisis in the steel industry, for example, is that corporations have not put sufficient funds into new equipment and technology. Our scientific talent has gone instead into the military or has been exported abroad by the multinational companies.

From my personal experience over the past 30 years, many small companies I knew and did business with have gone out of business due to discontinuance or cancellation of military subcontracts. We, in turn, have prospered due in large part to our diversification as well as minimizing our dependency on defense contracts.

I would like to now respond to the questions in your Notice of Public Hearing:

1a. Are U.S. Defense Department prime contractors overly dependent on federal military contracts?

Answer. Yes, and I would cite Lockheed, Northrop, Rockwell, Hughes, and General Dynamics as examples. The reasons are due to the fact that personnel from a defense-oriented business are more wasteful, not sufficiently cost conscious, nor geared to product simplification. They do not understand the highly competitive commercial world that does not have room for layers of bureaucracy and no one to turn to for cost overruns.

1b. If so, are defense contractors presently diversified or planning diversification of their production facilities?

Answer. The previous answer is the reason for so little diversification.

1c. Could prime contractors convert to alternative production if there is a major shift in U.S. defense policy?

Answer. It would be difficult, require much time and planning to avoid a domino effect on the subcontractors who depend on the primes.

2. Should a large, federally financed military or weapons system project be cancelled, could prime contractor employees be retrained and employed in non-defense related industry, either inside the corporation or with another corporation?

Answer. The answer is yes, but over a period of time.

3a. To what extent are U.S. Defense Department prime contracts subcontracted to small business, and are such small businesses located in or outside the State of California?

Answer. To a large extent many small plants are very dependent, both inside and outside California. There are also many suppliers of small plants that would also be affected.

3b. To what extent is small business actualy involved in the defense industry in the state?

Answer. To what extent—I don't know.

4. How will small businesses that subcontract with defense-related prime contractors be affected should there be a major shift in federal defense spending?

Answer. A great many would be destroyed due to the limited number of customers most of them have. They have limited capital, very little access to obtain capital and generally lack knowledge of commercial markets.

5. Who should be responsible for economic conversion planning in the future?

Answer. Perhaps a clearly stated government policy of gradual guaranteed reduction in military spending over a 10 to 15 year period. This coupled with an increase in spending for essential public needs such as public transportation, alternative energy sources, and low cost housing might enable the job market to adjust by itself.●

NEW BUDGET SCOREKEEPING REPORT

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I hereby submit to the Senate the first weekly budget scorekeeping report prepared by the Congressional Budget Office in response to section 5 of the first budget resolution for fiscal year 1986 which was adopted by Congress on August 1.

Section 5 of the budget resolution calls on the Director of the Congressional Budget Office to prepare a report weekly when the Senate is in session that provides up-to-date information on congressional action on bills and resolutions that affect the budget.

The report shows the current revenue, spending, and public debt levels based on completed congressional action as of this time, and compares those amounts to the levels contained in the budget resolution. The report covers fiscal year 1986, the budget year, and fiscal year 1985, the current year. Future reports will continue to provide information on fiscal year 1985 until its expiration on September 30.

This report also serves as the scorekeeping report for the purposes of section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act.

We plan to print this report in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD each week when the Senate is in session, normally on Monday, for the information of all Senators.

The staffs of the Budget Committee or the Congressional Budget Office will be pleased to answer any questions regarding the report, or to provide further details.

The report follows:

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
U.S. CONGRESS,
Washington, DC, September 9, 1985.

Hon. PETE V. DOMENICI,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The attached report shows the effects of Congressional action on the budget for fiscal years 1985 and 1986. The estimated total of budget authority, outlays, and revenues for each fiscal year are also compared to the appropriate or recommended levels contained in the most recent budget resolution, S. Con. Res. 32. This report meets the requirements for Senate scorekeeping of Section 5 of S. Con. Res. 32 and is current through September 5, 1985. The report is submitted under Section 308(b) and in aid of Section 311(b) of the Congressional Budget Act.

Since my last report on fiscal year 1985, the Congress has cleared and the President has approved the Supplemental Appropriations Bill, P.L. 99-88, thereby changing estimated budget authority and outlays. This is my first report on fiscal year 1986.

With best wishes,
Sincerely,

ERIC HANUSHEK
(For Rudolph G. Penner).

[1] The current level represents the estimated revenue and direct spending effects (budget authority and outlays) of all legislation that Congress has enacted in this or previous sessions or sent to the President for his approval. In addition, estimates are included of the direct spending effects for all entitlement or other programs requiring annual appropriations under law even though the appropriations have not been made. The current level excludes the revenue and direct spending effects of legislation that is in earlier stages of completion, such as reported from a Senate Committee or passed by the Senate. Thus, savings from reconciliation action assumed in S. Con. Res. 32 will not be included until Congress sends the legislation to the President for his approval. The current level of debt subject to limit reflects the latest U.S. Treasury information on public debt transactions.

[2] The current statutory debt limit is $1,823.8 billion.

[1] The current level represents the estimated revenue and direct spending effects (budget authority and outlays) of all legislation that Congress has enacted in this or previous sessions or sent to the President for his approval. In addition, estimates are included of the direct spending effects for all entitlement or other programs requiring annual appropriations under law even though the appropriations have not been made. The current level excludes the revenue and direct spending effects of legislation that is in earlier stages of completion, such as reported from a Senate Committee or passed by the Senate. Thus, savings from reconciliation action assumed in S. Con. Res. 32 will not be included until Congress sends the legislation to the President for his approval. The current level of debt subject to limit reflects the latest U.S. Treasury information on public debt transactions.

[2] The current statutory debt limit is $1,823.8 billion.

SMALL BUSINESS SERVICE BUREAU LEADS EXPORT PROMOTION

● Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, one of the most serious economic issues facing our nation today is our massive international trade deficit which has resulted in a loss of as many as 500,000 American manufacturing jobs since 1981. While Congress and the administration are currently engaged in addressing this crisis through a variety of policy measures, it is vitally important the private sector redouble its efforts to increase U.S. exports and become competitive in markets overseas.

In this regard, I would like to call the attention of my Senate colleagues to the successful efforts of the Small Business Service Bureau, Inc., of Worcester, MA. Through the vision and determination of Mr. Francis R. Carroll, one of the Nation's most respected small business leaders, the SBSB has led two delegations of small business owners to the People's Republic of China. As the New York Times reported today, these visits have resulted in solid contacts and increased sales abroad. I am particularly proud to note that in addition to his other endeavors, Mr. Carroll serves as a member of the Senate Small Business Committee's Advisory Council.

Mr. President, I ask that the article from the New York Times be printed with my remarks.

The article follows:

U.S. SMALL BUSINESS IS DRAWN TO CHINA: TRIPS PAY OFF IN CONTRACTS

(By John F. Burns)

PEKING, September 8.—A little more than 20 months ago, Michael A. Andreottola was out of a job, his position as an engineer and designer with Applicon, Inc. eliminated when a French company, Schlumberger, took over the American concern and transferred part of its operations to France.

Last week, Mr. Andreottola was in China as the president of his own company, the American Ink Jet Corporation of Woburn, Mass. While here, the 38-year-old executive made fresh inroads into a market that has provided his company with $80,000 of business in little more than a year. His company's total first-year revenues were about $600,000.

Since President Nixon's visit in 1972 opened the way for a resumption of trade between the United States and China, the dominant corporate players have been large multinational corporations such as the Boeing Company, the General Electric Company and the International Business Machines Corporation. The Chinese like to buy from companies that are market leaders, and big corporations are better equipped to meet the often heavy costs of building up a relationship here.

Nonetheless, entrepreneurs like Mr. Andreottola are proving that there is a niche in the Chinese market for small businesses, and not only in the arts and crafts trade that has flourished since Mr. Nixon's visit opened the door.

A READY MATCH

Mr. Andreottola, making his first visit here, found little time to see the sights. At Applicon, he specialized in the development of computer-aided plotters and the inks used with them, notably in seismology. He has built up his own business in maintaining and servicing plotters, supplying inks and consulting, which provided a ready match for Chinese companies involved in the burgeoning oil exploration here.

In a few days here and in Canton, which is close to the major explorations being conducted by Chinese and Western oil companies in the South China Sea, Mr. Andreottola met with the buyers of his inks and identified the operators of several plotters previously sold here who are potential customers of his company. Along the way he also sounded out the possibility of selling the Chinese secondhand plotters from United States companies hit by slumping oil exploration at home.

"About 90 percent of my business is seismology-oriented, and in the United States that's going down fast," Mr. Andreottola said, "Here, it's headed in the opposite direction—there's a lot of oil exploration, and a lot of seismology." He added, "I can see where I will be doing 10 to 15 percent of my business here, more or less offsetting losses in the market at home."

SENDING DELEGATIONS

Mr. Andreottola's effort to enter the Chinese market has been aided by another Massachusetts-based company, the Small Business Service Bureau Inc. Under the leadership of Francis R. Carroll, who founded the company in 1968, the Worcester-based S.B.S.B. has organized two small-business delegations to China in the past year that have produced promising links for participants.

Mr. Carroll's company has signed up 35,000 small businesses in the United States as members, and provides them with a broad range of services from management assistance to electronic mailing, access to group medical insurance and legislative lobbying.

Years ago, before the Communist takeover in Vietnam, Mr. Carroll was involved in a business that built concrete-hulled shrimp boats there. Later, he was the prime mover behind an appeal that raised $100,000 in the Worcester area for a small hospital in the Vietnamese central highlands that was dedicated to Americans who died in the war. From those experiences grew a conviction that an American company did not have to be listed in the Fortune 500 to be competitive overseas.

VISIT BY CHINESE OFFICIAL

The opening to China came when the Governor of Guangdong, one of the most populous of China's provinces, visited Massachusetts in 1983. At Mr. Carroll's invitation, the official, Liang Lingguang, spent two days looking at business and industry in the Worcester area and reciprocated by inviting Mr. Carroll to lead a small-business delegation to Guangdong. That trip, in November 1984, provided the contacts for the most recent visit.

"As the Chinese explained it to us," Mr. Carroll said, "a lot of their companies have no opportunity—and insufficient funds—to deal with I.B.M. or G.E., but they are eager for the advantages that can flow from dealing with smaller companies that provide a match for their activities." He added: "I think they realize that smaller companies are more flexible, can make their decisions more quickly and can work on smaller profit margins."

On the negative side, many small companies could be daunted by the high costs and the time involved in visiting here. But Mr. Carroll, whose company charges a basic fee of $1,000 for organizing a business executive's trip and setting up introductions, says that a first journey here can be budgeted at less than $5,000, half or less of what the same trip would cost if organized through one of the United States banks that are now offering introductions to the China market.

Another participant in the Carroll group who went away happy was Albert J. DiGregorio, president of the United Lens Company of Southbridge, Mass., who came to China wondering whether the market his father found here in the 1930's could be revived.

After a visit to an optical factory, the American concluded that the Chinese have little need for United States products. However, he was impressed by the quality and cost of the plant's silica and quartz materials, and will investigate the possibility of buying some of his own plant's supplies here. ●

50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE SOCIETY OF REAL ESTATE APPRAISERS

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to honor the 50th anniversary of the founding of the Society of Real Estate Appraisers. In so doing, I join with my distinguished colleague from Illinois, Senator ALAN DIXON, as a cosponsor of Senate Concurrent Resolution 51, a resolution to honor the golden anniversary of the society.

This organization came into being during the tumultuous period of the Great Depression. In a period of instability for the residential real estate market, real estate appraisers lent credibility during a very uncertain time. The society joined to meet this need and was incorporated in Illinois in 1935.

Today the Society of Real Estate Appraisers boast of a membership of 16,000. They are spread throughout all 50 States, the Caribbean, the Far East, Africa, and the United Kingdom. As appraisers they operate independently and perform their services for various lending and financial institutions, corporations, and all levels of government.

Each year thousands of individuals attend the educational programs sponsored by the society; as a result, the profession has continually flourished and served its communities well. I commend these progressive professionals and urge my colleagues to join me and do the same. ●

FAMINE AREAS OF AFRICA—A REPORT BY ANDREW MAIR

● Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, recently I was given a report on the famine situation in northern Africa by a fellow Coloradan, Mr. Andrew Mair. This report resulted from the deep concern of Mr. Mair for the people suffering from the extended drought in Africa which motivated him to undertake a tour of the area at his own expense. He and two friends, Mr. Ed Rau and Elmer Reed, traveled Kenya, Ethiopia, and Sudan over a 16-day period and made contact with the top officials of the major voluntary agencies responsible for assistance to the drought victims.

I ask that Mr. Mair's report be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for two reasons. The first is that it is a most encouraging chronicle of cooperation between nations in a great international effort to ease the suffering of the starving. The second is that the report represents a tangible expression of concern by three citizens who cared enough to become personally involved and to learn the situation first hand.

Mr. Mair has a wealth of experience in aid programs by the U.S. Government. During 12 years of service in the Department of Agriculture, Andy spent 4 years as Deputy Assistant Secretary for International Affairs. He also worked for the Department of State for 9 years and was Coordinator for Food-for-Peace from 1973 to 1975. On his trip he was accompanied by Attorney Ed Rau, who is a 25-year veteran of the Air Force who also served as Air Attaché in Kabul, Afghanistan. Also making the trip was Elmer Reed who is a 35-year veteran of the ASCS of the Department of Agriculture.

The most disturbing aspect of Mr. Mair's discussion of his trip with me is that the current agony of the people of northern Africa is likely to be a forerunner of a series of similar crises in the future. It is Mr. Mair's conclusion that it is not only of great importance to supply food to ease the immediate crisis, it is equally important to convince the nations of the area of the critical necessity to undertake the reforms necessary to improve the long-term food production capability. His report raises a very delicate issue of how to help the unfortunate victims and at the same time lay the foundation for fundamental reforms to avert catastrophes of this kind in the future.

I commend Andrew Mair, Ed Rau, and Elmer Reed for their humanitarian concern that prompted their trip and their efforts to inform the American people about this crisis.

The report follows:

JULY 22, 1985.

Senator WILLIAM ARMSTRONG,
528 Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR ARMSTRONG: As your office requested, I am sending you a report of my trip to the famine areas of Kenya, Ethiopia and Sudan. I and two friends and former colleagues of mine from Colorado returned July 6, 1985 from a 16-day tour of the famine areas in the above countries. In each country we contacted the top officials of the major voluntary agencies responsible for distributing the food and other assistance to the drought victims in each country. The agencies we contacted were CARE, Catholic Relief Services, World Vision, Church World Service, Save the Children, and others. We also contacted representatives of F.A.O., the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization and World Food Program.

These organizations are doing a good job under very difficult circumstances. Getting food to the drought victims in the isolated areas of Ethiopia and Sudan is all but impossible. We returned with increased appreciation for those U.S. citizens and others we met who are assisting those desperate people in the refugee camps and out in the villages in the famine area. They are risking their future health to serve their fellow men. They deserve our appreciation and support.

We were also impressed by the fine spirit of cooperation that exists between various U.S. groups and the international groups working on the same problem. It appears that this crisis is so bad that each group was concentrating on the best way to save lives with little regard for who would get the credit. On June 30 we witnessed an example of this international cooperative effort when we were privileged to travel over 500 miles over the drought area of Ethiopia in an M-I-8 Soviet helicopter piloted by a crew from the Polish Air Force and accompanied by the Polish Ambassador to Ethiopia. They were delivering food to drought victims who could not be reached by other means of transportation.

We saw C-130 cargo planes operated by the British Royal Air Force carrying 16 tons per load and dropping U.S. grain to drought victims. The Royal Air Force had four C-130's and the German Air Force had three C-130's participating in this food distribution system. The Belgians and the Swiss Air Forces were also supplying planes and/or helicopters for the system. We were told that members of the armed forces of the NATO countries had participated with members of the armed forces of eastern bloc countries in a joint project like this.

The United States is the largest contributor of food aid to Ethiopia and Sudan with over one million tons approved under the Food for Peace program for fiscal year 1985.

The time we spent in Africa plus the time we spent researching for the trip convinced us that Africa is truly a continent in crisis. I participated in a tour of the drought areas of Africa a decade ago in preparing for the World Food Conference held in Rome, Italy in November 1974. In the last decade food production per capita has dropped ten percent in Africa. There is little evidence to show food production per capita will increase in the next decade.

Leaders of most of the countries of Africa are reluctant to let the market system work. They prefer to keep prices of food low for the people in the cities and thereby providing no incentive for food producers to increase production.

The pro-communist military government that has controlled Ethiopia since Emperor Haile Selassie was executed in 1974 is anti-United States and pro-Soviet Union. The Soviets supported Ethiopia in their war with Somalia in 1977 and 1978 and the United States supported Somalia. They have not forgiven us. The present government is a centralized planned economy based on socialist principles with the Soviet Union as a model. During the past ten years Comrade Mengistu has eliminated all organized opposition to his leadership using many of the same tactics Stalin used in eliminating his competitors for power in his early days in the Soviet Union. They have nationalized many industries and attempted to collectivize their farms. As a result, production has decreased and scarcities of many commodities have developed. Military conflict between neighboring countries and between different areas within countries is the way of life for much of Africa. The conflict between the central government of Ethiopia and the people in the province of Eritrea in northern Ethiopia has been going on for the past 19 years, and there is little to indicate that conflict will be resolved anytime in the near future. People are being killed and property destroyed.

Sudan is providing for one-and-one-half million refugees from Ethiopia, Chad and Uganda. You asked for our recommendations for future actions. We believe the Christian and moral thing to do is to share our abundance with the victims of the drought to the maximum extent possible. There is little doubt that this is the most severe drought to hit parts of Ethiopia and Sudan in this century. The Food and Peace program, or Public Law 480 as it is known to the Congress, was designed for emergencies such as this. The U.S. Department of Agriculture has adequate supplies of grain for this purpose.

The private sector should be encouraged to continue its efforts to assist in the area.

Food aid should not be continued indefinitely. The leaders responsible for government action must be made to realize the United States is not going to continue to feed their people. If requested, we can provide technical assistance on how to improve their food production, but individual countries must take corrective actions to bring about change in their own countries.

I was encouraged by the success of "Live Aid" organized by Bob Geldof. Reports indicate that over $50 million will be provided for assistance to Africa by the entertainment community in that one-day activity. I would encourage you to do what you can to promote the following:

1. Encourage a maximum amount of assistance in food aid and medicine be given from both government and private sources.

2. Encourage your colleagues in the Senate to take whatever actions they can to bring about an increase in food production in Africa. If corrective action is not taken, we will see the present crisis developing again in the years ahead.

I hope you will find this report useful. If I can be of further assistance to you, please let me know.

Sincerely,

ANDREW J. MAIR,
Consultant on World Hunger.

VISITOR TO ETHIOPIA SEES FAMINE RELIEF EFFORT FIRSTHAND

(By Andrew J. Mair)

If a Westerner arrives at the airport in Addis Ababa, the capital of Ethiopia, and takes the major thoroughfare into the city, he will be surprised to see giant signs displaying the communist hammer and sickle. As you move into the city and approach Independence Square you will see 30-foot pictures of Marx, Engels, and Lenin, the patron saints of the Communist Party. You also see many large pictures of a man in his early 40s with a neatly trimmed mustache and penetrating dark eyes. This is the current strongman of Ethiopia. His name is Mengistu Haile Mariam. His full title is Chairman of the Council of Ministries and the Commission for the Organization of the Party of the Working People of Ethiopia; Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces, Head of State. His full title is used whenever he is quoted in the Ethiopian newspapers.

Ethiopia has an area of 472,000 square miles—about the size of Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico combined. The country has a high central plateau that varies from 6,000 to 10,000 feet above sea level, with some mountains reaching 15,000 feet.
